Atterbury.

ASCI. n. s. It has no singular. [from α, without, and σκια, a shadow.] Those people who, at certain times of the year, have no shadow at noon; such are the inhabitants of the torrid zone, because they have the sun twice a-year vertical to them.

Diet.

ASCI'TES. n. s. [from ᾰσκη, a bladder.] A particular species of dropsy; a swelling of the lower belly and depending parts, from an extravasation and collection of water broke out of its proper vessels. This case, when certain and inveterate, is universally allowed to admit of no cure but by means of the manual operation of tapping.

Quincy.

There are two kinds of dropsy, the anasarca, called also leucophlegmy, when the extravasated matter swims in the cells of the membrane adiposa; and the ascites, when the water possesses the cavity of the abdomen.

Sharp, Surgery.

ASCI'TICAL.* adj. [from ascites.] Belonging to an ascites; dropsical; hydropical.

When it is p. of another tumour, it is hydropical, either anasarcous or

Wiseman, Surgery.

ASCITI'TIOUS. adj. [ascititius, Lat.] Supplemental; additional; not inherent; ~~not original~~.

Homer has been reckoned an ascitious name, from some accident of his life.

Pope.

ASCRIBABLE. adj. [from ascribe.] That which may be ascribed.

The greater part have been forward to reject it, upon a mistaken persuasion, that those phenomena are the effects of nature's abhorreny of a vacuum, which seem to be more fitly ascribable to the weight and spring of the air.

Boyle.

To ASCRIBE. v. a. [ascribo, Lat.]

1. To attribute to as a cause.

The cause of his banishment is unknown, because he was unwilling to provoke the emperor, by ascribing it to any other reason than what was pretended.

Dryden.

To this we may justly ascribe those jealousies, and encroachments, which render mankind uneasy to one another.

Rogers.

2. To attribute as a quality to persons, or accident to substance.

These perfections must be somewhere, and therefore may much better be ascribed to God, in whom we suppose all other perfections to meet, than to any thing else.

ASCRIP'TION.† n. s. [ascriptio, Lat.] The act of ascribing.

By this description his [Anaxagoras's] mens must needs be God. Yea, and so is it likewise by his ascription too. For he ascribeth unto this mens the very making of the world.

Fotherby, Theomastix, p. 231.

Though the heathen templed and adored this drunken god, [Bacchus,] yet one would take their ascriptions to him to be matter of dishonour and mocks; as, his troop of mad women; his chariot drawn with the lynx and tiger.

Although a woman, praised for her complexion, be bound in modesty to gainsay those praises; yet if the fire have given her a good colour, it is not thought p. to refrain contradicting, because the effect being natural to the fire, and requiring no excellent predispositon in the object, to refer those ascriptions to their cause, is held to justify the not rejecting them.

Boyle against Custom, Swearing, p. 78.

ASCRIP'TIOUS.† adj. [ascriptitius, Lat.] That which is ascribed.

Diet.

An ascriptitious and supernumerary god.

Farindon, Sermon.

ASH.† n. s. [fraxinus, Lat. æpe, Saxon.]

1. A tree.

This tree hath pennated leaves, which end in an odd lobe. The male flowers, which grow at a remote distance from the fruit, have no petals, but consist of many stamina. The ovary becomes a seed vessel, containing one seed at the bottom, shaped like a bird's tongue.

Miller.

The mountain-ash, so called, is a nursery tree or shrub, with pennated leaves, yielding clustered red berries.

With which of old he charm'd the savage train,
And call'd the mountain ashes to the plain.

Dryden.

2. The wood of the ash.

Let me twine

Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scar'd the moon with splinters.

Shakspeare, Coriolanus

To ASHA'ME.* v. a. [See To SHAME.] To make ashamed, which Mr. Boucher considers as a Scottish verb, though he admits that "to shame a man" is not thought bad English. Indeed it is used by one of our best writers, and is found in one of our oldest dictionaries, (though Dr. Johnson has noticed neither circumstance,) meaning "to defame one to his utter reproach," i. e. to make him ashamed.

Hulot.

It should humble, ashame, and grieve us.

Barrow's Works, iii. 417.

ASHAMED. adj. [from shame.] Touched with shame; generally with of before the cause of shame if a noun, and to if a verb.

Profess publicly the doctrine of Jesus Christ, not being ashamed of the word of God, or of any practices enjoined by it.

Taylor, Holy Living.

One would have thought she would have stir'd; but strove With modesty, and was asham'd to move.

Dryden.

This I have shadowed, that you may not be ashamed of that hero, whose protection you undertake.

Dryden.

ASHAMEDLY.* adv. [from ashamed.] Bashfully.

Huloet.

ASH-COLOURED. adj. [from ash and colour.] Coloured between brown and grey, like the bark of an ashen branch.

Clay, ash-coloured, was part of a stratum which lay above the strata of stone.

Woodward on Fossils.

ASHELF.* adv. [On a shelf, or rock. See SHELF.]

A naval expression, though unnoticed by any person, as far as my observation has extended; yet a word not to be dismissed from the language of a naval people.

Why have you done that which I dare not speak,
And in the action chang'd the humble shape
Of my obedience to rebellious rage
And insolent pride; and with shut eyes constrain'd me
To run my bark of honour on a shelf,
I must not see, nor, if I saw it, shun it?

Massinger, Unnatural Combat.

I will declare and make plaine unto you by a familiar similitude, that we jut not any more and run ashelf on such idolatry and very manifest sorcery.

Harrar, Transl. of Beza's Serms, p. 231.

ASHEN. adj. [from ash.] Made of ash wood.

At once he said, and threw

His ashen spear; which quiver'd as it flew.

Dryden.

ASHFIRE.* n. s. [from ash and fire.] The subdued or low fire used in chymical operations.

ASHFLY.* n. s. [from ash and fly.] The ash-fly is called by some, the oak-fly. The head is of an ash-colour: it is seen on the body of ash-trees, oaks, willows, and thorns, growing near the water, in March, April, May, and June, with its head downwards.

Complete Angler.

ASHES.† n. s. [Goth. atzo, azgo, dust, Sax. ascan, Dutch asche.] Dr. Johnson says, the word wants the singular. But it is common, in the singular, in the North of England; and we say, in colloquial language, "burnt to an ash." So likewise in the compound ash-tub, and in others (like it) forgotten or little used, as ash-hole.

1. The remains of any thing burnt.

Some relics would be left of it, as when ashes remain of burned bodies.

Digby on Bodies.

This late dissension, grown between the peers,
Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,

And will at last break out into a flame.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Ashes contain a very fertile salt, and are the best manure for cold lands, if kept dry, that the rain doth not wash away their salt.

Mortimer, Husband.

2. The remains of the body; often used in poetry for the carcase, from the ancient practice of burning the dead.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!

Shakespeare.

To great Laertes I bequeath

A task of grief, his ornaments of death;

Lest, when the fates his royal ashes claim,

The Grecian matrons taint my spotless name.

Pope.

ASHLAR. n. s. [with masons.] Free stones as they come out of the quarry, of different lengths, breadths, and thickniesses.

ASHLEIGH. n. s. [with builders.] Quartering in garrets, about two foot and a half or three foot high, perpendicular to the floor, and reaching to the underside of the rafters.

Builder's Dict.

ASHORE. adv. [from a and shore.]

1. On shore; on the land.

The poor Englishman riding in the road, having all that he brought thither ashore, would have been undone.

Raleigh.

2. To the shore; to the land.

We may as bootless spend our vain command,

As send our precepts to the Leviathan

To come ashore.

Shakespeare, Hen. F.

May thy billows rowl ashore

The beryl, and the golden ore.

Milton, Comus.

Moor'd in a Chian creek, ashore I went,

And all the following night in Chios spent.

Addison, Ovid.

ASHTUB.* n. s. [from ash and tub.] A tub to receive ashes.

Or though thou choose an ash-tub for thy bed.

Quarles Feast for Worms, p. 40.

ASHWEDNESDAY. n. s. The first day of Lent, so called from the ancient custom of sprinkling ashes on the head.

ASHWEED. n. s. [from ash and weed.] An herb.

ASHY.† adj. [from ash.]

1. Ash-coloured; pale; inclining to a whitish grey.

Oft have I seen a timely parted ghost

Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless.

Shakespeare.

2. Turned into ashes.

That self-begotten bird

In the Arabian woods embost,

That no second knows nor third,

And lay ere while a holocaust,

From out her ashy womb now teen'd,

Revives, reflowerishes, then vigorous most,

When most unactive deem'd.

Milton, S. A. v. 1703.

ASHY-PALE.* adj. Pale as ashes.

Still is he sullen, still he low'rs and frets,

'Twixt crimson shame and anger, ashy-pale!

Shakespeare, Ven. and Adonis.

ASIAN.* adj. Relating to Asia.

Their lordships may object

Our not denying the same late request

Unto the Asian cities.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

Ignatius, taking his last leave of the Asian churches, as he went to martyrdom, exhorted them to adhere close to the written doctrine of the apostles.

Milton of Reform, in Eng. b. c.

ASIATICK.* adj. Respecting Asia.

Queen Berenice, and her train of women, among whom, no doubt, all the Roman and Asiatick fashion of improved beauty did appear.

Bp. Taylor, Art of Handicrafts, p. 82.

When peace, ease, and plenty took away these whetstones of courage and emulation, they insensibly slid into the Asiatick softness, and were intent upon nothing but their cooks, and their ragouts, their fine attendants, and unusual habits.

South, Sermon, iv. 73.

ASIATICK.* n. s. A native or inhabitant of Asia.

Such are the fanatick dogmata of the Alcoran, credited by most Asiaticks.

Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 330.

ASIATICISM.* n. s. Imitation of the Asiatick manner or custom.

Nor is this fantastick imagery the only mark of asiaticism, which appears in the Runick odes.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet., i. Diss. 1.

ASIDE. adv. [from a and side.]

1. To one side; out of the perpendicular direction.

ASK

The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast;
The flames were blown aside, yet shone they bright,
Fann'd by the wind, and gave a ruffled light. Dryden.

2. To another part; out of the true direction.

He had no brother; which though it be a comfortable thing for kings to have, yet it draweth the subjects eyes a little aside.
Bacon.

3. From the company; as, to speak aside.

He took him aside from the multitude. Mark, vii. 33.

ASINARIY. adj. [asinarius, Lat.] Belonging to an ass.
Dict.

ASININE. † adj. [Fr. asinin, from asinus, Lat.] Belonging to an ass.

You shall have more ado to drive out the dullest and laziest youth, our stocks and stubs, from the infinite desire of such a happy nurture, than we have now to hale and drag our choicest and hopefullest wits to that asinine feast of sow-thistles and brambles. Milton on Education.

This one act

Of his, to let his wife out to be courted,
And at a price, proclaims his asinine nature
So loud, as I am weary of my title to him.

B. Jonson, Devil's an Ass. i. 6.

They petitioned his majesty, in most lowly manner, to commiserate their asinine miseries, if not to conclude and end them.

Trans. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 212.

To ASK. v. a. [ajcian, Saxon.]

1. To petition; to beg: sometimes with an accusative only; sometimes with for.

When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakspeare.

We have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already: yet will ask,
That, if we fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness. Shakspeare.

In long journeys, ask your master leave to give ale to the horses. Swift.

2. To demand; to claim: as, to ask a price for goods.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me: but give me the damsel to wife. Genesis, xxxiv. 12.

He saw his friends, who, whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves.
Dryden, Æneid.

3. To question.

O inhabitant of Aroer, stand by the way and espy, ask him that flieth, and her that escapeth, and say, what is done?
Jeremiah, xlviii. 19.

4. To enquire; with after before the thing.

He said, wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name?
And he blessed him there. Genesis, xxxii. 29.

5. To require, as physically necessary.

As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all sail; so to take it in and contract it, is no less praise when the argument doth ask it. B. Jonson.

A lump of ore in the bottom of a mine will be stirred by two men's strength; which, if you bring it to the top of the earth, will ask six men to stir it. Bacon.

The administration passes into different hands at the end of two months, which contributes to dispatch: but any exigence of state asks a much longer time to conduct any design to its maturity. Addison.

To ASK. v. n.

1. To petition; to beg: with for before the thing.

My son, hast thou sinned? do so no more, but ask pardon for thy former sins. Eccles. xxi. 1.

If he ask for bread, will he give him a stone? Matt. vii. 9.

2. To make enquiry; with for or of before the thing.

To enquire.
Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. Jerem. vi. 16.

For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there bath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it. Deut. iv. 32.

ASK, ASH, As, do all come from the Saxon ærc, an ash tree. Gibson's Camden.

ASK.* n. s. See ASKER, a water newt.

ASKA'NCE. † } adv. [Dutch, schuin. See SQUINT.

ASKA'UNCE. } Mr. Tooke considers it a participle, aschained, aschuins; citing the Dutch verb schuinen,
to cut awry, as well as the obvious derivation of squint. Our old dictionaries define askance to be asquint; and the best illustration of this word, which can be adduced, is Milton's usage of it,
where he describes Satan turning aside from a view
which he could not steadily behold.] Sideways;

obliquely.
Zeluzang, keeping a countenance askance, as she understood him not, told him, it became her evil. Sidney.

His wannish eyes upon them bent askance,
And when he saw their labours well succeed,
He wept for rage, and threaten'd dire mischance. Fairfax.

Some say, he bid his angels turn askance
The poles of earth, twice ten degrees, and more,
From the sun's axle; they with labour push'd
Oblique the centrick globe. Milton.

Aside the devil turn'd
For envy, yet with jealous leer malign
Ey'd them askance, and to himself thus plain'd.

ASKA'UNT. adv. Obliquely; on one side.

At this Achilles roll'd his furious eyes,
Fix'd on the king askant; and thus replies,
O, impudent. Dryden, Iliad, b. 1.

Since the space, that lies on either side
The solar orb, is without limits wide,
Grant that the sun had happen'd to prefer
A seat askant, but one diameter:
Lost to the light by that unhappy place,
This globe had laid a frozen lonesome mass. Blackmore.

ASKER. n. s. [from ask.]

1. Petitioner.

Have you
Ere now denied the asker? and, now again
On him that did not ask, but mock, bestow. Shakspeare, Corio.
The greatness of the asker, and the smallness of the thing asked, had been sufficient to enforce his request. South.

2. Enquirer.

Every asker being satisfied, we may conclude, that all their conceptions of being in a place are the same. Digby of Bodies.

ASKER. † n. s. [Written and pronounced also ask, as well as asker, in our northern countries. Mr.
Boucher considers the word of Celtic origin;
Dr. Jamieson refers it to the Sax. asex, Germ.
cider.] A water newt.

ASK'EW. † adv. [from a and skew, Dr. Johnson says; yet, in his dictionary, we seek in vain for skew; but he means skue. Goth. skū, partic. disjunct. skew, oblique. V. Serenius, Swed. Dict.
Mr. Tooke refers to the Danish skiev, crooked.
Barret, in his old dictionary, defines the word,
"to cast a wanton eye upon one; to look askew."] ]

1. Aside; with contempt, or envy.

For when ye mildly look with lovely hue,
Then is my soul with life and love inspir'd:
But when ye lowre, or look on me askew,
Then do I die. Spenser, Sonn. 7.

He looked askew upon him, as one he envied or hated.
Bp. Patrick on 1 Sam. xviii. 9.

Then take it, Sir, as it was writ,
Nor look askew at what it saith;
• There's no petition in it. Prior.

2. Obliquely; out of the regular way.

All things are now discovered to proceed askew, the round world and all. Gayton, Notes on D. Quixote, p. 39.

To ASLA'KE.† v. a. [Sax. aplacian.] To remit; to mitigate; to slacken. Obsolete.

But this continual, cruel, civil war,
No skill can stint, nor reason can aslake. Spenser.

Whilst seeking to aslake thy raging fire,
Thou in me kindest much more great desire. Spenser.

Liberty of speaking — is but a slender revenge for so great a wrong as ill government; yet such as, by giving vent to the boiling fumes of hatred, doth evaporate and aslake that heat, which otherwise would flame out into fire and mischief.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

ASLA'NT. adv. [from a and slant.] Obliquely; on one side; not perpendicularly.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shews his hoar leaves in the glassy stream.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

He fell; the shaft
Drove through his neck aslant; he spurns the ground,
And the soul issues through the weapon's wound. Dryden.

ASLE'EP.† adv. [On sleep. Sax. aplaþen.]

1. Sleeping; at rest.
How many thousands of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep? O gentle sleep, Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee! Shakespeare.

The diligence of trade, and noiseful gain,
And luxury more late asleep were laid;
All was the night's, and, in her silent reign,
No sound the rest of nature did invade. Dryden.

There is no difference between a person asleep, and in an apoplexy, but that the one can be awaked, and the other cannot. Arbuthnot on Duct.

2. To sleep.
If a man watch too long, it is odds but he will fall asleep.
Bacon, Ess.

Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep. Milton.

3. It is used figuratively for the dead.
The earth shall restore those that are asleep in her.
2 Esdras, vii. 32.

I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope. 1 Thess. iv. 13.

ASLO'PE.† adv. [from a and slope, Dr. Johnson says; but of slope, he tells us, no satisfactory original is found; though he thinks the original may be latent in loopen, Dutch, to run; slope being easy to the runner. It is rather to be referred, with the adverb before us, to the Sax. aplupan, to slide, to slip away.] With declivity; obliquely;
not perpendicularly.

Set them not upright, but aslope, a reasonable depth under the ground. Bacon.

The curse aslope
Glanc'd on the ground; with labour I must earn
My bread: what harm? Idleness had been worse:
My labour will sustain me. Milton.

The knight did stoop
And sate on further side aslope. Hudibras.

ASLU'G.* adv. [from a and slug.] In a heavy, sluggish manner. An unusual word.

[He] drags on muddy shore his boat,
That comes aslug against the stream.

Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 338.

ASO'MATOUS. adj. [from a priv. and σῶμα, a body.]
Incorporeal, or without a body.

ASP. } n. s. [aspis, Lat.] A kind of serpent, A'SRICK. } whose poison kills without a possibility of applying any remedy. It is said to be very small, and peculiar to Egypt and Lybia. Those that are bitten by it, die within three hours; and the manner of their dying being by sleep without any pain, Cleopatra chose it. Calmet.

High-minded Cleopatra, that with stroke
Of aspæ sting herself did kill. Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 50.
Scorpion, and asp, and amphibiaena dire,

ASP. n. s. A tree. See ASPEN.

ASPALATHUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A plant called the rose of Jerusalem, or our lady's rose.

2. The wood of a prickly tree, heavy, oleaginous, somewhat sharp and bitter to the taste. Aspalathus affords an oil of admirable scent, reputed one of the best perfumes. Chambers.

I gave a sweet smell like cinnamon and aspalathus, and I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh. Eccles. xxiv.

ASPA'RAGUS.† n. s. [Gr. ἀσπράγος, Lat. asparagus,
Fr. asparage. Formerly called sparagr, and now corruptly sparagrass.] The name of a plant. It has a rosaceous flower of six leaves, placed orbicularly, out of whose centre rises the pointal, which turns to a soft globular berry, full of hard seeds. Miller.

Asparagus affects the urine with a fetid smell, especially if cut when they are white; and therefore have been suspected by some physicians, as not friendly to the kidneys: when they are older, and begin to ramify, they lose this quality; but then they are not so agreeable. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'SPECT. n. s. [aspectus, Lat. It appears anciently to have been pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, which is now placed on the first.]

1. Look; air; appearance.
I have presented the tongue under a double aspect, such as may justify the definition, that it is the best and worst part.
Governant of the Tongue.

They are in my judgement, the image or picture of a great ruin, and have the true aspect of a world lying in its rubbish. Burnet's Theory.

2. Countenance; look.
Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,
Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

I am fearful: wherefore frowns he thus? Shakespeare.
'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well.

Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,
But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden.

Then shall thy Crages (and let me call him mine)
On the east ore another Pollio shine;
With aspect open shall erect his head. Pope.

3. Glance; view; act of beholding.
Fairer than fairest, in his faining eye,
Whose sole aspect he counts felicity. Spenser.
When an envious or an amorous aspect doth infect the spirits of another, there is joined both affection and imagination.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Direction towards any point; view; position.
The setting sun
Slowly descended; and with right aspect
Against the eastern gate of paradise,
Levell'd his evening rays. Milton, P. I.

I have built a strong wall, faced to the south aspect with brick. Swift.

5. Disposition of any thing to something else;
relation.
The light got from the opposite arguments of men of parts, shewing the different sides of things, and their various aspects and probabilities, would be quite lost, if every one were obliged to say after the speaker. Locke.

6. Disposition of a planet to other planets.
There's some ill planet reigns,
I must be patient till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
Not unlike that which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other. Wotton.

A S P

To the blank moon

Her office they prescrib'd : to th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite. Milton, P. L.
Why does not every single star shed a separate influence, and have aspects with other stars of their own constellation?
Bentley, Serm.

To ASPE'CT. v. a. [aspicio, Lat.] To behold: not used.

Happy in their mistake, those people whom
The northern pole aspects; whom fear of death
(The greatest of all human fears) ne'er moves. Temple.

ASPE'CTABLE. adj. [aspectabilis, Lat.] Visible; being the object of sight.

He was the sole cause of this aspectable and perceivable universal. Raleigh.

To this use of informing us what is in this aspectable world, we shall find the eye well fitted. Ray on the Creation.

ASPECTED. * adj. [from aspect.] Having an aspect.

A contracted, subtle, and intricate face, full of quirks and turnings, a labyrinthean face, now angularly, now circularly, every way aspected. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

ASPE'CTION. n. s. [from aspect.] Beholding; view.

A Moorish queen, upon aspection of the picture of Andromeda, conceived and brought forth a fair one. Brown.

ASPEN, or ASP. † n. s. [aspe, Dutch; asp, Dan.

ærpe, ærpen, Sax.] See POPLAR, of which it is a species. The leaves of this tree always tremble.

The aspen or asp tree hath leaves much the same with the poplar, only much smaller, and not so white. Mortimer.

The builder oak, sole king of forests all,
The aspen, good for staves, the yew for funeral. Spenser.

ASPEN. † adj. [from asp or aspen.]

1. Belonging to the asp tree.

Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble like aspen leaves upon a lute. Shakspeare.

No gale disturbs the trees,
Nor aspen leaves confess the gentlest breeze. Gay.

2. Made of aspen wood.

3. Resembling an asp tree.

Poore aspen wretch, neglected thou,
Bath'd in cold quicksilver sweat wilt lie,
A verier ghost than I. Donne, Poems, The Apparition.

ASPER. * n. s. A small Turkish silver coin; of less value than our penny.

One, that not long since was the buckram scribe,
That would run on men's errands for an asper.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Spanish Curate.

They will not abate one asper of the thousand dollars per month. Ricaut's Greek Church, p. 245.

ASPER. † adj. [Lat.] Rough; rugged. This word I have found only in Bacon, Dr. Johnson says; but it is found repeatedly in Chaucer, and occurs also in a later writer, written like the Fr.

adjective, aspre.

What dure and aspre strokes I have seen them give and receive to-day. Hist. of Oliver of Castill, ch. vi.

All base notes, or very treble notes, give an asper sound;
for that the base striketh more air than it can well strike equally. Bacon.

ASPERLY, * or ASPRELY. adv. [from the adj. Fr.
also asprement.] Roughly; sharply. • Not now in use.

Swimming unto the ships, [they] enforced their enemies to strike on land, and there assaulted them so asprely, that the captain of the Romans might easily take them.

Sir T. Eliot's Gov. fol. 56. b.

To ASPERATE. v. a. [aspero, Lat.] To roughen;
to make rough or uneven.

Those corpuscles of colour, insinuating themselves into all the pores of the body to be dyed, may asperate its superficies, according to the higness and texture of the corpuscles. Boyle.

from the ION. n. s. [from asperate.] A making rough.

Dict.

A S P

ASPERGO'IRE. * n. s. [Fr. aspersoir.] An holy-water-sprinkle.

For the chapel they received two cruets of silver gilt, weighing nine ounces; an holy-water-stop and aspergoire of silver parcel-gilt, weighing more than eighteen ounces.

Warton's Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 129.

ASPERIFO'LIOS. adj. [from asper, rough, and folium, a leaf, Lat.] One of the divisions of plants, so called from the roughness of their leaves.

ASPE'RITY. † n. s. [asperitas, Lat. asperité, Fr.]

1. Unevenness; roughness of surface.

Sometimes the pores and asperities of dry bodies are so in-commensurate to the particles of the liquor, that they glide over the surface. Boyle.

2. Roughness of sound; harshness of pronunciation.

We cannot suppose that he is entirely free from those dissonances and asperities, which still adhered to the general character and state of our diction.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 62.

3. Roughness, or ruggedness of temper; moroseness;
sourness; crabbedness.

The charity of the one, like kindly exhalations, will descend in showers of blessings; but the rigour and asperity of the other, in a severe doom upon ourselves. Govern. Tongue.

Avoid all unseemliness and asperity of carriage; do nothing that may argue a peevish or froward spirit. Rogers.

4. Sharpness.

The asperity of tartarous salts, and the fiery acrimony of alkaline salts, irritating and wounding the nerves, produce nascent passions and anxieties in the soul.

Bp. Berkeley's Siris, § 86.

ASPERNA'TION. n. s. [aspernatio, Lat.] Neglect; disregard. Dict.

ASPEROUS. † adj. [asper, Lat.] Rough; uneven.

Black and white are the most asperous and unequal of colours; so like, that it is hard to distinguish them: black is the most rough. Boyle.

They [cells of hermits] are all built in the rocks, and have a craggy and asperous ascent to them.

Ricaut's Greek Church, p. 243.

To ASPERSE. † v. a. [aspergo, Lat.] Mentioned by Heylin as a new word, in 1656.]

1. To bespatter with censure or calumny.

In the business of Ireland, besides the opportunity to asperse
the king, they were safe enough. Clarendon.

Curb that impetuous tongue, nor rashly vain,
And singly mad, asperae the sov'reign reign. Pope.

Unjustly poets we asperse,
Truth shines the brighter clad in verse. Swift.

2. Simply, to cast upon.

Your scorn

Makes me appear more abject to myself,

Than all diseases I have tasted yet

Had power to asperse upon me.

Heywood's Challenge for Beauty.

ASPE'NSER. * n. s. [from asperse.] He who asperses or vilifies another.

ASPE'NSION. † n. s. [aspersio, Lat. aspersion, Fr.]

1. A sprinkling.

If thou dost break her virgin knot, before
All sanctimonious ceremonies,
No sweet aspersions shall the heav'ns let fall,
To make this contract grow.

Shakspeare.

It exhibits a mixture of new conceits and old; whereas the instauration gives the new unmixed, otherwise than with some little aspersion of the old, for taste's sake. Bacon.

2. Calumny; censure.

Not casting any aspersion on their religion, but ready to maintain my own. Bp. Hall, Specialties in his Life.

The same aspersions of the king, and the same grounds of a rebellion. Dryden.

ASPHA'LICK. adj. [from asphaltos.] Gummy; bituminous.

And with asphaltick slime, broad as the gate,
Deep to the roots of hell the gather'd beach
They fasten'd. Milton, P. L. x. 298.
ASPHALTOS. † n. s. [ἄσφαλτος, bitumen.] A solid, brittle, black, bituminous, inflammable substance, resembling pitch, and chiefly found swimming on the surface of the Lacus Asphaltites, or Dead Sea, where anciently stood the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. It is cast up in the nature of liquid pitch, from the bottom of this sea; and, being thrown upon the water, swims like other fat bodies, and condenses gradually.

* Many a row
Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. Milton, P. L. B. 1.
ASPHALTUM. n. s. [Lat.] A bituminous stone found near the ancient Babylon, and lately in the province of Neuchâtel; which, mixed with other matters, makes an excellent cement, incorruptible by air, and impenetrable by water; supposed to be the mortar so much celebrated among the ancients, with which the walls of Babylon were laid.

Chambers.
ASPHODEL. n. s. [lilio-asphodelus, Lat.] Day-lily.
Asphodels were by the ancients planted near burying-places, in order to supply the manes of the dead with nourishment.

By those happy souls who dwell
In yellow meads of asphodel. Pope.

ASPICK. † n. s. [See ASP.]
1. The name of a serpent.

Why did I scape th' invenom'd aspick's rage,
And all the fiery monsters of the desert,
To see this day? Addison.

2. The name of a piece of ordnance, which is said to carry a twelve-pound shot; adopted from the ser-pent's name, like basilisk, another piece of ordnance; ancient pieces of artillery being often denominated culverins and serpentes, and the like, from the circumstance of these animals being sculptured on them.

ASPIRANT.* n. s. [Fr.] A candidate.
I require then in our young aspirant to the name and honours of an English senator, that his mind be early and thoroughly seasoned with the principles of virtue and religion. Hurd.

To ASPIRATE. † v. a. [aspiro, Lat.] To pronounce with aspiration, or full breath; as we aspirate horse, house, and hog.

Evia, saith Clemens, if it be aspirated Evia, signifies, in the Hebrew tongue, a female serpent: where the good man calls the Chaldee tongue, the Hebrew; for in the Hebrew I do not find such a word for a serpent. Lightfoot's Miscell. p. 160.

To ASPIRATE. v. n. [aspiro, Lat.] To be pronounced with full breath.

Where a vowel ends a word, the next begins either with a consonant, or what is its equivalent; for our w and h aspirate.
Dryden.

ASPIRATE. adj. [aspiratus, Lat.] Pronounced with full breath.

For their being pervious, you may call them, if you please, perspirate; but yet they are not aspirate, i. e. with such an aspiration as h. Holder.

ASPIRATE.* n. s. The mark to denote an aspirated pronunciation.

We must correct then twenty authors who have it in the compound ἀσπρίσις and ἀσπρίσμα; and not, as the aspirate would require it, ἀσπρίσι and ἀσπρίσμα. Bentley to Dr. Mead.

ASPIRA'TION. n. s. [aspiratio, Lat.]

1. A breathing after; an ardent wish: used generally of a wish for spiritual blessings.

A soul inspired with the warmest aspirations after celestial beatitude, keeps its powers attentive. Hall.
2. The act of aspiring, or desiring something high and great.

'Tis he; I ken the manner of his gate;
He rises on his toe; that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth. Shakspeare.

3. The pronunciation of a vowel with full breath.
H is only a guttural aspiration, i. e. a more forcible impulse of the breath from the lungs. Holder.

To ASPIRE. v. n. [aspiro, Lat.]

1. To desire with eagerness; to pant after something higher: sometimes with the particle to.

Most excellent lady, no expectation in others, nor hope in himself, could aspire to a higher mark, than to be thought worthy to be praised by you. Sidney.

His father's grave counsellors, by whose means he had aspired to the kingdom, he cruelly tortured. Knolles.

Hence springs that universal strong desire,
Which all men have of immortality:

Not some few spirits unto this thought aspire,
But all men's minds in this united be. Davies.

Horace did n'er aspire to epic bays:
Nor lofty Maro stoop to lyric lays. Roscommon.

Till then a helpless, hopeless, homely swain;
Fought not freedom, nor aspir'd to gain. Dryden.

Aspiring to be gods, if angels fell,
Aspiring to be angels, men rebel. Pope.

Sometimes with after.
Those are raised above sense, and aspire after immortality, who believe the perpetual duration of their souls. Tillotson.

There is none of us but who would be thought, throughout the whole course of his life, to aspire after immortality.
Atterbury.

3 To rise; to tower.
There is betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes and our rain,

More pangs and fears than war or women have. Shakspeare.

My own breath still foment the fire,
Which flames as high as fancy can aspire, Waller.

To ASPIRE.* v. a. To aspire to.
Who dare aspire this journey with a stain,
Hath weight will force him headlong back again.

Donne's Poems, p. 184.
That gallant spirit hath aspired the clouds,
Shakspeare, Rom. and Juliet.

ASPIREMENT.* n. s. [from aspire.] The act of aspiring.
The only means [light] by which each mortal eye
Sends messengers to the wide firmament;
That to the longing soul brings presently
High contemplation and deep wonderment:
By which aspiement she her wings displays.

Brewer's Lingua, 3. 6.
ASPIRER.* n. s. [from aspire.] One that ambitiously strives to be greater than he is.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God; and on his throne,
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer: but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.

I find not that he did put up for advancement, during Henry the Eighth's time, though a vast aspirer and provident storier.

Naunton's Fragmenta Regalia, Leicester.

ASPIRING.* n. s. [from aspire.]

1. The desire of something great.
The ambitions and aspirings of the worldling. Hammond's Sermons.

2. With to.
Having quite lost not only all inclination and aspirings to knowledge and virtue, but likewise all courage and bravery of mind to recover their ancient freedom and honour. Howell's Letters, ii. 57.

3. Points; stops.
Nor are those so fastidious in pyramidal aspirings, nor curious in architecture or inside glory, as in many lesser towns.
Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 211.

ASPORTATION.† n. s. [asportatio, Lat.] A carrying away.

A bare removal from the place where the thief found the goods, is a sufficient asportation or carrying away. Blackstone.

ASQUINT.† adv. [Dutch schuin. See ASKANCE.]

1. Obliquely; not in the strait line of vision.

A single guide may direct the way better than five hundred, who have contrary views, or look asquint, or shut their eyes.

Smilt.

2. Figuratively, not with regard or due notice.

Thereto he answered not, but looked as it were asquint at it.

Forre's Acts, Life of Rogers.

If Herod the great had been εκαληνεβραϊος, or eaten up of worms, and by the judgement of God too; is it to be thought that this judgement looked asquint upon all the rest of this king's enormities, and cast a full eye only on the massacre of the children?

Gregory's Posthuma, (1650) p. 105.

ASS.† n. s. [asinus, Lat. ase, old Fr. appa, Sax.]

1. An animal of burden, remarkable for sluggishness, patience, hardiness, coarseness of food, and long life.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part,
Because you bought them.

Shakespeare.

2. A stupid, heavy, dull fellow; a dolt.

I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

Shakespeare.

That such a crafty mother
Should yield the world to this ass! — a woman that Bears all down with her brain; and yet her son Cannot take two from twenty for his heart,
And leave eighteen.

Shakespeare.

To ASSAIL. v. a. [assaillir, Fr.]

1. To attack in a hostile manner; to assault; to fall upon; to invade.

So when he saw his flattery arts to fail,
With greedy force he 'gan the fort t' assail.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To attack with argument; censure; or motives applied to the passions.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament
Let us assail the family of York.

Shakespeare.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor bide th' encounter of assailing eyes.

Shakespeare.

How have I fear'd your fate! but fear'd it most,
When love assail'd you on the Libyan coast.

Dryden.

All books he reads, and all he reads assails,
From Dryden's Fables down to D—y's Tales.

Pope.

In vain Thalestris with reproach assails;
For who can move when fair Belinda fails?

Pope.

ASSAILABLE. adj. [from assail.] That which may be attacked.

Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.—
— But in them nature's copy's not eternal.—

— There's comfort yet, they are assailable.

Shakespeare.

ASSAILANT. n. s. [assaillant, Fr.] He that attacks; in opposition to defendant.

The same was so well encountered by the defendants, that the obstinacy of the assailants did but increase the loss.

Hayward.

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face,
The like do you; so shall we pass along,
And never stir assailants.

Shakespeare.

ASSAILANT. adj. Attacking; invading.

And as evening dragon came,
Assailant on the perched roosts
Of tame villatick fowl.

Milton.

ASSAILER. n. s. [from assail.] One who attacks another.

Galladius heated, so pursued our assailers, that one of them slew him.

Sidney.

ASSAILMENT.* n. s. [from assail.] Attack.

His most frequent assailment was the head-ache.

Johnson, Life of Pope.

ASSAINE. n. s. A little animal of Virginia, which issaid to fly by stretching out its shoulders and its skin, and is called in English the flying squirrel. Trevoux.

ASSART.† n. s. [essart, from essarter, Fr. to clear away wood in a forest.] An offence committed in the forest, by plucking up those woods by the roots, that are thickets or coverts of the forest, and by making them as plain as arable land.

Cowel.

Freedom from assart is an exemption from a fine or penalty for so doing.

Burn's Hist. of Westm. and Cumb. Gloss.

To ASSART.† v. a. [essartir, Fr. according to Dr. Johnson. Others deduce it from exaratum, contracted into exartum; which signifies to plow or cut up; and others from exertum, which means to pull up by the roots. V. Archæologia, vol. 15. p. 216.] To commit an assart; one of the greatest offences cognizable by the laws of the forest; and simply, to grub up.

The king granted to him free chase, and free warren, in all those his lands, &c. and also power to assart his lands.

Athmole's Berkshire, ii. 425.

ASSASSIN.† } n. s. [assassin, Fr. a word brought ASSASSINATE. } originally from Asia, where, about the time of the holy war, there was a set of men called assassins, as is supposed for Arsacide, who killed any man without regard to danger, at the command of their chief. Such is Dr. Johnson's etymology of assassin. Some have thought it taken from the Assacani, a people mentioned by Arrian, lib. iv. The Abbé Vertot inclines to the derivation of it from the Persian word hassissin, a poniard used in private murders. Lacombe interprets assassins by the Lat. sicarii, from sica, a poniard. So it is recorded by Matthew of Paris respecting their chief, "si quos habuit principes odiosos, aut genti suæ suspectos, datâ uni de suis sichâ, vel pluribus, non considerato rei exitu, vel quæ eis pœna sequatur, illuc contendunt, quibus mandatum est; et tam diu pro complendo imperio anxii circumeunt et laborant, quousque peragant sibi homicidium commissum. Hos tam Saraceni, quam Christiani, assassinos appellant, etymologiam ignorantes." Roquefort exhibits them under the name of hakrsins, haacains, héissesins, which Sainte-Palaye and Mouchet derive, he says, from occidentes, that is, slayers, murderers. V. Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. Lord Bacon, in a charge in the King's Bench, refers to "the Saracen prince, of whom the name of the assassins is derived;" where he means perhaps simply, not etymologically, the petty prince at the head of them, who was called the old man of the mountain.] A murderer; one that kills by treachery, or sudden violence.

In the very moment as the knight withdrew from the duke, this assassinate gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side.

Wotton.

The Syrian king, who, to surprize
One man, assassin like, had levy'd war,
War unproclaim'd.

Milton.

The old king is just murdered, and the person that did it is unknown. — Let the soldiers seize him for one of the assassins, and let me alone to accuse him afterwards.

Dryden.

Here hir'd assassins for their gain invade,
And treacherous poisoners urge their fatal trade.

Creech.

When she hears of a murder, she enlarges more on the guilt to the suffering person, than of the assassin.

Addison.

Orestes brandish'd the revenging sword,
Slew the dire pair, and gave to funeral flame
The vile assassin, and adul'terous dame.

Pope.

- Useful, we grant, it serves what life requires,
But dreadful too, the dark assassin hires. Pope.
- To ASSA'SSIN.* v. a. [Fr. assassiner.] To murder.
Can God be as well-pleased with him that *assassin*es his parents, as with him that obeys them. Stillfleet's Sermon, p. 502.
- ASSA'SSINACY.* n. s. [from assassin.] The act of assassinating.
This spiritual assassination, this deepest die of blood being most satanically designed on souls. Hammond's Sermon.
- ASSA'SSINATE.* v. n. s. [Fr. assassiner.]
1. The crime of an assassin; murder.
For which his temper'd zeal, see Providence
Flying in here, and arms him with defence
Against the assassinate made upon his life
By a foul wretch. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.
Were not all assassinates and popular insurrections wrongfully chastised, if the meanness of the offenders indemnified them from punishment? Pope.
  2. A murderer. See ASSASSIN.
- To ASSA'SSINATE.* v. a. [from assassin.]
1. To murder by violence; to destroy.
Help, neighbours, my house is broken open by force, and I am ravished, and like to be assassinated. Dryden.
What could provoke thy madness
To assassinate so great, so brave a man!
The incorporating
Of these same outward things into that part,
Which we call mortal, leaves some certain faces
That stop the organs, and, as Plato says,
Assassinates our knowledge. B. Jonson, For.
  2. To way-lay; to take by treachery. This meaning is perhaps peculiar to Milton.
Such usage as your honourable lords
Afford me, assassinated and betrayed,
Who durst not, with your whole united pow'rs,
In fight withstand one single and unarm'd.
Milton.
- To ASSA'SSINATE.* v. n. To murder.
You who those ways fear'd of late,
Where now no thieves assassinate.
Sandys, Paraphrase of Sacred Songs, Judges v.
- ASSA'SSINATION. n. s. [from assassinate.] The act of assassinating; murder by violence.
It were done quickly, if th' assassination
Could trammel up the consequence. Shakspeare.
The duke finish'd his course by a wicked assassination.
Clarendon.
- ASSA'SSINATOR. n. s. [from assassinate.] Murderer;
mankiller; the person that kills another by violence.
- ASSA'SSINOUS.* adj. [from assassin.] Murderous.
Cockram.
- ASSA'TION.* v. n. s. [Fr. assation, a roasting, from the Lat. assatus.] Roasting.
The egg expiring less in the elixation or boiling; whereas, & in the assation or roasting, it will sometimes abate a drachm. &
Brown, Vulg. Err.
Assation is a concoction of the inward moisture by heat.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 21.
- ASSA'ULT. n. s. [assault, Fr.]
1. Attack; hostile onset; opposed to defence.
Her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.
Shakspeare.
Not to be shook thyself, but all assaults,
Buffing, like thy hoar cliffs the loud sea wave. Thomson.
  2. Storm: opposed to sap or siege.
Jason took at least a thousand men, and suddenly made an assault upon the city. 2 Macc. v. 5.
After some days siege, he resolved to try the fortune of an assault: he succeeded therein so far, that he had taken the principal tower and fort. Bacon.
  3. Hostile violence.
Themselves at discord fell,
And cruel combat join'd in middle space,
With horrible assault, and fury fell. Spenser, F. Q.

4. Invasion; hostility; attack.
After some unhappy assaults upon the prerogative by the parliament, which produced its dissolution, there followed a composure. Clarendon.
Theories built upon narrow foundations, are very hard to be supported against the assaults of opposition. Locke.
  5. In law. A violent kind of injury offered to a man's person. It may be committed by offering of a blow, or by a fearful speech. Cowel.
  6. It has upon before the thing assaulted.
To ASSA'ULT. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack; to invade; to fall upon with violence.
The king granted the Jews to gather themselves together, and to stand for their life, to destroy all the power that would assault them. Esth. viii. 11.
Before the gates the cries of babes new-born,
Whom fate had from their tender mothers torn,
Assault his ears. Dryden.
New cursed steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief hold:
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd. Dryden.
- ASSA'ULTABLE.* adj. [from assault.] Capable of assault.
A breach, be it made never so assaultable, having many hands to defend it with any valour, lightly is never entered.
Sir Roger Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, p. 106.
- ASSA'ULTER. n. s. [from assault.] One who violently assaults another.
Neither liking their eloquence, nor fearing their might, we esteemed few swords in a just defence, able to resist many unjust assaulters. Sidney.
- ASSA'Y.* v. n. s. [essaye, Fr. from which the ancient writers borrowed assay, according to the sound, and the latter, essay, according to the writing; but the senses now differing, they may be considered as two words. This is Dr. Johnson's observation.
But the word is certainly from the old Fr. substantive asaie, which means the same as essai.]
1. Examination; trial.
This cannot be
By no assay of reason. 'Tis a pageant,
To keep us in false gaze. Shakspeare.
  2. In law. The examination of measures and weights used by the clerk of the market. Cowel.
  3. The first entrance upon any thing; a taste for trial.
For well he weened, that so glorious bait
Would tempt his guest to take thereof assay. Spenser, F. Q.
  4. Trial by danger or distress; difficulty; hardship.
She heard with patience all unto the end,
And strove to master sorrowful assay. Spenser, F. Q.
The men he prest but late,
To hard assays unfit, unsure at need,
Yet arm'd to point in well attempted plate. Fairfax.
Be sure to find,
What I foretel thee, many a hard assay
Of dangers, and adversities, and pains,
Ere thou of Israel's sceptre get fast hold. Milton.
  5. Value.
She saw bestowed all with rich array
Of pearls and precious stones of great assay. Spenser.
- To ASSA'Y.* v. a. [old Fr. assaier.]
1. To make trial of; to make experiment of.
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast. Spenser.
Gray and Bryan obtained leave of the general a little to assay them; and so with some horsemen charged them home. Hayward.
What unweighed behaviour hath this drunkard picked out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Shakspeare.
  2. To apply to, as the touchstone in assaying metals.

Whom thus afflicted, when sad Eve beheld,
Desolate where she sat, approaching night,
Softs words to his fierce passion she assay'd.

Milton.

3. To try; to endeavour.

David girded his sword upon his armour, and he assayed to go, for he had not proved it.

1 Sam. xvii. 39.

ASSA'YER. n. s. [from assay.] An officer of the mint, for the due trial of silver, appointed between the master of the mint and the merchants that bring silver thither for exchange.

Convel.

The smelters come up to the assayers within one in twenty.

Woodward on Fossils.

ASSECTA'TION. n. s. [assectatio, Lat.] Attendance, or waiting upon.

Dict.

To ASSECURE.* v. a. [low Lat. assecuro, adsecuro.]

To make one sure or certain; to give assurance.

Bullock.

ASSECURANCE.* n. s. [low Lat. assecurantia.] Assurance.

What may be thought of those assurances which they give, in the popish church, to all such as die in the same, with the copious furniture of their sacraments, and their own merits?

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. p. 320.

ASSECURA'TION.* n. s. [low Lat. assecuratio.] Assurance free from doubt.

How far then reaches this assurance? So far as to exclude all fears, all doubting, and hesitation?

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 268.

ASSECUTION. n. s. [from assequor, assecutum, to obtain.] Acquirement; the act of obtaining.

By the canon law, a person, after he has been in full possession of a second benefice, cannot return again to his first; because it is immediately void by his assecution of a second.

Ayliffe, Par.

ASSEMBLAGE. n. s. [assemblage, Fr.]

1. A collection; a number of individuals brought together. It differs from assembly, by being applied only, or chiefly, to things; assembly being used only, or generally, of persons.

All that we amass together in our thoughts is positive, and the assemblage of a great number of positive ideas of space or duration.

Locke.

2. The state of being assembled.

O Hartford, fitted or to shine in courts
With unaffected grace, or walk the plains,
With innocence and meditation join'd
In soft assemblage, listen to my song.

Thomson.

ASSEMBLANCE.* n. s. [old Fr. assemblance, ressemblance. V. Roquefort.]

1. Representation; appearance. Some editions have rashly converted Shakspeare's own word into assemblage.

Will you tell me, Master Shallow, how to choose a man?
Care I for the limb, the thewes, the stature, bulk, and big assemblance of a man! Give me the spirit, Master Shallow.

K. Hen. IV. P. ii. A. iii.

2. Assembling. [from assemble.]

He chaunst to come, where happily he spide
A rout of many people farre away;
To whom his course he hastily applide,
To weet the cause of their assemblance wide.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 21.

To ASSEMBLE. v. a. [assembler, Fr.] To bring together into one place. It is used both of persons and things.

And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah.

Isaiah, xi. 12.

He wonders for what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him.

Shakspeare.

To ASSEMBLE. v. n. To meet together.

These men assembled, and found Daniel praying.

Daniel, vi. 11.

ASSEMBLER.* n. s. [from assemble.] He who assembles or meets others.

For your confession of faith, which you say shall be published by your assemblers, if that be to be used in the service of God, then must there be some new direction for it put into the directory.

Hammond to Cheynel, Ham. Works, i. 193.

None of the list-makers, the assemblers of the mob, the directors and arrangers, have been convicted.

Burke, Reflections on the Executions in 1780.

ASSEMBLING.* n. s. [from assemble.] Meeting together.

Let all rude and riotous assemblies, all clamorous sports and boisterous exercises, and all undecent liberties, both of the hand and tongue, be banished from this day of rest and holiness.

Bp. Fleetwood's Charge.

ASSEMBLY. n. s. [assemblée, Fr.]

1. A company met together.

They had heard by fame,
Of this so noble and so fair assembly,
This night to meet here.

Shakspeare.

2. An assemblage; a collection.

From Murano to Venice herself, or to any of the little assembly of islands about her.

Howell, Letters, i. 1.

3. The assembly of divines, by way of distinction; recorded in the history of this country.

It is, I perceive, an usual prayer of many preachers well-affected to your assembly, that God would now, (after 1600 years universal practice of the whole church of Christ upon earth) shew you the pattern in the mount; as if, after so long and perfect inquiries, there could be any new discoveries of the form that was, or should be.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 336.

ASSEMBLY-ROOM.* n. s. The room in which visitors assemble; usually understood of public meetings; many towns, especially watering places, as they are termed, having such rooms.

No sooner did the reputation of the poem begin to spread, than she heard it repeated in all places of concourse; nor could she enter the assembly-rooms, or cross the walks, without being saluted with some lines from The Bastard.

Johnson, Life of Savage.

ASSENT. n. s. [assensus, Lat. assent, old Fr.]

1. The act of agreeing to any thing.

Without the king's assent or knowledge,

You wrought to be a legate.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Faith is the assent to any proposition not thus made out by the deduction of reason, but upon the credit of the proposer.

Locke.

All the arguments on both sides must be laid in balance, and, upon the whole, the understanding determine its assent.

Locke.

2. Consent; agreement.

To urge any thing upon the church, requiring thereunto that religious assent of christian belief, wherewith the words of the holy prophets are received, and not to shew it in scripture; this did the fathers evermore think unlawful, impious, and execrable.

Hooker.

The evidence of God's own testimony, added unto the natural assent of reason, concerning the certainty of them, doth not a little comfort and confirm the same.

Hooker.

To ASSENT. v. n. [assentire, Lat.] To concede; to yield to, or agree to.

And the Jews also assented, saying, that these things were so.

Acts, xxiv. 9.

ASSENTA'TION. n. s. [assentatio, Lat. assentation, Fr.] Compliance with the opinion of another out of flattery or dissimulation.

A prince, whom, without assentation I may be bold to call the sweetest and the fairest blossom that ever budded, either out of the white or the red rosary.

Id. Northampton, Proceed. against Garnet, sign. Dd. 3.

Words, smooth and sweeter-sounded, are to be used rather than rough or harsh; as adore for worship, assentation for flattery.

ASSENTA'TOR.* n. s. [Lat. assentator, old Fr. assentateur.] A flatterer; a follower. Obsolete.

Other there be which, in a more honest term may be called assentatours or followers, which do await diligently what is the form of the speech and gesture of their master, and also other his manners and fashion of garments.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 138.b.

ASSE'NTER.* n. s. [from assent.] The person who consents; an assistant; a favourer.

The good man, by that delusive spell is rendered a ridiculous spectator, and seemingly an assenter to their meschanteries [wicked acts].

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 337.

She is not an assenter (though thousands be) to that rabbinical rule cited in Drusius from Rabbi Haurica: Let a man clothe himself (saith he) beneath his ability, his children according to it, and his wife above it!

Whillock, Manners of the Eng. p. 353.

ASSE'NTINGLY.* adv. Accordingly, or by agreement. Hydrot.

ASSE'NTMENT. n. s. [from assent.] Consent.

Their arguments are but precarious, and subsist upon the charity of our assentments. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To ASSE'RT.† v. a. [assero, Lat. asserer. Fr.]

1. To maintain; to defend either by words or actions. Your forefathers have asserted the party which they chose till death, and died for its defence. Dryden.

2. To affirm; to declare positive.

That to the highth of this great argument I may assert Eternal Providence, And vindicate the ways of God to men. Milton, P. L. i. 25.

3. To claim; to vindicate a title to.

Nor can the groveling mind, In the dark dungeon of the limbs confin'd, Assert the natives' skies or own its heav'nly kind. Dryden.

4. To rescue; to free. A Latinism.

The people of Israel, being lately oppress'd in Egypt, were asserted by God into a state of liberty.

Bp. Patrick on Numbers, xxiii. 22.

ASSE'RTION. n. s. [from assert.]

1. The act of asserting.

2. Position advanced.

If any affirm the earth doth move, and will not believe with us it standeth still; because he hath probable reasons for it, and I no infallible sense or reason against it, I will not quarrel with his assertion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

ASSE'RTIVE. adj. [from assert.] Positive; dogmatical; peremptory.

He was not so fond of the principles he undertook to illustrate, as to boast their certainty; proposing them not in a confident, and assertive form, but as probabilities and hypotheses. Glanville.

ASSE'RTIVELY.* adv. [from assertive.] Affirmatively.

Read it interrogatively, and it is ns strong for Soto and the Dominican, as if it be read assertively, for Catherine and the Jesuits. Bp. Bedell, Lett. p. 403.

ASSE'RTOR.† n. s. [old Fr. asserteur.] Maintainer; vindicator; supporter; affirmer.

Among th' assertors of free reason's claim, Our nation's not the least in worth or fame. Dryden, Ep. ii.

Faithful assertor of thy country's cause, Britain with tears shall bathe thy glorious wound. Prior.

It is an usual piece of art to undermine the authority of fundamental truths, by pretending to shew how weak the proofs are, which their assertors employ in defence of them. Atterbury.

A'SSERTORY.* adj. [from assert.]

1. Affirming; supporting.

We have not to do here with a promissory oath, the obligation whereof is for another inquisition: it is the assertory oath that is now under our hand, which the great God by whom we swear hath ordained to be an end of controversies. Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. D. ii. C. 5.

His other heap of arguments are only assertory not probatory. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 126.

The oaths that we take, are of several sorts. First, assertory ones, in order to our affirming the truth of somewhat; and such is the evidence that men give in trials, or the affidavits that they make in order to the preserving the memory of some truth, that consists in their knowledge. Bp. Burnet, Sermons, p. 253.

2. Sometimes with the particle of.

As this particle Amen, used in the beginning of a speech is assertory of the undoubted truth of it, so when it is subjoined and used at the end of it, [it] is precatory; and signifies our earnest desire to have our prayers heard and our petitions granted. Bp. Hopkins, Expos. p. 108.

To ASSE'VE. v. a. [asservio, Lat.] To serve, help, or second. Dict.

To ASSE'SS.† v. a. [from asestare, Ital. to make an equilibrium, or balance, Dr. Johnson says; but it is probably from the old Fr. assesser, to establish, to regulate; so used in the 10th century. V. La-combe.] To charge with any certain sum.

Before the receipt of them in this office, they were assessed by the affidavit from the time of the inquisition found. Bacon.

ASSE'SS.* n. s. [from the verb.] Assessment.

Taking off assesses, levies, and free-quarterings, might appear plausible aims. Princely Pelican, ch. 8.

ASSE'SSABLE.* adj. [from assess.] That which may be assessed; liable to be taxed.

ASSE'SSION. n. s. [assessio, Lat.] A sitting down by one, to give assistance or advice. Dict.

ASSE'SSIONARY.* adj. [from assession.] Pertaining to assessors.

One of the answers of the jury, upon their oaths at the assessionary court, I have inserted. Carew, Surv. of Cornw.

ASSE'SSMENT.† n. s. [from to assess.]

1. The sum levied on certain property.

They were not ashamed, after they had taken away and sold all my goods and personal estate, to come to me for assessments and monthly payments for that estate which they had taken. Bp. Hall, Sp. of his Life, p. 61.

2. The act of assessing.

What greater immunity and happiness can there be to a people, than to be liable to no laws, but what they make themselves? To be subject to no contribution, assessment, or any pecuniary levy whatsoever, but what they vote and voluntarily yield unto themselves. Howell.

ASSE'SSOR.† n. s. [assessor, Lat.]*

1. The person that sits by another; generally used of those who assist the judge.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears; And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears.

Round in his urn the blended balls he rows, Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden.

The statutes are as extraordinary as if they had been drawn up by Don Quixote himself, or his assessors, the curate and the barber. Warton Hist. Eng. Poetry. i. 336.

2. He that sits by another as next in dignity.

To his Son, The assessor of his throne, he thus began. Milton.

Twice stronger than his sire, who sat above, Assessor to the throne of thundering Jove. Dryden.

3. He that lays taxes; derived from assess.

The assessors of taxes may be elected of the meaner sort of the people. Raleigh, Arts of Emp. p. 63.

A'SSETS. n. s. Without the singular. [assez, Fr.] Goods sufficient to discharge that burden, which is cast upon the executor or heir, in satisfying the testator's or ancestor's debts or legacies. Whoever pleadeth assets, sayeth nothing; but that the person against whom he pleads, hath enough come to his hands, to discharge what is in demand. Cowel.

To ASSE'VE.† v. a. [asservio, Lat. asservere, old

To ASSE'VE.† v. a. [asservio, Lat. asservere, old To Affirm with great solemnity, as upon oath.

Anselmus, though otherwise a severe and a very austere man, yet is so sweetened and mollified with the conceit of this music, [the harmony of heaven,] that he not only assevereth it, but also endeavourereth, with great pains and labour, to set out the true musical proportion of it; as Macrobius before did.

Fotherby, Atheom. p. 317.

ASSEVERA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. asseveration.] Solemn affirmation, as upon oath.

That which you are persuaded of, ye have it no otherwise than by your own only probable collection; and therefore such hold asseverations, as in him were admirable, should, in your mouths, but argue rashness. Hooker.

Another abuse of the tongue I might add: vehement asseverations upon slight and trivial occasions. Ray on the Creation.

The repetition gives a greater emphasis to the words, and agrees better with the vehemence of the speaker in making his asseveration. Broomer, Notes on the Odyssey.

ASSHEAD.† n. s. [from ass and head.] This is a word older than the time of Shakspeare, (whom Dr. Johnson cites,) accompanied in Minshew with assheadiness; both obsolete.] One slow of apprehension; a blockhead.

I can see none agree with my lorde here in thys opynyon, unlesse they be hlynde dastards and assheads, as thys olde dotynge fool was. Hale, Course at the Rom. Foze, fol. 86. b.

Will you help an asshead, and a coxecomb, and a knave, a thin-faced knave, a gull? Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

ASSIDUATE.* adj. [Lat. assiduus.] Daily.

My long and assiduate course of suffering has taken me from an opinion of suffering.

K. Charles I., in the Princely Pelican, ch. 8.

ASSIDUITY. n. s. [assiduité, Fr. assiduitas, Lat.] Diligence; closeness of application.

I have with much pains and assiduity, qualified myself for a nomenclator. Addison.

Can he, who has undertaken this, want conviction of the necessity of his utmost vigour and assiduity to acquit himself of it? Rogers.

We observe the address and assiduity they will use to corrupt us. Rogers.

ASSIDUOUS. adj. [assiduus, Lat.] Constant in application.

And if by prayer

Incessant I could hope to change the will Of Him who all things can, I would not cease To weary Him with my assiduous cries. Milton.

The most assiduous tale-bearers, and bitterest revilers, are often half-witted people. Gov. of the Tongue

In summer, you see the hen giving herself greater freedoms, and quitting her care for above two hours together; but in winter, when the rigour of the season would chill the principles of life, and destroy the young one, she grows more assiduous in her attendance, and stays away but half the time. Addison.

Each still renews her little labour, Nor justles her assiduous neighbour Prior.

ASSIDUOUSLY. adv. [from assiduous.] Diligently; continually.

The trade, that obliges artificers to be assiduously conversant with their materials, is that of glass-men. Boyle.

The habitable earth may have been perpetually the drier, seeing it is assiduously drained and exhausted by the seas. Bentley.

ASSIDUOUSNESS.* n. s. [from assiduous.] The act of being assiduous; diligence.

To ASSIEGE. v. a. [assieger, Fr.] To besiege. Obsolete. Dict.

On the other side the assieged castle's ward Their stedfast stands did mightily maintain. Spenser.

ASSIENTO.† n. s. [In Spanish, a contract or bargain.] A contract or convention between the king of Spain and other powers, for furnishing the Spanish dominions in America with negro slaves.

A good ministry would have considered how a renewal of the assiento might have been obtained.

To ASSIGN.† v. a. [assigner, Fr. assigno, Lat.]

1. To mark out; to appoint.

He assigned Uriah unto a place where he knew that valiant men were. 2 Sam. xi. 16.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, both of them rather courtiers assured to the state, than martial men. Bacon.

Both joining,

As join'd in injuries, one enmity Against a foe by doom express assign'd us, That cruel serpent. Milton.

True quality is neglected, virtue is oppressed, and vice triumphant. The last day will assign to every one a station suitable to his character. Addison.

2. To appropriate.

Promising unto the king by intercession three hundred and three score talents of silver; And, of another revenue, eighty talents. Besides this, he promised to assign an hundred and fifty more, if he might have licence to set him up a place for exercise, &c. 2 Maccab. iv. 8, 9.

3. To fix with regard to quantity or value.

There is no such intrinsick, natural, settled value in any thing, as to make any assigned quantity of it constantly worth any assigned quantity of another. Locke.

4. In law. In general, to appoint a deputy, or make over a right to another; in particular, to appoint or set forth, as to assign error, is to shew in what part of the process error is committed: to assign false judgement, is to declare how and where the judgement is unjust: to assign the cessor, is to shew how the plaintiff had cessed, or given over: to assign waste, is to shew wherein especially the waste is committed. Cowell.

ASSIGN.* n. s. [from the verb.] The person to whom any property is, or may be, assigned.

Severus likes not these unseason'd lines

Of rude absurdities, time's foul abuse

To all posterities, and their assignes.

Parrot, Springs for Woodrocks, Ep. 9.3.

Without interruption or claim of heirs, executors, and assigns. Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 168.

ASSIGNABLE.† adj. [from assign.] That which may be marked out, or fixed.

Aristotle held that it streamed by connatural result and emanation from God; so that there was no instant assignable of God's eternal existence, in which the world did not also co-exist. South.

As the number of terms may increase beyond any assignable number; so may the excess decrease below any assignable quantity. Wallis, Correction of Hobbes, § 5.

In one hour, and in the self-same assembly, without any assigned or assignable cause, to be precipitated from the highest authority to the most marked neglect, possibly into the greatest peril of life and reputation, is a situation full of danger, and destitute of honour.

Burke, on the present Discontents.

ASSIGNAT.* n. s. [Fr. In the old Fr. assignat also occurs in the sense of distribution. V. Cotgrave.] The paper-money of France after its Revolution: The word, among us, of course is modern.

The mortgage of our assignats draws near its end.

Burke's Works, vii. 340.

In the war with Holland, he saw nothing but gold to seize on, and assignats to sell at par. Ibid. p. 341.

ASSIGNATION.† n. s. [assignation, French.]

1. An appointment to meet; used generally of love appointments, Dr. Johnson says; and certainly, I may add, of other appointments.

The lovers expected the return of this stated hour with as much impatience as if it had been a real assignation. Spectator.

Or when a whore, in her vocation,

Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

They return home as much raised in their spirits, and cheered in their very countenances, as the most jolly good-fellows do from their merry assignations.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Con. P. I.

More delightful and more profitable than either coffee-house, club, or tavern assignations. Ibid. P. III.

2. A making over a thing to another.

By assignments of yearly pensions out of their revenues.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

He had obtained an assignation of 50,000 crowns to be levied in Portugal.

Bacon, Report of Lopes's Treason.

This manor was in the possession of Reginald Fitzherbert, who, dying in 1285, by an assignation made it over to his wife Joan.

Ashmole's Berkshire, ii. 276.

3. Designation; marking out.

In all these places this title is attributed unto Christ absolutely and universally, without any kind of restriction or limitation, without any assignation of any particular in respect of which he is the first or last.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii.

I am happy to find this assignation of Stonehenge, which I cursorily hazarded in my first volume of the History of English Poetry, ascertained by so authentick an historian as Turgott!

Warton, Rowley Eng. p. 68.

The assignation of particular names to denote particular objects, that is, the institution of nouns substantive, would, probably, be one of the first steps towards the formation of language.

A. Smith, Formation of Languages.

ASSIGNEE. n. s. [assigné, Fr.] He that is appointed or deputed by another, to do any act, or perform any business, or enjoy any commodity. And an assignee may be either in deed or in law; assignee in deed, is he that is appointed by a person; assignee in law, is he whom the law maketh so, without any appointment of the person.

Cowel.

ASSIGNER. n. s. [from assign.] He that appoints.

The Gospel is at once the assigner of our tasks, and the magazine of our strength.

Decay of Piety.

ASSIGNMENT. n. s. [old Fr. assenement.]

1. Appropriation of one thing to another thing or person.

The only thing which maketh any place publick, is the publick assignment thereof unto such duties.

Hooker.

This institution, which assigns it to a person, whom we have no rule to know, is just as good as an assignment to no body at all.

Locke.

2. Designation; the act of marking out; appointment.

By this your assignment Popery will extend itself very far indeed.

Moutague, Appeal to Caesar, p. 119.

All chancellors, commissaries, archdeacons, officials, and all other exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction, shall appoint such meet places for the keeping of their courts, by the assignment or approbation of the bishop of the diocese, as shall be convenient for the entertainment of those that are to make their appearance there.

Const. and Canons Eccl. 125.

ASSIMILABLE. adj. [from assimilate.] That which may be converted to the same nature with something else.

The spirits of many will find but naked habitations; meeting no assimilables wherein to re-act their natures.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To ASSIMILATE. v. n. [assimilo, Lat.] To perform the act of converting food to nourishment.

Birds assimilate less, and excrete more, than beasts; for their excrements are ever liquid, and their flesh generally more dry.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Birds be commonly better meat than beasts, because their flesh doth assimilate more finely, and seerneth more subtly.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To ASSIMILATE. v. a.

1. To bring to a likeness, or resemblance.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life would easily assimilate at least the next generation to barbarism and ferinence.

Hale.

They are not over patient of mixture; but such, whom they cannot assimilate, soon find it their interest to remove.

Swift.

2. To turn to its own nature by digestion.

Tasting concoct, digest, assimilate,

And corporeal to incorporeal turn.

Milton.

Hence also animals and vegetables may assimilate their nourishment; moist nourishment easily changing its texture, till it becomes like the dense earth.

Newton.

ASSIMILATENESS. n. s. [from assimilate.] Likeness.

Dict.

ASSIMILATION. n. s. [from assimilate.]

1. The act of converting any thing to the nature or substance of another.

It furthers the very act of assimilation of nourishment, by some outward emollients that make the parts more apt to assimilate.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The state of being assimilated, or becoming like something else; having sometimes to and with.

A nourishment in a large acceptation, but not in propriety, conserving the body, not repairing it by assimilation, but preserving it by ventilation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

What shall he gain by this but that advantage, which he promiseth to himself, of your good, in your assimilation to other churches.

Bp. Hall's Remains, p. 315.

It is as well the instinct as duty of our nature, to aspire to an assimilation with God; even the most laudable and generous ambition.

Decay of Piety.

ASSIMILATIVE. adj. [from assimilate.] The learned writer, whom I cite as using this word, spells it assimulative, as he also writes assimilation for assimilation.] Having the power of turning to its own nature by digestion.

Neither ought it to seem more strange, that the same ventricle in the brain should be capable of all these three functions, than that the same bone or sinew, and every part and particle thereof should have in it (in regard of the nourishment it receives and the excrement it drives forth) an attractive, a retentive, an assimilative, and an expulsive virtue.

To ASSIMULATE. v. a. [assimulo, Lat.] To feign; to counterfeit.

Dict.

ASSIMULATION. n. s. [assimulatio, Lat.] A dissembling; a counterfeiting.

Dict.

ASSINEGO. n. s. [Portuguese, asinego, a little ass. The word, in our language, has been sometimes mistaken for an ass-driver.] An ass.

We jogged leisurely on upon our mules and assinegos.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 127.

Or are you so ambitious 'bove your peers,

You'd be an assinego by your years?

B. Jonson, Expost. with Inigo Jones.

To ASSIST. v. a. [assistere, Fr. assisto, Lat.] To help.

Receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints, and assist her in whatsoever business she hath need.

Rom. xvi. 2.

It is necessary and assisting to all our other intellectual faculties.

Locke.

Acquaintance with method will assist one in ranging human affairs.

Watts, Logick.

She no sooner yielded to adultery, but she agreed to assist in the murder of her husband.

Broome on the Odyssey.

To ASSIST. v. n. To help; to contribute.

Almighty God, who in thy wise providence hast constituted several ranks and qualities of men, that they might mutually assist to the support of each other; teach me to be content with the station wherein thou hast been pleased to place me.

Nelson's Festivals, St. James, Coll. ii.

ASSISTANCE. n. s. [assistance, French.] Help; furtherance.

The council of Trent commends recourse, not only to the prayers of the saints, but to their aid and assistance: What doth this aid and assistance signify?

Stillingfleet.

You have abundant assistance for this knowledge, in excellent books.

Watts's Preparation for Death.

Let us entreat this necessary assistance, that by his grace he would lead us.

Rogers.

ASSISTANT. adj. [from assist.] Helping; lending aid.

Some perchance did adhere to the duke, and were assistant to him openly, or at least under hand.

Hale, Common Law of England.

For the performance of this work, a vital or directive principle seemeth to be assistant to the corporeal.

Green.

ASSISTANT. n. s. [from assist.]

1. A person engaged in an affair not as principal, but as auxiliary or ministerial.

Some young towardly noblemen or gentlemen were usually sent as assistants or attendants, according to the quality of the persons. Bacon.

2. Sometimes it is perhaps only a softer word for an attendant.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd. Dryden.

ASSISTER.* n. s. [from assist.] He who assists; an helper. Ash.

ASSISTLESS.* adj. [from assist and less.] Wanting help.

Stupid he stares, and all assistless stands. Pope, Iliad, xvi. 970.

ASSIZE.† n. s. [assise, a sitting, Fr.]

1. An assembly of knights and other substantial men, with the bailiff or justice, in a certain place, and at a certain time.

2. A jury. In Scotland a jury is commonly called an assize; in England, the term is applied to a particular species both of jury, and of trial by jury; the former being called an assize, when summoned for the trial of landed disputes; the latter, "a grand assize."

3. An ordinance or statute.

By an ordinance in 27 Hen. II., called the assise of arms, it was provided, that every man's armour should descend to his heir. Blackstone.

4. The court, place, or time, where and when the writs and processes of assize are taken. Cowel.

The law was never executed by any justices of assize, but the people left to their own laws. Davies on Ireland.

At each assize and term we try
A thousand rascals of as deep a dye. Dryden's Juvenal

5. Any court of justice.

The judging God shall close the book of fate,
And there the last assizes keep,
For those who wake, and those who sleep. Dryden.

6. Assize of bread, ale, &c. Measure, of price or rate.

Thus it is said, when wheat is of such a price the bread shall be of such assize.

7. Measure; for which we now use size.

On high hill's top I saw a stately frame,
An hundred cubits high by just assize,
With hundred pillars. Spenser.

8. Rents of assise.

Rents of assise are the certain established rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of a manor, which cannot be varied. Blackstone.

To ASSIZE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To fix the rate of any thing by an assize or writ, Dr. Johnson says; but it formerly meant simply to appoint.

That thou thereof might ben advised,
Thou shalt have day and time assised.

Gower, Conf. Am. Tale of Florent.

ASSIZER, or ASSISER. n. s. [from assize.] Is an officer that has the care and oversight of weights and measures. Chambers.

ASSLIKE.* adj. [from ass and like.] Resembling an ass.

I had much rather, since truly I may do it, shew their mistaking of Plato, under whose lion's skin they would make ass-like braying against poesy, than go about to overthrow his authority. Sidney, Drf. of Poesy.

He ay are sleepy, saith Savanarola, dull, slow, cold, blockish, Burlton, Anat. of Mel. p. 191.

ASS,* v. a. [from sober.] To keep sober.

And thus I rede, thou assobre
Thyne herte, in hope of such a grace. Gower, Conf. Am. b. vi.
ASSOCIABLE.† adj. [Fr. associable, from Lat. associabilis. Dr. Johnson gives this adjective as his own introduction of it; but it had existed in our language more than a century before his time, and with other meanings than his. V. Cotgrave.] Sociable; companionable; fit to hold fellowship with: that which may be joined to another.

To ASSOCIATE.† v. a. [associer, Fr. associo, Lat.]

1. To unite with another as a confederate.

A fearful army led by Caius Marcius,
Associated with Aufidius, rages
Upon our territories. Shakspeare.

2. To adopt as a friend upon equal terms.

Associate in your town a wandering train,
And strangers in your palace entertain. Dryden.

3. To accompany; to keep company with another.

Friends should associate friends in grief and woe. Shakspeare.

4. To unite; to join.

Language and fashion associate also affections,
Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

Some oleaginous particles unperceivedly associated themselves to it. Boyle.

If Humber, a king of the Huns, has any concern in this name, [the Humber,] the best way is to reconcile matters, and associate both etymologies in Hun-Aber, or Humber.

Warton's Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

To ASSO'CIATE.† v. n. To unite himself; to join himself. It has generally the particle with; as, he associated with his master's enemies. This definition has been placed by Dr. Johnson, as Mr. Mason has observed, improperly, among those of the verb active.

Associates with the midnight shadows. Thomson.
They appear in a manner no way assorted to those with whom they must associate. Burke.

ASSOCIATE. adj. [from the verb.] Confederate; joined in interest or purpose.

While I descend through darkness,
To my associate pow'rs, them to acquaint
With these successes. Milton.

ASSOCIATE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A person joined with another; a partner.

They persuade the king, now in old age, to make Plangus his associate in government with him. Sidney.

2. A confederate, in a good or neutral sense; an accomplice in ill.

Their defender, and his associates, have sithence proposed to the world a form such as themselves like. Hooker.

3. A companion; implying some kind of equality.

He was accompanied with a noble gentleman, no unsuitable associate. Wolton.

Sole Eve, associate sole, to me beyond
Compare, above all living creatures dear. Milton.

But my associates now my stay deplore,
Impatient. Pope's Odyssey.

ASSOCIA'TION.† n. s. [Fr. association.]

1. Union; conjunction; society.

The church being a society, hath the self-same original grounds, which other politick societies have; the natural inclination which all men have unto sociable life, and consent to some certain bond of association; which bond is the law that appointeth what kind of order they shall be associated in. Hooker.

2. Confederacy; union for particular purposes, good or ill.

This could not be done but with mighty opposition: against which, to strengthen themselves, they secretly entered into a league of association. Hooker.

3. Partnership.

Self-denial is a kind of holy association with God; and, by making you his partner, interests you in all his happiness.

Boyle.

4. Connection.

Association of ideas is of great importance, and may be of excellent use.

Watts.

5. Apposition; union of matter.

The changes of corporeal things are to be placed only in the various separations, and new associations and motions of these permanent particles.

Newton.

6. An assembly of persons; a club.

The power of serving and obliging the rulers of corporations, of winning over the popular leaders of political clubs, associations, and neighbourhoods.

Burke, Speech on the Duration of Parliaments.

ASSOCIATOR.* n. s. [from associate.] A confederate.

Are you leaguers, or covenanters, or associators?

Dryden, D. of Guise.

I will briefly take notice of some few particulars wherein our late associators and conspirators have made a third copy of the League.

Dryden, Hist. League.

To ASSOIL.* v. a. [old Fr. assoiler, asaudre, absouldre, Lat. absolvere.]

1. To solve; to remove; to answer.

For the assailing of this difficulty,
I lay down these three propositions.

Mede, Rev. of God's House.

Upon which subject [that Episcopacy is of divine right] a most learned Belgick doctor wrote a whole book, uttering therein very many arguments both from scripture and antiquity, and assailing the objections to the contrary.

Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, p. 157.

To assail this seeming difficulty, it may be proper to observe in the entrance, how, or upon what occasion, these words are brought in.

Waterland, Scrip. Vindic. iii. 63.

2. To release or set free; to acquit; to pardon.

If we live in an age of indevotion, we think ourselves well assailed, if we be warmer than their ice.

Bp. Taylor, Gr. Exemplar, p. 68.

But first thou must a season fast and pray,
Till from her hands the spright assailed is,
And have her strength recured from frail infirmities.

Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 52.

She soundly slept, and careful thoughts did quite assail.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 58.

The king — soon after, under the broad seal, assailed him from all irregularities and scandal.

Hacket, Life of Abp. Williams, abridged, p. 13.

3. To absolve by confession. “Asoylen of defaults or sins,” Prompt. Parv.

To some bishop we will wend,
Of all the sins, that we have done,
To be assailed at his hand.

Percy, Reliques, i. 172.

4. To stain; to soil. [From soil with the prefix as, perhaps peculiar to the single authority which I cite.]

What'er he be, [who]
Can with unthankfulness assail me, let him
Dig out mine eyes, and sing my name in verse,
In ballad verse, at every drinking house,
And no man be so charitable to lend me
A dog to guide my steps.

Beaumont and Fl. Queen of Corinth, iii. 1.

A'SSONANCE n. s. [assonance, Fr.] Reference of one sound to another resembling it. Resemblance of sound.

Dict.

A'SSONANT. adj. [assonant, French.] Sounding in a manner resembling another sound.

Dict.

To A'SSONATE.* v. n. Lat. assono.] To sound, or ring, like a bell.

Cockeray.

To ASSO'RT.* v. a. [assortir, Fr. An old English verb, found in Cotgrave; who renders assortir, “to sort, assort, suit; to dispose and order several things handsomely; also, to furnish or store with all sorts.” It is so employed in modern times, as the examples from Burke, noticed by Mr. Mason, shew.]

They appear in a manner no way assorted to those with whom they must associate.

Burke.

To be found in the well assorted warehouses of dissenting congregations.

Burke.

ASSORTMENT.* n. s. [from assort.]

1. The act of classing or ranging.

Is it not much more distinct and intelligible, and of better direction for the assortment and certainty of structure, to say that “amor” is a transitive action, and “nummi” the patient or object?

R. Johnson, Notes Nottingh. p. 8.

2. A mass or quantity properly selected and ranged.

When the greater part of objects had thus been arranged under their proper classes and assortments, distinguished by such general names, it was impossible that the greater part of that almost infinite number of individuals, comprehended under each particular assortment or species, could have any peculiar or proper names of their own, distinct from the general name of the species.

A. Smith, Formation of Languages.

In such heterogeneous assortments, the most innocent person will lose the effect of his innocency.

Burke's Works, ii. 431.

To ASSO'T. v. a. [from sot; assoter, Fr.] To intemperate; to besot: a word out of use.

But whence they sprung, or how they were begot,
Uncath is to assure, uncath to weene
That monstrous error which doth some assot.

Spenser.

To ASSUA'GE.* v. a. [The derivation of this word is uncertain; Minshew deduces it from adsuadere, or assuaviare; Junius, from ppæj, sweet; from whence Skinner imagines appæran might have been formed, Dr. Johnson says. But all these etymologists might have found the true original in the old Fr. assoager, or assonager, which, however, was not thought worth the notice either of them or of Johnson. V. Cotgrave, Kelliam, &c. in V. assouager.]

1. To mitigate; to soften; to allay.

Refreshing winds the summer's heats assuage,
And kindly warmth disarms the winter's rage.

Addison.

2. To appease; to pacify.

Yet is his hate, his rancour ne'er the less,
Since nought assuageth malice when 'tis told.

Fairfax.

This was necessary for the securing the people from their fears, capable of being assuaged by no other means.

Clarendon.

Shall I, t' assuage

Their brutal rage,

The regal stem destroy?

Dryden's Albion.

3. To ease; as, the medicine assuages pain.

To ASSUA'GE. v. n. To abate.

God made a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters assuaged.

Gen. viii. 1.

ASSUA'GEMENT.* n. s. [old Fr. assouagement.] Mitigation; abatement of evil.

Tell me, when shall these weary woes have end,
Or shall their ruthless torment never cease?

But all my days in pining languor spend,
Without hope of assuagement or release.

Spenser, Sonnets.

ASSUA'GER. n. s. [from assuage.] One who pacifies or appeases.

ASSUA'SIVE.* adj. [from assuage.] Softening; mitigating.

If in the breast tumultuous joys arise,

Music her soft assuasive voice applies.

Pope's St. Cecilia.

In pleasing visions, and assuasive dreams,

O soothe my soul, and teach me how to lose thee.

Johnson's Irene.

O, tell how rapturous the joy, to melt

To melody's assuasive voice.

Warton, Pleasures of Melancholy, ver. 171.

To ASSU'BJECT.* v. a. Fr. assubjectir; an old English verb, preserved in Cotgrave, which might suggest to Shakspeare the kindred word assubjugate, given by Dr. Johnson.] To make subject; to bring under; to subdue. Cotgrave.
To ASSU'BJUGATE. v. a. [subjugo, Lat.] To subject to: not in use.

*This valiant lord
 Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquir'd;
 Nor by my will assubjugate his merit,
 By going to Achilles.* Shakspeare.

ASSUEFACTION. † n. s. [assuefacio, Lat. assuefaction, old Fr.] The state of being accustomed to any thing.

Right and left, as parts inservient unto the motive faculty, are differenced by degrees from use and assuefaction, or according whereto the one grows stronger.

Brown, Vulgar Errors.

ASSUETUDE. n. s. [assuetudo, Lat.] Accustomance; custom; habit.

We see that assuetude of things hurtful, doth make them lose the force to hurt. Bacon, Natural History.

To ASSUME. v. a. [assumo, Lat.]

1. To take.

This when the various God had urg'd in vain,
 He strait assum'd his native form again. Pope.

2. To take upon one's self.

With ravish'd ears,
 The monarch hears,
Assumes the God,
 Affects to nod,

And seems to shake the spheres. Dryden.

3. To arrogate; to claim or seize unjustly.

4. To suppose something granted without proof.

In every hypothesis, something is allowed to be assumed. Boyle.

5. To apply to one's own use; to appropriate.

His Majesty might well assume the complaint and expression of king David. Clarendon.

To ASSUME. † v. n. To be arrogant; to claim more than is due.

That the king was assuming.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Times, an. 1687.

ASSU'MENT.* n. s. [Lat. assummentum, a patch, or piece set off.]

This assuement or addition Dr. Marshal says he never could find any where but in this Anglo-Saxonick translation.

Lewis's Hist. of Eng. Bibles, p. 9.

ASSU'MER. n. s. [from assume.] An arrogant man; a man who claims more than his due.

Can man be wise in any course, in which he is not safe too? But can these high assumers and pretenders to reason, prove themselves so? South.

ASSU'MING. part. adj. [from assume.] Arrogant; haughty.

His haughty looks, and his assuming air,
 The son of Isis could no longer bear. Dryden.

This makes him over-forward in business, assuming in conversation, and peremptory in answers. Collier.

ASSU'MING.* n. s. [from assume.] Presumption.

The vain assumings
 Of some, quite worthless of her [Poey's] sovereign wreaths. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

ASSUMPSIT. † n. s. [assumo, Lat.] A voluntary promise made by word, whereby a man taketh upon him to perform or pay any thing to another: It contains any verbal promise made upon consideration. Cowel.

Upon to terms, but an assumpsit. B. Jonson, Alchemist, i. 2.
ASSUMPT. \ v. a.* [Fr. assumpter, to take up from men were.] The two assumpto a high place; to take up into heaven, both of them men.] Not now in use.

The souls of such their worthies as were departed from human conversation, and were assumed into the number of their gods. Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 115.
ASSUMPT. \ n. s.* [Lat. assumptus.] That which is assumed, or supposed to be granted without proof.

The sum of all your assumpta, collected by yourself, is this. Chillingworth, Answ. to Charity maint. by Catholics, p. 60.

ASSUMPTION. † n. s. [assumptio, Lat. assumption, Fr.]

1. The act of taking any thing to one's self.

The personal descent of God himself and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, more familiarly to insinuate his pleasure to us, was an enforcement beyond all methods of wisdom. Hammond, Fundamentals.

2. The supposition, or act of supposing of any thing without further proof.

These by way of assumption, under the two general propositions, are intrinsically and naturally good or bad. Norris.

3. The thing supposed; a postulate.

Hold, says the Stoick, your assumption's wrong?
 I grant, true freedom you have well defin'd. Dryden, Juv. Sat. 10.

For the assumption, that Christ did such miraculous and supernatural works, to confirm what he said, we need only repeat the message sent by him to John the Baptist. South.

4. The taking up any person into heaven, which is supposed by the Romish church of the Blessed Virgin.

Upon the feast of the assumption of the Blessed Virgin, the pope and cardinals keep the vespers. Stillingfleet.

Adam, after a certain period of years, would have been rewarded with an assumption to eternal felicity. Wake.

5. Simply, the act of taking.

To the nutrition of the body there are two essential conditions required, assumption and retention. Howell's Letters, i. v. 9.

6. Adoption; application.

It is evident, that the prose psalms of our liturgy were chiefly consulted and copied, by the perpetual assumptions of their words and combinations; many of the stanzas are literally nothing more than the prose-verses put into rhyme. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 172.

ASSUMPTIVE. adj. [assumptivus, Lat.] That is assumed.

ASSURANCE. † n. s. [assurance, French.]

1. Certain expectation.

Though hope be, indeed, a lower and lesser thing than assurance, yet, as to all the purposes of a pious life, it may prove more useful. South.

What encouragement can be given to goodness, beyond the hopes of heaven, and the assurance of an endless felicity? Tillotson.

2. Secure confidence; trust.

What man is he, that boasts of fleshly might,
 And vain assurance of mortality,
 Which all so soon as it doth come to fight Against spiritual foes, yields by and by. Spenser, F. Q.

3. Freedom from doubt; certain knowledge;

Proof from the authority of man's judgment, is not able to work that assurance, which doth grow by a stronger proof. Hooker.

'Tis far off;

And rather like a dream, than an assurance,
 That my remembrance warrants. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The obedient, and the man of practice, shall outgrow all their doubts and ignorances, till persuasion pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assurance. South.

Hath he found, in an evil course, that comfortable assurance of God's favour, and good hopes of his future condition, which a religious life would have given him? Tillotson.

4. Firmness; undoubting steadiness.

Men whose consideration will relieve our modesty, and give us courage and assurance in the duties of our profession. Rogers.

5. Confidence; want of modesty; exemption from awe or fear.

My behaviour ill governed, gave you the first comfort; my affection, ill hid, hath given you this last assurance. Sidney.

6. Freedom from vicious shame.

Conversation, when they come into the world, will add to their knowledge and assurance. Locke.

7. Ground of confidence; security; sufficient reason for trust or belief.

The nature of desire itself is no easier to receive belief, than it is hard to ground belief; for as desire is glad to embrace the first shew of comfort, so is desire desirous of perfect assurance. Sidney.

As the conquest was but slight and superficial, so the pope's donation to the Irish submissions were but weak and fickle assurances. Davies on Ireland.

None of woman born

Shall harm Macbeth.

— Then live, Macduff; what need I fear of thee?

But yet I'll make assurance double sure,

And take a bond of fate; Thou shalt not live. Shakspeare.

I must confess your offer is the best;

And let your father make her the assurance,

She is your own, else you must pardon me,

If you should die before him, where's her dower? Shakspeare.

An assurance being passed through for a competent fine, hath come back again by reason of some oversight. Bacon.

8. Spirit; intrepidity.

They, like resolute men, stood in the face of the breach with more assurance than the wall itself. Knolles.

With all th' assurance innocence can bring,

Fearless without, because secure within;

Arm'd with my courage, unconcern'd I see

This pomp, a shame to you, a pride to me. Dryden.

9. Sanguineness; readiness to hope.

This is not the grace of hope, but a good natural assurance or confidence, which Aristotle observes young men to be full of, and old men not so inclined to. Hammond.

10. Testimony of credit.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding,

And from some knowledge and assurance of you,

Offer this office. Shakspeare, K. L.

We have as great assurance that there is a God, as we could expect to have, supposing that he were. Tillotson.

11. Conviction.

Such an assurance of things as will make men careful to avoid a lesser danger, ought to awaken men to avoid a greater. Tillotson.

12. [In theology.] Security with respect to a future state; certainty of acceptance with God.

13. The same with insurance. See INSURANCE.

14. Security to make good the loss; "a taking of assurance or sufficient surety," Barret's Alvaric.

He said, Sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph; he would not take his bond and yours; he liked not the security. Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. p. 2.

And for your more assurance you shall have

What obligation you yourself will crave.

Sir J. Harrington's Epigrams.

To ASSURE† v. a. [asserere, Fr. from asscurare, low Latin. Formerly written asure. "I assure you I liked her so ill, and so far contrary to what she was praised, that I was woe that ever she came into England." K. Henry VIII. in Burnet, Hist. Ref. vol. i. Rec. p. 197.]

1. To give confidence by a firm promise.

So when he had assured them with many words, that he would restore them without hurt, according to the agreement, they let him go for the saving of their brethren. 2 Mac. xii.

2. To secure to another; to make firm.

So irresistible an authority cannot be reflected on, without the most awful reverence, even by those whose piety assures its favour to them. Rogers.

3. To make confident; to exempt from doubt or fear; to confer security.

And hereby we know, that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him. 1 John, iii. 19.

I revive

At this last sight; assured that man shall live With all the creatures, and their seed preserve. Milton.

4. To make secure: with of;

But what on earth can long abide in state?

Or who can him assure of happy day?

And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of

Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,

In all my lands and leases whatsoever. Shakspeare.

5. Without of.

The sea-faring man will, in a storm, cast over some of his goods, to save and assure the rest. Bacon, Sp. in Parl. Eliz. 39.

6. To affiancé; to betroth.

This diviner laid claim to me, called me Dromio, swore I was assured to her. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

ASSURED. part. adj. [from assure.]

1. Certain; indubitable; not doubted.

It's an assured experience, that flint laid about the bottom of a tree makes it prosper. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Certain; not doubting.

Young princes, close your hands,

— And your lips too; for, I am well assured,

That I did so, when I was first assur'd. Shakspeare, K. John.

As when by night the glass

Of Galileo, less assur'd, observes

Imagin'd lands, and regions, in the moon. Milton.

3. Immodest; viciously confident.

ASSUREDLY. adv. [from assured.] Certainly; indubitably.

They promis'd me eternal happiness,

And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel

I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall assuredly. Shakspeare.

God is absolutely good, and so, assuredly, the cause of all that is good; but, of any thing that is evil, he is no cause at all. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Assuredly he will stop our liberty, till we restore him his worship. South.

ASSUREDNESS.† n. s. [from assured.] The state of being assured; certainty.

That which by Brocardus hath been delivered touching the holy land in particular, is by Columella in his books of Husbandry with no less assuredness averred, touching the earth in general. Hakewill's Apology, p. 142.

I being verily mad with anger, the Lord Bruce should thirst after my life with a kind of assuredness. Sir E. Sackville, Guard. No. 133.

ASSURER. n. s. [from assure.]

1. He that gives assurance.

2. He that gives security to make good any loss.

To ASSWA'GE. See ASSUAGE.

ASTERISK. n. s. [Gr. ἀστέριον.] A mark in printing or writing, in form of a little star; as *.

He also published the translation of the Septuagint by itself, having first compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what was redundant. Grew.

ASTERISM.† n. s. [Gr. ἀστέρις.]

1. A constellation.

Poetry had filled the skies with asterisms, and histories belonging to them; and then astrology devises the feigned virtues and influences of each. Bentley, Serm.

2. An asterisk, or mark. This is a very improper use.

Dwell particularly on passages with an asterisk; for the observations which follow such a note, will give you a clear light. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

ASTERITES. * n. s. A starry stone. See ASCROITE.

ASTERON. adv. [from a and stern.] In the hinder part of the ship; behind the ship.

A S T

The galleys give her side, and turns her prow,
While those astern descending down the steep,
Thro' gaping waves behold the boiling deep. Dryden.

To ASTERT.† v. a. [a word used by Spenser, as it seems, for start, or startle, Dr. Johnson says; but Spenser adopted it from our early writers: "But that ne shall not me asterte," Gower, Conf. Am. B. i. "Not one of them all our hands shall astert," Myst. of Candlemas Day, 1512. Yet the glossary to the Shepherd's Calendar, from which the example is here taken, explains astert as meaning to befal unawares.] To terrify; to startle; to fright.

We deem of death, as doom of ill desert;

But knew we fools what it us brings until,

Die would we daily, once it to expert;

No danger there the shepherd can astert.

Spenser, S. C.

ASTHMA. n. s. [Gr. ἀσθμα.] A frequent, difficult, and short respiration, joined with a hissing sound and a cough, especially in the night time, and when the body is in a prone posture; because then the contents of the lower belly bear so against the diaphragm, as to lessen the capacity of the breast, whereby the lungs have less room to move.

Quincy.

An asthma is the inflation of the membranes of the lungs, and of the membranes covering the muscles of the thorax.

Floyer on the Humours.

ASTHMA'TICAL. } adj. [from asthma.] Troubled with

ASTHMA'TICK. } an asthma.

In asthmatical persons, though the lungs be very much stuffed with tough phlegm, yet the patient may live some months, if not some years.

Boyle.

After drinking, our horses are most asthmatical; and, for avoiding the watering of them, we wet their hay.

Floyer.

ASTHMA'TICK.* n. s. [Fr. asthmatique.] A person troubled with an asthma.

Asthmatics cannot bear the air of hot rooms, and cities where there is a great deal of fuel burnt.

Arbutnot on Air.

ASTHENICK.* adj. [Fr. asthenique, Gr. ἀσθενής.] Feeble; without power or force.

ASTHENO'LOGY.* n. s. [Gr. ἀσθενία and λόγος.] A description of weakness.

To ASTIPULATE.* v. n. [Lat. astipulari.] To agree; to consent to.

Diet.

Several of Hippocrates' aphorisms, which alone are left in credit with these men, do astipulate the same.

Robinson's Endow, p. 50.

ASTIPULATION.* n. s. [Lat. astipulation.] Agreement, concurrence.

As for that glorious shew of antiquity wherewith C. E. hopes to blear his readers eyes, gracing himself herein with the astipulation of our reverend Jewell; I need not return any other answer than of his Beatus Rhenanus.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, ii. 8.

To ASTONE.* } v. a. [Fr. estonner, Sax. ætuman,

To ASTONY. } to stun, to astonish. From this verb comes the participle astonied, which, Dr. Johnson observes, is used in the version of the Bible for astonished; and he cites one passage, when indeed he might have cited several. Mr. Boucher says, that there is no instance of this word being used actively. But he had forgotten Spenser, and had not looked into Hubert's old Dictionary, where "To ASTONY," is defined, "to fear one, terrere, terrorem alicui inferre." The verb astony, is also in Minshew, and in Bullokar's Expos. of Hard Words, ed. 1656. in V. Braunm. To ASTONE, is found in Chaucer.] To terrify; to confound with amazement.

A S T

No wonder is though that she be astoned,
To see so great a guest come in that place,
She never was to none such guests woned.

Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, v. 8213, ed. Tyrwhitt.

The trembling fowl dismay'd with dreadful sight

Of death, the which them almost overtooke,

Do hide themselves from her [the falcon's] astonying looke.

Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 54.

Many were astonied at thee.

Isaiah, lii. 14.

Nebuchadnezzar the king was astonied, and rose up in haste.

Dan. iii. 24.

He reeled astonied; and withal the helmet fell off, he remaining bareheaded.

Sidney, Arc. i. 23.

Adam, soon as he heard

The fatal trespass done by Eve, amaz'd,

Astonied stood and blank.

Milton, P. L. ix. 890.

ASTONIEDNESS.* n. s. [from the verb.] The state of being astonished. Obsolete.

Astoniedness or dulness of the mind, not perceiving what is done.

Barret, in V. Benumbing.

To ASTONISH.† v. a. [estonner, Fr. from attonitus, Lat. Dr. Johnson says. But perhaps it is rather from the Sax. ætuman. See ASTONE.] To confound with some sudden passion, as with fear or wonder; to amaze; to surprise; to stun.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,

When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send

Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.

Shakespeare.

Astonish'd at the voice, he stood amaz'd,

And all around with inward horror gaz'd.

Addison.

A genius universal as his theme,

Astonishing as chaos.

Thomson.

ASTONISHINGLY.* adv. [from astonish.] In a surprising manner.

Events astonishingly happy.

Bp. Fleetwood, Sermon before Q. Anne.

We crossed a large tract of land astonishingly fruitful.

Swinburne, Spain, l. c. 14.

ASTONISHINGNESS. n. s. [from astonish.] Of a nature to excite astonishment.

ASTONISHMENT.† n. s. [estonnement, Fr.]

1. Amazement; confusion of mind from fear or wonder.

We found, with no less wonder to us, than astonishment to themselves, that they were the two valiant and famous brothers.

Sidney.

She esteemed this as much above his wisdom, as astonishment is beyond bare admiration.

South.

2. Cause or matter of astonishment.

Some impostors and counterfeits have been able to writhe and cast their bodies into strange forms and motions; yea, and others to bring themselves into trances and astonishments.

Bacon, Discourse to Sir H. Saville.

Thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word among all nations, whither the Lord shall lead thee.

Deuteron. xxviii. 37.

To ASTOUND.† v. a. [estonner, Fr. ætuman, Sax.

Mr. Horne Tooke has here chosen the French etymology, but in respect to this word there can be little question I think of its Saxon origin. I might also refer to ætundian, to grieve, from the Icel. stunde. The Prompt. Parv. defines the word by qualio, to shake. Thomson uses it, with good effect, as a neuter verb; though Johnson thought the word nearly obsolete.] To astonish; to confound with fear or wonder.

These thoughts may startle well, but not astound

The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended

By a strong siding champion, conscience.

Milton, Comus.

The third is your soldier's face, a menacing and astounding face, that looks broad and big.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Though now they lie.

Grovelling and prostrate on yon lake of fire,
As we ere while, astounded and amaz'd. Milton, P. L. i. 281.
TO ASTOUND.* v. n. [Sax. ætunian.] To shake; to stun.

At first heard solemn o'er the verge of heaven
The tempest growls; but as it nearer comes,
And rolls its awful burden on the wind,
The lightnings flash a larger curve, and more
The noise astounds. Thomson, Sum. v. 1137.

ASTRADLE. adv. [from a and straddle.] With one's legs across any thing. Dict.

ASTRAGAL. n. s. [ἀστράγαλος, the ankle, or ankle-bone.] A little round member, in the form of a ring or bracelet, serving as an ornament at the tops and bottoms of columns. Builder's Dict.

We see none of that ordinary confusion, which is the result of quarter rounds of the astragal, and I know not how many other intermingled particulars. Spectator.

ASTRAL.* adj. [Fr. astral, from astrum, Lat.] Starry; belonging to the stars.

Some astral forms I must invoke by pray'r,
Fram'd all of purest atoms of the air;
Not in their natures simply good or ill;
But most subservient to bad spirits will. Dryden.
Some astral concordance or hidden harmony of spirits.

More, Notes upon Psychozöia, p. 361.

ASTRAY.* adv. [Formerly written astrayed.] "They wenten about astraid," Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7. the past participle ἀστράζειν, as Mr. Tooke has observed, of the Sax. ætþagan, to scatter, to stray.] Out of the right way.

May seem the wain was very evil led,
When such an one had guiding of the way,
That knew not, whether right he went, or else astray. Spenser.
You run astray, for whilst we talk of Ireland, you rip up the original of Scotland. Spenser on Ireland.

Like one that had been led astray
Through the heaven's wide pathless way. Milton.

TO ASTRIC.T. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To contract by applications, in opposition to relax; a word not so much used as constrict.

The solid parts were to be relaxed or astricted, as they let the humours pass either in too small or too great quantities. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ASTRICT.* adj. [Lat. astrictus.] Compendious.
An epitaph is a superscription, or an astrict pithy diagram. Wecker, Funeral Mon.

ASTRICTIO. n. s. [astrictio, Lat.] The act or power of contracting the parts of the body by applications.

Astriction is in a substance that hath a virtual cold; and it worketh partly by the same means that cold doth. Bacon.

This virtue requireth an astriction, but such an astriction as is not grateful to the body; for a pleasing astriction doth rather bind in the nerves than expel them; and therefore such astriction is found in things of a harsh taste. Bacon.

Lenitive substances are proper for dry uterularian constitutions, who are subject to astriction of the belly and the piles. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ASTRICTIVE.* adj. [from astrict.] Stiptick; of a binding quality. Dict.

Bloodstone [is] a stone growing in Ethiopia and Arabia; of nature astrictive, stopping any issue of blood. Bullock, Expos. of Hard Words.

ASTRICTORY. adj. [astrictorius, Lat.] Astringent; apt to bind. Dict.

ASTRIDE. adv. [from a and stride.] With the legs open.

To lay their native arms aside,
Their modesty, and ride astride. Hudibras.
I saw a place, where the Rhone is so straitened between two rocks, that a man may stand astride upon both at once. Boyle.

ASTRIFEROUS. adj. [astrifer, Lat.] Bearing or having stars. Dict.

ASTRIGEROUS. adj. [astriger, Lat.] Carrying stars. Dict.

TO ASTRINGE. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To press by contraction; to make the parts draw together.

Tears are caused by a contraction of the spirits of the brain; which contraction, by consequence, astringeth the moisture of the brain, and thereby sendeth tears into the eyes. Bacon.

ASTRINGENCY. n. s. [from astringe.] The power of contracting the parts of the body; opposed to the power of relaxation.

Astriction prohibiteth dissolution; as, in medicines, a tringents inhibit putrefaction: and, by astringency, some small quantity of oil of vitriol will keep fresh water long from putrefying. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Acid, acrid, austere, and bitter substances, by their astringency, create horror, that is, stimulate the fibres. Arbuthnot.

ASTRINGENT. adj. [astringens, Lat.] Binding; contracting; opposed to laxative: it is used sometimes of tastes which seem to contract the mouth.

Astringent medicines are binding, which act by the asperity of their particles, whereby they corrugate the membranes, and make them draw up closer. Quincy.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures, for it is sweet and yet astringent. Bacon.

The juice is very astriquent, and therefore of slow motion.

What diminisheth sensible perspiration, encreaseth the insensible; for that reason a strengthening and astringent diet often conduceth to this purpose. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ASTRINGENT.* n. s. [from the adjective.] An astringent medicine.

In medicines, astringents inhibit putrefaction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

ASTROGRAPHY. n. s. [from ἀστρον and γραφία.] The science of describing the stars. Dict.

ASTROITE.* n. s. [Fr. astroite, Gr. ἀστέριος, starry, from ἀστρον.] A stone, sparkling like a star.

In the arable grounds towards Barton, lying on a bed of stone, has been found a species of the astroite, or starry-stone, very beautiful, deeply intagliated or engraven like a seal.

Warren, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 25.

ASTROLABE.* n. s. [Fr. astrolabe, of ἀστρον and λαβειν, to take.]

1. An instrument chiefly used for taking the altitude of the pole, the sun or stars, at sea.

Liv'd Tycho now, struck with this ray, which shone
More bright i' the morning than others beam at noon,
He'd take his astrolabe, and seek out here
What new star 'twas did gild our hemisphere.

Dryden, Death of Lord Hastings, ver. 45.

2. A stereographick projection of the circles of the sphere upon the plain of some great circle.

Chambers.

She sente for him, and he came;
With him his astrolabe he came,
With points and circles merveilous,
Which was of fine gold precious.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

ASTROLOGER. n. s. [astrologus, Lat. from ἀστρον and λόγος.]

1. One that, supposing the influences of the stars to have a causal power, professes to foretell or discover events depending on those influences.

Not unlike that which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other. Wotton.

A happy genius is the gift of nature: it depends on the influence of the stars, say the astrologers; on the organs of the body, say the naturalists; it is the particular gift of heaven, say the divines, both christians and heathens. Dryden.

Astrologers, that future fates foreshew. Pope.

I never heard a finer satire against lawyers, than that of astrologers, when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a suit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant. Swift.

2. It was anciently used for one that understood or explained the motions of the planets, without including prediction.

A worthy astrologer, by perspective glasses, hath found in the stars many things unknown to the ancients. Raleigh.

ASTROLOGIAN. n. s. [from astrology.] The same with astrologer.

The twelve houses of heaven, in the form which astrologians Camden.

The stars, they say, cannot dispose,
No more than can the astrologian. Hudibras.

ASTROLOGICAL. } adj. [from astrology.]
ASTROLOGICK. }

1. Professing astrology.

Some seem a little astrological, as when they warn us from places of malign influence. Wotton.

No astrologick wizard honour gains,
Who has not oft been banish'd, or in chains. Dryden.

2. Relating to astrology.

Astrological prayers seem to me to be built on as good reason as the predictions. Stillingfleet.

The poetical fables are more ancient than the astrological influences, that were not known to the Greeks till after Alexander the Great. Bentley.

ASTROLOGICALLY. adv. [from astrology.] In an astrological manner; with an astrological meaning.

Plutarch interprets astrologically that tale of Mars and Venus. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 452.

Some are astrologically well disposed, who are morally highly vicious. Brown, Christ. Mor. ii. 7.

In Lambeth Marsh at the same time lived one Captain Bubb, who resolved horary questions astrologically. Lilly, Hist. p. 36.

To ASTROLOGIZE. v. n. [from astrology.] To practise astrology.

ASTROLOGY. n. s. [astrologia, Lat.] The practice of foretelling things by the knowledge of the stars; an art now generally exploded, as irrational and false.

I know the learned think of the art of astrology, that the stars do not force the actions or wills of men. Swift.

ASTRONOMER. n. s. [from ἀστρον, a star, and νόμος, a rule or law.] One that studies the celestial motions, and the rules by which they are governed.

The motions of astronomers under kings, ought to be like the motions, as the astronomers speak of, in the inferior orbs. Bacon.

Astronomers no longer doubt of the motion of the planets about the sun. Locke.

The old and new astronomers in vain
Attempt the heav'nly motions to explain. Blackmore.

ASTRONOMICAL. } adj. [from astronomy.] Belonging
ASTRONOMICK. }

Our forefathers marking certain mutations to happen in the sun's progress through the zodiack, they register and set them down in their astronomical canons. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Can he not pass an astronomick line,
Or dreads the sun th' imaginary sign,
That he should ne'er advance to either pole? Blackmore.

ASTRONOMICALLY. adv. [from astronomical.] In an astronomical manner.

Images astronomically placed under certain constellations to preserve from several inconveniences.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iii. 1.
This was the figure of the heavens when they were first formed, the same being astronomically calculated and erected according to Tycho's tables.

To ASTRONOMIZE. v. n. [from astronomy.] To study astronomy.

The old ascetick Christians found a paradise in a desert, and with little converse on earth held a conversation in heaven; thus they astronomized in caves; and, though they beheld not the stars, had the glory of heaven before them.

Brown, Christ. Mor. ii. 9.

ASTRONOMY. n. s. [ἀστρονομία, from ἀστρον, a star, and νόμος, a law, or rule.] A mixed mathematical science teaching the knowledge of the celestial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, distances, periods, eclipses, and order. Pythagoras taught that the earth and planets turn round the sun, which stands immoveable in the center. From the time of Pythagoras, astronomy sunk into neglect, till it was revived by the Ptolemys, kings of Egypt, and the Saracens brought it from Africa to Spain; and restored this science to Europe. Chambers.

To this must be added the understanding of the globes, and the principles of geometry and astronomy. Cowley.

ASTROSCOPY. n. s. [ἀστροσκοπία, a star, and σκοπέω, to view.] Observation of the stars. Dict.

ASTRO-THEOLOGY. n. s. [from astrum, a star, and theologia, divinity.] Divinity founded on the observation of the celestial bodies.

That the diurnal and annual revolutions are the motions of the terraqueous globe, not of the sun, I shew in the preface of my Astro-Theology. Derham, Physico-Theology.

ASTRUT.* adv. [from a and strut. See STRUT.] This is an useful old Eng. word, and is found in the Prompt. Parv. of 1510, where it is defined strowingly, and translated turgidè. In a swelling manner.

To ASTU'N.* v. a. [Sax. ætunan.] To stun.

The guns astun, with sounds' rebounds from shore,
The soldiers' ears. Mir. for Mag. Niccolò's Eng. Eliz. p. 863.

On the solid ground
He fell rebounding; breathless, and astunn'd,
His trunk extended lay. Somerville, Rural Games, c. ii.

ASTUTE.* adj. [Lat. astutus, Fr. astut.] Cunning; penetrating; sly.

We terme those most astute, which are most versute.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. p. 168.

ASU'NDER.* adv. [Goth. sundr, sundro, ajundpan, Sax.] Apart; separately; not together.

Two indirect lines, the further that they are drawn out, the further they go asunder. Spenser on Ireland.

Sense thinks the planets spheres not much asunder;
What tells us then their distance is so far? Davies.

Greedy hope to find
His wish, and best advantage, us asunder. Milton, P. L.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
Seeks hid advantage to betray us worse;
Which, when asunder, will not prove too hard,
For both together are each other's guard. Dryden.

Borne far asunder by the tides of men,
Like adamant and steel they meet again. Dryden, Fables.

All this metallick matter, both that which continued asunder, and in single corpuscles, and that which was amassed and conereted into modules, subsided. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

ASWO'ON.* adv. [Sax. apwunan, to swoon; apwahan, to faint, apwoud, languid, weakened. See Lye's Sax. Goth. Dict. and Tooke's Divers. of Purley, vol. i. p. 471.] In a swoon.

And with this worde she fell to grounde
Aswoone, and there she laid astounde. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 4.

ASY'LUM. n. s. [Lat. from the Gr. ἀσυλον, from α, not, and συλέω, to pillage.] A place out of which he that has fled to it, may not be taken; a sanctuary; a refuge; a place of retreat and security.

So sacred was the church to some, that it had the right of an asylum, or sanctuary. Ayliffe, Parergon.

ASYMMETRICAL. * adj. [from asymmetry.] Not agreeing.

Long before this time the church had become asymmetrical.
Moke, Against Idolatry, ch. 8.

ASYMMETRICAL. * adj. [from asymmetry.] Differing. Asymmetrical or unsociable, that is, such as we see not how to reconcile with other things evidently and confessedly true.
Boyle, in Norris on Reason and Faith, ch. 3.

ASYMMETRY. n. s. [from a, without, and συμμετρία, symmetry.]

1. Contrariety to symmetry; disproportion.

The asymmetries of the brain, as well as the deformities of the legs of face, may be rectified in time. Grew.

2. This term is sometimes used in mathematicks, for what is more usually called incommensurability; when between two quantities there is no common measure.

ASYMPTOTE. n. s. [from a, priv., συν, with, and πίσις, to fall; which never meet; incoincident.] Asymptotes are right lines, which approach nearer and nearer to some curve; but which, though they and their curve were infinitely continued, would never meet; and may be conceived as tangents to their curves at an infinite distance. Chambers.

Asymptote lines, though they may approach still nearer together, till they are nearer than the least assignable distance, yet, being still produced infinitely, will never meet. Grew.

ASYMPTOTICAL. adj. [from asymptote.] Curves are said to be asymptotical, when they continually approach, without a possibility of meeting.

ASYNDETON. † n. s. [ἀσύνδετον, of a, priv. and σύνδεσις, to bind together.] A figure in grammar, when a conjunction copulative is omitted in a sentence; as in veni, vidi, vici, et is left out.

Asyndeton is a figure, which keeps the parts of our speech together without help of any conjunctions.—“Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men.” 1 Thess. v. 14. “Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils.” S. Matt. x. 8. When matters require brevity, this figure is chiefly to be used, or when we signify the quick dispatch of a deed.

Peachum's Garden of Eloquence, sign. I. iiii.

AT. † prep. [Goth. at, wt, Saxon.]

1. At before a place, notes the nearness of the place; as, a man is at the house before he is in it.

This custom continued among many, to say their prayers at fountains. Stillingfleet.

2. At before a word signifying time, notes the co-existence of the time with the event: the word time is sometimes included in the adjective: we commonly say at a minute, at an hour, on a day, in a month.

We thought it at the very first a sign of cold affection.

Hooker.

How frequent to desert him, and at last

To heap ingratitude on worthiest deeds. Milton.

At the same time that the storm beats upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison.

We made no efforts at all, where we could have most weakened the common enemy, and, at the same time, enriched ourselves. Swift.

3. At before a causal word signifies nearly the same as with, noting that the event accompanies or immediately succeeds the action of the cause.

At his touch,

Such sanctifying hath Heav'n giv'n his hand,
They presently amend. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,

If that young Arthur be not gone already,

Ev'n at this news he dies. Shakespeare, King John.

VOL. I.

Much at the sight was Adam in his heart

High o'er their heads a mouldering rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast. Dryden.

4. At before a superlative adjective implies in the state; as, at best, in the state of most perfection, &c.

Consider any man as to his personal powers, they are not great; for, at greatest, they must still be limited. South.

We bring into the world with us a poor, needy, uncertain life, short at the longest, and unquiet at the best. Temple.

5. At before a person, is seldom used otherwise than ludicrously; as, he longed to be at him, that is, to attack him.

6. At before a substantive sometimes signifies the particular condition or circumstances of the person; as, at peace, in a state of peace.

Under pardon,

You are much more at task for want of wisdom,

Than prais'd for harmless mildness. Shakespeare.

It bringeth the treasure of a realm into a few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end of the game most of the money will be in the box. Bacon.

Hence walk'd the fiend at large in spacious field. Milton.

The rest, for whom no lot is yet decreed,

May run in pastures, and at pleasure feed. Dryden, Virgil.

Deserted, at his utmost need,

By those his former bounty fed. Dryden, St. Cecilia.

What hinder'd either in their native soil,

At ease to reap the harvest of their toil. Dryden, Fables.

Wise men are sometimes over-borne, when they are taken at a disadvantage. Collier of Confidence.

These have been the maxims they have been guided by: take these from them, and they are perfectly at a loss, their compass and pole-star then are gone, and their understanding is perfectly at a nonplus. Locke.

One man manages four horses at once, and leaps from the back of another at full speed. Pope's Essay on Homer's Battles.

They will not let me be at quiet in my bed, but pursue me to my very dreams. Swift.

7. At before a substantive sometimes marks employment or attention.

We find some arrived to that sottishness, as to own roundly what they would be at. South.

How d'ye find yourself, says the doctor to his patient? A little while after he is at it again, with a pray how d'ye find your body? L'Estrange.

But she who well enough knew what,

Before he spoke, he would be at,

Pretended not to apprehend. Hudibras.

The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope.

8. At is sometimes the same with furnished with, after the French a.

Infuse his breast with magnanimity,

And make him naked foil a man at arms. Shakespeare.

9. At sometimes notes the place where any thing is, or acts.

Your husband is at hand, I hear his trumpet. Shakespeare

He that in tracing the vessels began at the heart, though he thought not at all of a circulation; yet made he the first true step towards the discovery. Grew.

To all you ladies now at land

We men at sea indite. Buchurst.

Their various news I heard, of love and strife,

Of storms at sea, and travels on the shore. Pope.

10. At sometimes signifies in immediate consequence of.

Impeachments at the prosecution of the house of commons, have received their determination in the house of lords. Black.

11. At marks sometimes the effect proceeding from an act.

Rest in this tomb, rais'd at thy husband's cost. Dryden.
Tom has been at the charge of a penny upon this occasion. Addison.

Those may be of use to confirm by authority, what they will not be at the trouble to deduce by reasoning. Arbutnot.

12. At sometimes is nearly the same as in, noting situation; as, he was at the bottom, or top of the hill.

She hath been known to come at the head of these rascals, and beat her lover. Swift.

13. At sometimes marks the occasion, like on.

Others, with more helpful care,
Cry'd out aloud, Beware, brave youth, beware!
At this he turn'd, and, as the bull drew near,
Shunn'd, and receiv'd him on his pointed spear. Dryden.

14. At sometimes seems to signify in the power of, or obedient to.

But thou of all the kings, Jove's care below,
Art least at my command, and most my foe. Dryden.

15. At sometimes notes the relation of a man to an action.

He who makes pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest. Collier of Friendship.

16. At sometimes imports the manner of an action.

One warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire all at once, and never intermits his heat. Dryden, Fables.

Not with less ruin than the Baján mole,
At once comes tumbling down. Dryden, Æneid.

17. At, like the French chez, means sometimes application to, or dependence on, Dr. Johnson says; but Mr. Tooke denies the assimilation of chez.

The worst authors might endeavour to please us, and in that endeavour deserve something at our hands. Pope.

18. At all. In any manner; in any degree.

Nothing more true than what you once let fall,
Most women have no characters at all. Pope.

- A'TABAL. n. s. A kind of labour used by the Moors.

Children shall beat our atabals and drums,
And all the noisy trades of war no more
Shall wake the peaceful morn. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

- ATARAXIA. } n. s. [Ἀταξία.] Exemption from

- A'TARAXY. } vexation; tranquillity.

The scepticks affected an indifferant equiponderous neutrality, as the only means to their ataraxia, and freedom from passionate disturbances. Glanville, Scepis.

- A'TAXY. * n. s. [Gr. ἀταξία, old Fr. ataxie.] Disturbance; confusion.

They [the fallen angels] being all embodied spirits, that is, vitally united to matter, they must of necessity be capable both of pain and pleasure, the sense of which is more or less acute and vigorous according to either the tenuity or grossness of their bodies; and by consequence they are liable and obnoxious to harm and injury from those of their own society; which, considering the mischievousness of their natures and dispositions, (each one's pastie being the grand rule and measure of his actions,) would certainly breed an infinite ataxy and confusion amongst them, and at last the ruin and destruction of their kingdom, if not prevented by some external restraint and discipline. Hallywell's Metamorphosis, p. 16.

Three ways of church-government I have heard of, and no more; the Episcopal, the Presbyterial, and that new-born bastard Independency: "Non datur quantum." The last of these is nothing but a confounding ataxy, rent upon rent, and a schism of schisms, until all church community be torn into atoms. Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 141.

- ATE. The preterite of eat. See To EAT.

And by his side, his steed the grassy forage ate. Spenser.
Even our first parents ate themselves out of paradise; and Job's children ate kettled and feasted together often. South.

- ATELLAN. * n. s. [old Fr. atellanes, espèce de pièce dramatique, Lacombe; from Atella, an ancient town of Campania in Italy, where farces, differing from comedy only by greater licentiousness, originated.] Dramatick representation, satirical or licentious.

Many old poets—did write fescennines, atellans, and lascivious songs. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 414.
Love-stories, plays, comedies, atellans, jigs. Ibid. p. 542.

- ATELLAN. * adj. [Lat. atellanus.] Relating to the dramas at Atella.

Their Fescennin, and Atellan way of wit was in early days prohibited. Shaftesbury.

- ATHANA'SIAN. * n. s. He who espoused, in the early ages of Christianity, the doctrine and opinions of Athanasius.

Upon the revival of the Arian controversy in Gaul, under the influence of the Burgundian kings, it was obvious to call one side Athanasians, and the other side Arians; and so also to name the orthodox faith the Athanasian faith, as the other Arian. Waterland, Hist. of the Athan. Creed.

- ATHANA'SIAN. * adj. Relating to the Creed of St. Athanasius, as it is denominated in our Liturgy; and to the principles of that person.

About the year 570, it [the Creed] became famous enough to be commented upon, like the Lord's Prayer, and Apostles' Creed; and together with them. All this while, and perhaps for several years lower, it had not yet acquired the name of the Athanasian Faith, but was simply styled the Catholic Faith. But before 670, Athanasius's admired name came in to recommend and adorn it; being in itself also an excellent system of the Athanasian principles of the Trinity and Incarnation, in opposition chiefly to Arians, Macedonians, and Apollinarians. Waterland, Hist. of the Athan. Creed.

- ATHA'NOI. n. s. [a chymical term, borrowed from ἀθάνατος; or, as others think, תנור.] A digesting furnace, to keep heat for some time; so that it may be augmented or diminished at pleasure, by opening or shutting some apertures made on purpose with sliders over them, called registers. Quincy.

- A'THEISM. n. s. [from atheist. It is only of two syllables in poetry.] The disbelief of a God.

God never wrought miracles to convince atheism, because his ordinary works convince it. Bacon.

It is the common interest of mankind, to punish all those who would seduce men to atheism. Tillotson.

- A'THEIST. n. s. [Gr. ἀθεῖς, without God.] One that denies the existence of God.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame,
Ignobly! to the trains, and to the smiles
Of these fair atheists. Milton, P. I.

Though he were really a speculative atheist, yet if he would but proceed rationally, he could not however be a practical atheist, nor live without God in this world. South.

Atheist, use thine eyes,
And having view'd the order of the skies,
Think, if thou canst, that matter blindly hurl'd,
Without a guide, should frame this wondrous world. Creech.
No atheist, as such, can be a true friend, an affectionate relation, or a loyal subject. Bentley.

- A'THEIST. adj. Atheistical; denying God.

Nor stood unmindful Abdiel to annoy
The atheist crew. Milton, P. I.

- ATHEISTICAL. adj. [from atheist.] Given to atheism; impious.

Men are atheistical, because they are first vicious; and question the truth of Christianity, because they hate the practice. South.

- ATHEISTICALLY. adv. [from atheistical.] In an atheistical manner.

Is it not enormous, that a divine, hearing a great sinner talk atheistically, and scoff profanely at religion, should, instead of vindicating the truth, tacitly approve the scoffing? South.
I cutreat such as are atheistically inclined to consider these things. Tillotson.

- ATHEISTICALNESS. n. s. [from atheistical.] The quality of being atheistical.

Lord, purge out of all hearts profaneness and atheisticalness. Hammond, Fund.

ATHEISTICK. adj. [from atheist.] Given to atheism.

This argument demonstrated the existence of a Deity, and convinced the atheistick gainers. Bay on the Creation.

To ATHEIZE. * v. n. [from Gr. ἀθεῖν.] To talk or argue like an unbeliever.

All manner of atheists whatsoever, and those of them who most pretend to reason and philosophy, may in some sense be justly styled both enthusiasts and fanatics: Forasmuch as they are not led, or carried into this way of atheizing by any clear dictates of their reason or understanding; but only by an εὐνοῦλον, a certain blind and irrational impetus.

Cudworth, Int. Sys. p. 134.

ATHEL, ATHELING, ADEL, and ÆTHEL. from adel, noble, Germ. So Æthelred is noble for counsel; Æthelard, a noble genius; Æthelbert, eminently noble; Æthelward, a noble protector.

Gibson's Camden.

ATHEOLOGIAN. * n. s. [from a and theologian.] One who is the opposite to a theologian.

They of your society, [Jesuits,] as they took their original from a soldier, so they are the only atheologians, whose heads entertain no other object but the tumult of realms; whose doctrine is nothing but confusion and bloodshed.

Hayward's Answ. to Doleman, ch. 9.

ATHEOUS. † adj. [Gr. ἄθεος.] The word, expressing the same thing, was athcal, till the beginning of the seventeenth century. See Quodlibets of Religion and State, 4to. 1662, in which it repeatedly occurs. To Bishop Hall, and to Milton, the establishment of atheous, more consonant to the etymology, belongs.] Atheistick; godless.

Thy Father, who is holy, wise, and pure,

Suffers the hypocrite or atheous priest

To tread his sacred courts.

Milton, P. R.

A whole year was found little enough for the wife to mourn for her husband departed; and so is still amongst the very Chinese, though atheous Pagans.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. iv. 7.

That monster of impious sacrilege, of atheous profaneness.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

ATHEROMA. n. s. [ἀθήρωμα, from ἀθήρω, pap or pulse.] A species of wen, which neither causes pain, discolours the skin, nor yields easily to the touch.

If the matter forming them, resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if it be like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, or a suety substance, steatoma. Sharp.

ATHEROMATOUS. adj. [from atheroma.] Having the qualities of an atheroma, or curdy wen.

Feeling the matter fluctuating, I thought it atheromatous.

ATHIRST. † adv. [from a and thirst.] Thirsty; in want of drink.

When thou art athirst, go unto the vessels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn. Ruth, ii. 9.

When saw we thee an-hungred, or athirst? St. Matt. xxv. 44.

With scanty measure then supply their food;

And when athirst restrain them from the flood.

Dryden.

ATHLETE. * n. s. [Gr. ἄθλητης.] A contender for victory.

A. Smith, Theory of Mor. Sent.

ATHLETICK. † adj. [Fr. athletique, Lat. athleta, Gr. ἄθλητης, a wrestler.]

1. Belonging to wrestling.

The athletick diet was of pulse, alphonon, maza, barley, and water; whereby they were advantaged sometimes to an exquisite state of health.

Sir T. Brown's Misc. Tracts, p. 17.

For the judiciary combats, as also for common athletick exercises, they [the Goths] formed an amphitheatrical circus of rude stones: "quædam [saxa] circos claudabant, in quibus gigantes et pugiles quædam strenuè decertabant." Worm. p. 62.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. i. Diss. 1.

2. Strong of body; vigorous; lusty; robust.

Seldom shall one see in rich families that athletick soundness and vigour of constitution, which is seen in cottages, where nature is cook, and necessity caterer. South.

Science distinguishes a man of honour from one of those athletick brutes, whom undeservedly we call heroes. Dryden.

ATHWART. prep. [from a and thwart.] See THWART.

1. Across; transverse to any thing.

Themistocles made Xerxes post out of Grecia, by giving out a purpose to break his bridge athwart the Hellespont.

Bacon, Ess.

• Exccrable shape!

That dar'st, though grim and terrible, advance

Thy miscreated front athwart my way.

Milton, P. L.

2. Through: this is not proper.

Now, athwart the terrors that thy vow

Has planted round thee, thou appear'st more fair.

Addison.

ATHWART. adv. à tort.

The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart

Goes all decorum.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

ATILT. † adv. [from a and tilt, or at tilt.]

1. In the manner of a tilter; with the action of a man making a thrust at an antagonist.

In the city Tours,

Thou ran'st atilt, in honour of my love,

And stol'st away the ladies hearts from France.

Shakespeare.

Oh, how my fancies run at tilt!

Beaumont and Fl. Knight of Malta, i. 3.

To run atilt at men, and wield

Their naked tools in open field.

Hudibras.

2. In the posture of a barrel raised or tilted behind, to make it run out.

Such a man is always atilt; his favours come hardly from him.

Spectator.

Speak; if not, this stand

Of royal blood shall be abroad, atilt, and run

Even to the lees of honour.

Beaumont and Fl. Phil. v. 1.

ATLANTEAN. * adj. [Lat. atlanteus.] Resembling Atlas, who is feigned to bear up the world.

Athwart men's noses, as they be asleep. Shakspeare.

2. An abbreviation of anatomy; meaning a carcass-like, a meagre person; proper in the mouth of the speaker, Shakspeare's hostess, who uses many other strange words.

You starved blood-hound! — Thou atomy, thou!

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

To ATO'NE.† v. n. [from at one, as the etymologists remark, to be at one, is the same as to be in concord. This derivation is much confirmed by the passage of Shakspeare, Dr. Johnson says, and appears to be the sense still retained in Scotland. He might have added, that this derivation may be traced to higher authority. "If gentlemen, or other of that contrée were wroth, she wolde bringen hem at one." Chaucer, Clerk's Tale. "And the next day, he shewed himself unto them, as they strove, and would have ay, them at one again," Acts, vii. 26. See also

LA'TONE, v. a. This word is often written, in our language, ATTONE.

To agree; to accord.

He and Aufidius can no more atone,
Than violentest contrariety. Shakspeare, Coriol.

To stand as an equivalent for something; and particularly used of expiatory sacrifices; with the particle for before the thing for which something else is given.

From a mean stock the pious Decii came;
Yet such their virtues, that their loss alone,
For Rome and all our legions did atone. Dryden, Juv.

The good intention of a man of weight and worth, or a real friend, seldom atones for the uneasiness produced by his grave representations. Locke.

Let thy sublime meridian course

For Mary's setting rays atone:

Our lustre, with redoubled force,

Must now proceed from thee alone. Prior.

His virgin sword Ægyptus' veins imbrued;

The murder fell, and blood aton'd for blood. Pope.

To ATO'NE.† v. a.

1. To reduce to concord; to appease.

If any contention arose, he knew none fitter to be their judge to atone and take up their quarrels but himself. Drummond.

If he had been cool enough to tell us that, there had been some hope to atone you; but he seems so implacably enraged. B. Jonson, Epicene.

If the duke shall once but permit himself to be atoned and won by our united applications, not only our afflicted brethren, but we ourselves, shall reap the robe and abounding harvest and reward of this laborious undertaking. Milton, Letters of State.

I have been atoning two most wrangling neighbours. They had no money, therefore I made even. Beaum. and Fl. Sp. Cur. iii. 4.

Endeavour is the child of hope; and we attempt not to atone one whom we conclude implacable. Dec. of Christ. Piety, p. 182.

The sweating image shakes his head, but he
With mumbled prayers atones the deity. Dryden, Juv. Sat. 6.

2. To expiate; to answer for.

Soon should you boasters cease their haughty strife,
Or each atone his guilty love with life. Pope.

ATO'NE.* } adv. At one; together; at once.

ATTO'NE. } adv. At one; together; at once.

So beere they both atone, and doen upreare
Their beavers bright each other for to greet. Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 29.

All his senses seem'd hereft atone.
And home they bringen in a royall throne,
Crowned as king; and his queen atone
Was lady Flora. Spenser, Shep. Cal. May, v. 30.

ATO'NEMENT.† n. s. [from atone.] Formerly written attonement.

1. Agreement; concord.

He seeks to make atonement
Between the duke of Glo'ster and your brothers. Shakspeare.

A fair moderation and civil atonement may be mediated between ladies' countenances and their consciences, by the intercession of judicious and religious persons. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hand. p. 135.

Offer in one hand the peaceful olive
Of concord, or if that can be denied,
By powerful intercession, in the other
Carry the Hermian rod, and force attonement. Beaum. and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn, v. i.

2. Expiation; expiatory equivalent; with for.

And the Levites were purified, and Aaron made an atonement for them to cleanse them. Numbers.

Surely it is not a sufficient atonement for the writers, that they profess loyalty to the government, and sprinkle some arguments in favour of the dissenters, and, under the shelter of popular politicks and religion, undermine the foundations of all piety and virtue. Swift.

ATO'NER.* n. s. [from atone.] He who reconciles, who makes friends.

ATO'NICK.* adj. [from atomy.] Wanting tone.

ATRO'CIOUSLY. † adv. [from atrocious.] In an atrocious manner; with great wickedness.

As to my publishing your letters, I hold myself fully justified by the injury you had done me by abusing me inhumanly and atrociously. Lowth to Warburton, l. c. 2.

ATRO'CIOUSNESS. † n. s. [from atrocious.] The quality of being enormously criminal.

He [Herod] thought of John's character, the atrociousness of the murder, and the opinion which the world would entertain of the murderer. Horne, Life of St. John Bapt. p. 218.

The atrociousness of the crime made all men look with an evil eye upon the claim of any privilege, which might prevent the severest justice. Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. iii. 6.

ATRO'CITY. † n. s. [old Fr. atrocité, Lat. atrocitas.] Horrible wickedness; excess of wickedness.

I never recall it to mind, without a deep astonishment of the very horror and atrocité of the fact in a christian court. Wotton.

They desired justice might be done upon offenders, as the atrocité of their crimes deserved. Clarendon.

A'TROPHY. † n. s. [old Fr. atrophie, Gr. ἀτροφία.] Want of nourishment; a disease in which what is taken at the mouth cannot contribute to the support of the body.

Pining atrophy, Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence. Milton.

As if (according to the fable) the arm should resolve to work for the belly no longer, but for itself; a folly quickly punishing itself with atrophy and consumption. Whitlock's Memoir. of the Eng. (1654,) p. 374.

The mouths of the lacteals may be shut up by viscid mucus, in which case the chyle passeth by stool, and the person falleth into an atrophy. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ATTA'CH. v. a. [attacher, Fr.]

1. To arrest; to take or apprehend by commandment or writ. Cowel.

Eftsoons the guard, which on his state did wait, Attach'd that traitor false, and bound him strait. Spenser.

A T T

ATTACKER.† n. s. [from attack.] The person that attacks.

To so much reason the attackers pretend to answer
Elphinstone's Prin. of Eng. Language, ii. 468.

To ATTAIN. v. a. [attendre, Fr. attineo, Lat.]

1. To gain; to procure; to obtain.

Is he wise who hopes to attain the end without the means, nay by means that are quite contrary to it? Tillotson.

All the nobility here could not attain the same favour as Wood did. Swift.

2. To overtake; to come up with: a sense now little in use.

The earl hoping to have overtaken the Scottish king, and to have given him battle; but not attaining him in time, set down before the castle of Aton. Bacon.

3. To come to; to enter upon.

4. To reach; to equal.

So the first precedent, if it be good, is seldom attained by imitation. Bacon.

To ATTAIN. v. n.

1. To come to a certain state: with to.

Milk will soon separate itself into a cream, and a more serious liquor, which, after twelve days, attains to the highest degree of acidity. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To arrive at.

Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high; I can not attain unto it. Psalms cxxxix. 6.

To have knowledge in most objects of contemplation, is what the mind of one man can hardly attain unto. Locke.

ATTAIN. n. s. [from the verb.] The thing attained; attainment: a word not in use.

Crowns and diadems, the most splendid terrene attains, are akin to that which to-day's in the field, and to-morrow is cut down. Glanville's Scipis.

ATTAINABLE.† adj. [old Fr. attainable.] That which may be attained; procurable.

He wilfully neglects the obtaining unspeakable good, which he is persuaded is certain and attainable. Tillotson.

None was proposed that appeared certainly attainable, or of value enough. Rogers.

ATTAINABLENESS. n. s. [from attainable.] The quality of being attainable.

Persons become often enamoured of outward beauty, without any particular knowledge of its possessor, or its attainable- ness by them. Cheyne.

ATTAINER.† n. s. [old Fr. attainder, jugement de condamnation. Lacombe.]

1. The act of attaining in law; conviction of a crime.
See To ATTAINT.

The ends in calling a parliament were chiefly to have the attainers of all his party reversed; and, on the other side, to attaint by parliament his enemies. Bacon.

2. Taint; sully of character.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,
He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shakspeare.

ATTAINMENT. n. s. [from attain.]

1. That which is attained; acquisition.

We dispute with men that count it a great attainment to be able to talk much, and little to the purpose. Glanville.

Our attainments are mean, compared with the perfection of the universe. Grew.

2. The act or power of attaining.

The scripture must be sufficient to imprint in us the character of all things necessary for the attainment of eternal life.

Education in extent, more large, of time shorter, and of at- tainment more certain. Milton.

Government is an art above the attainment of an ordinary genius. South.

If the same actions be the instruments, both of acquiring the and procuring this happiness, they would nevertheless fail in the attainment of this last end, if they proceeded from a desire of the first. Atkinson.

A T T

The great care of God for our salvation must appear in the concern he expressed for our attainment of it. Rogers.

To ATPAINT.† v. a. [old Fr. atteindre, low Lat.
attinere.]

1. To disgrace; to cloud with ignominy.

His warlike shield
Was all of diamond perfect pure and clean,
For so exceeding shone his glistening ray,
That Phoebus golden face it did attaint,
As when a cloud his beams doth overlay. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To attaint is particularly used for such as are found guilty of some crime or offence, and especially of felony or treason. A man is attainted two ways, by appearance, or by process. Attainder by appearance is by confession, battle, or verdict. Confession is double; one at the bar before the judges, when the prisoner, upon his indictment read, being asked guilty or not guilty, answers Guilty, never putting himself upon the verdict of the jury. The other is before the coroner or sanctuary, where he, upon his confession, was in former times constrained to abjure the realm; which kind is called attainder by abjuration. Attainder by battle is, when the party appealed, and choosing to try the truth by combat rather than by jury, is vanquished. At- tainder by verdict is, when the prisoner at the bar, answering to the indictment not guilty, hath an inquest of life and death passing upon him, and is by the verdict pronounced guilty. Attainder by process is, where a party flies, and is not found till five times called publicly in the county, and at last outlawed upon his default. Cowell.

Were it not an endless trouble, that no traitor or felon should be attainted, but a parliament must be called. Spenser.
I must offend before I be attainted. Shakspeare.

3. To taint; to corrupt. [Dr. Johnson's example, from Shakspeare, exhibits attaint for attainted.
But the latter is found in Barret's old dictionary for tainted, viz. "attainted and stinking flesh."]

My tender youth was never yet attaint
With any passion of inflaming love. Shakspeare.

ATTAIN.* part. adj. [old Fr. attainct, attaint.] Convicted.

Nor need I to shew how suitable our law is to the law of nature, in providing that no infant, idiot, alien, abjured, perjured, or attaint, outlawed, or in præmunire, be of any inquest or jury; especially, in case of life and death.

Sadler's Rights of the Kingdom, p. 179.

ATTAIN.† n. s. [old Fr. attainte, in the Fr. law.]

1. Any thing injurious; as illness, weariness. This sense is now obsolete.

Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watched night;
But freshly looks, and overbears attaint
With cheerful semblance. Shakspeare, Henry V.

2. Stain; spot; taint.

No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of; nor any man an attaint, but he carries some stain of it. Shakspeare.

3. In horsemanship. A blow or wound on the hinder feet of an horse. Farrier's Dict.

4. In law. A writ so called.

He threatened them with an attaint of jury.
Burnet, Hist. of his Own Times, an. 1685.

A writ of attaint lieth to enquire, whether a jury of twelve men gave a false verdict. Blackstone.

ATTAINMENT.* n. s. [from attaint.] The state of being attainted.

This manor and castle was made over by Hen. VIII. to that great man, [Cardinal Wolsey] upon whose attainment, that sacrilegious prince re-annexed it to the crown.

ATTA'INTURE. n. s. [from attaint.] Local censure; reproach; imputation.

Hume's knavery will be the duchess's wreck,
And her attainture will be Humphry's fall. Shakspeare.

To ATTA'MINATE. v. a. [attamino, Lat.] To corrupt; to spoil.

To ATTA'SK.* v. a. [from task. This word is introduced into the text of Shakspeare by the modern editors, in the room of an unintelligible word in the old copies.] To task; to tax.

You are much more attask'd for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness. Shakspeare, K. Lear, i. 4.

To ATTA'STE.* v. a. [from the prefix a or at, and taste.] To taste. Obsolete.

For gentlemen (they said) was nought so fit,
As to attaste by bold attempts the cup
Of conquest's wine, whereof I thought to sup.

Mirror for Mag. p. 297.

To ATTEM'PER. † v. a. [Lat. attempero, old Fr. attemperer.]

1. To mingle; to weaken by the mixture of something else; to dilute.

Therefore attemper thy courage;
Poolhast doth none advantage. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 2.

Attemper'd suns arise,
Sweet-beam'd, and shedding oft thro' lucid clouds
A pleasing calm. Thomson, Autumn.

2. To soften; to mollify.

His early providence could likewise have attemper'd his ture therein. Bacon.

Those smiling eyes, attemper'ring ev'ry ray,
Shone sweetly lambent with celestial day. Pope.

3. To mix in just proportions; to regulate.

She to her guests doth bounteous banquet dight,
Attemper'd, goodly, well for health and for delight. Spenser.

4. To fit to something else.

The bramble bush, where birdes of every kinde
To the waters fall their tunes attemper right
Spenser, Shep. Cal. June, v. 8.

These lower powers are worn, and wearied out, by the toilsome exercise of dragging about and managing such a load of flesh; wherefore, being so castigated, they are duly attemper'd to the more easy body of air again.

Glanville, Pro-exist. of Souls, ch. 14.

Phenius! let arts of gods and heroes old,
Attemper'd to the lyre, your voice employ. Pope.

ATTEM'PERANCE.* n. s. [old Fr. attemperance.] The old word for temperance.

The felawes of abstinence ben attemperance, that holdeth the mean in alle thinges; also shame, that escheweth all dishonesty. Chaucer, Persones Tale.

By this virtue, attemperance, the creature reasonable kepeth hym from to much drinke. Institution of a Christ. Man.

Attemperly, and namely in this hete. Chaucer, Shipm. Tale.

To ATTEM'PERATE. v. a. [attempero, Lat.] To proportion to something.

Hope must be proportioned and attemperate to the promise;
if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympany of hope. Hammond, Pract. Catechism.

To ATTEM'PT. † v. a. [attenter, Fr. and hence some of our elder authors have affectedly written attended.]

1. To attack; to invade; to venture upon.

He flatter'ing his displeasure,
Tript me behind, got praises of the king,
For him attempting who was self-subdu'd. Shakspeare.

Who, in all things wise and just,
Hinder'd not Satan to attempt the mind
Of man; with strength entire, and free-will, arm'd, Milton.

2. To try; to endeavour.

I have nevertheless attempted to send unto you, for the renewing of brotherhood and friendship. 1 Mac. xii. 17.

3. Used by Spenser for tempt.

Arbutnot.

2. To lessen; to diminish.

I come now to the Mahometans; the modernest of all religious, and the most mischievous and destructive to the church of Christ; for this fatal sect hath justled her out of divers large regions in Africk, in Tartary, and other places, and attenuated their number in Asia.

Howell, Letters, ii. 10.

ATTENUATE. adj. [from the verb.] Made thin, or slender.

Vivification ever consisteth in spirits attenuate, which the cold doth congeal and coagulate.

Bacon.

ATTENUATION. n. s. [Fr. attenuation.]

1. The act of making any thing thin or slender; lessening.

Chiming with a hammer upon the outside of a bell, the sound will be according to the inward concave of the bell; whereas the elision or attenuation of the air, can be only between the hammer and the outside of the bell.

Bacon.

2. The state of being made thin, or less.

I am ground even to an attenuation.

Donne, Devotions, p. 517.

ATTER. n. s. [atep, Sax. venom. Atterfilth, corruption, Prompt. Parv. Attercop, a spider, ib. and a common expression in the northern counties. Hence also the forgotten adjective atterly, poisonous, Ch.] Corrupt matter. A word much used in Lincolnshire.

Skinner.

To ATTEST. v. a. [attestor, Lat.]

1. To bear witness of; to witness.

Many particular facts are recorded in holy writ, attested by particular pagan authors.

Addison.

2. To call to witness; to invoke as conscious.

The sacred streams, which heav'n's imperial state
Attests in oaths, and fears to violate.

Dryden.

ATTEST. n. s. [from the verb.] Witness; testimony; attestation.

The attest of eyes and ears.

Shakespeare.

With the voice divine

Nigh thunderstruck, th' exalted man, to whom

Such high attest was giv'n, a while survey'd

With wonder.

ATTESTATION. n. s. [Fr. attestation, Lat. attestatio.]

Testimony; witness; evidence.

There remains a second kind of preceptoriness, of those who can make no relation without an attestation of its certainty.

Government of the Tongue.

The next coal-pit, mine, quarry, or chalk-pit, will give attestation to what I write; these are so obvious that I need not seek for a compurgator.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

We may derive a probability from the attestation of wise and honest men by word or writing, or the concurring witness of multitudes who have seen and known what they relate.

Watts.

ATTESTER, or ATTESTOR. n. s. [from attest.] A witness.

The Romans of old, though as apt to swallow such prodigious stories as any, yet used to chew them first by a serious examination of the credit of the attesters, and truth of the relations.

Spencer on Prodiges, p. 397.

This arch-attester for the publick good

By that one deed ennobles all his blood.

Dryden, Abs. and Achitophel.

ATTICAL. adj. [Lat. Atticus.] Relating to the style of Athens; pure; classical.

If this be not the common Attical acception of it, yet it will seem agreeable to the meaning of the New Testament; in which, whosoever will observe, may find words and phrases, which perhaps the attick purity; perhaps grammar, will not approve of.

Hammond, Serm. 12.

To ATTICISE. v. n. [Gr. ἄττιζω.] To make use of an atticism.

If any will still excuse the tyrant for atticizing in those circumstances, it is hard to deny them the glory of being the faithfullest of his vassals.

Bentley, Dissert. upon Phalaris, p. 317.

ATTICISM. n. s. [Fr. atticisme, from Lat. Attica.]

An example or an imitation of the Attick style; an elegant or concise manner of expression.

Let us hear the second apology for the atticism of Phalaris.

Bentley, Dissert. upon Phalaris, p. 316.

They made sport, and I laughed; they mispronounced, and I disliked; and to make up the atticism, they were out, and I hissed.

Mil' Apol. for Smectymnus.

'Tis one thing to mix atticisms in one style, and another thing strictly to write Attick.

Boyle against Bentley, p. 34.

There is an elegant atticism which occurs, Luke xiii. 9. "If it bear fruit, well."

Newcome, View of the Eng. Bib. Trans. p. 279.

ATTICK. adj. [Fr. attique, from Lat. Attica.] Belonging to Athens; and hence, pure; classical; elegant.

What neat repast shall feast us, light and choice,

Of Attick taste.

Milton Sonnet xx. 10.

The choice histories, heroick poems, and attick tragedies of stateliest and most regal argument, with all the famous political orations, offer themselves.

Milton, of Education.

Dionysius Halicarnasensis, though he was born in a Dorick country, yet lived in another; and in the age of Augustus, when the attick idiom had been famous for cccc years.

Bentley, Dissert. upon Phalaris, p. 390.

Cassiodorus affirms — that it is done in an attick or elegant stile; wherein many things are spoken subtly indeed, but not so warily as they should have been.

Hammer, View of Antiquity, p. 95.

Far be it from me to insinuate so unscholar-like a thing, as if we had the same use for good English, that a Greek had for his Attick elegance.

Warburton, Pref. to Shakespeare.

I call Erasmus a wonderful man, not only on account of the variety and classical purity of his works, but of that penetration, that strong and acute sense, which enabled him to pierce through the absurdities of the times, and expose them with such poignant ridicule and attick elegance. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope, i. 188.

ATTICK.* n. s.

1. A native of Attica.

A time, when the Atticks were as unlearned as their neighbours. Bentley, Dissert. upon Phalaris, p. 390.

2. In architecture, the garret or uppermost room in the house; also that kind of building, which conceals the roof.

To ATT'NGE. v. a. [attingo, Lat.] To touch lightly or gently. Dict.

To ATT'IRE. † v. a. [attirer, Fr.]

1. To dress; to habit; to array.

Let it likewise your gentle breast inspire
With sweet infusion, and put you in mind
Of that proud maid, whom now those leaves attire, Proud Daphne. Spenser.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies;
Finely attired in a robe of white.

Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
With the linen mitre shall he be attired. Lev. xvi. 4.

Now the sappy boughs
Attire themselves with blooms. Philips.

2. [In heraldry.] Attired is used among heralds, when they have occasion to speak of the horns of a buck or stag. Bullockar.

ATT'IRE. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; dress; habit.

It is no more disgrace to Scripture to have left things free to be ordered by the church, than for Nature to have left it to the wit of man to devise his own attire. Hooker.

After that the Roman attire grew to be in account, and the gown to be in use among them. Davies on Ireland.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire, Hath cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

And in this coarse attire, which I now wear,
With God and with the Muses I confer. Donne.

When lavish Nature, with her best attire,
Cloaths the gay spring, the season of desire. Waller.

I pass their form, and ev'ry charming grace,
But their attire, like liveries of a kind,
All rich and rare, is fresh within my mind. Dryden.

2. The head-dress, in particular. [old Fr. attour, or, as Barret proposes, from tiara, an ornament on women's heads; in Persia. Chaucer uses attour, however, in this sense, Rom. R. 3718. And Cotgrave interprets attour, a French hood, or any tire for women's heads. See ATTIRING.]

3. In hunting. The horns of a buck or stag.

4. In botany. The flower of a plant is divided into three parts, the empalement, the foliation, and the attire, which is either florid or semiform. Florid attire, called thrums or suits, as in the flowers of marigold and tansey, consist sometimes of two, but commonly of three parts. The outer part is the floret, the body of which is divided at the top, like the cowslip flower, into five distinct parts. Semiform attire consists of two parts, the chives and apices; one upon each attire. Dict.

ATT'IRER. n. s. [from attire.] One that attires another; a dresser. Dict.

ATT'IRING.* n. s. [from attire.] The head-dress; "attirings, that which gentlewomen wear on their heads, redimicula," Huloet; dress, in general.

This small wind, which so sweet is,
See how it the leaves doth kiss,
Each tree, in its best attiring;
Sense of love to love inspiring. Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

In the attiring and ornament of their bodies, the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness. Sir H. Wotton, Rem. p. 171.

To ATT'ITLE.* v. a. [low Lat. attitulare.] To entitle; to name. Obsolete.

This Aries out of the twelve
Hath March attitled for hym selfe. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 7.

ATTITUDE. † n. s. [attitude, Fr. from atto, Ital. not in use. Mr. Malone observes, in 1668, Evelyn using attitudo instead of it, of which word he gives a definition as then little known. See his Idea of the Perfection of Painting, 8vo. 1668.] The posture or action in which a person, statue, or painted figure, is placed.

Bernini would have taken his opinion upon the beauty and attitude of a figure. Prior's Dedication.

They were famous originals that gave rise to statues, with the same air, posture, and attitudes. Addison.

It is certain, that no poet has given more graceful and attractive images of beauty than Milton, in his various portraits of Eve, each in a new situation and attitude.

Warton's Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.
ATTO'LLENT. adj. [attollens, Lat.] That which raises or lifts up.

I shall further take notice of the exquisite libration of the attollent and deprimant muscles. Derham, Physico-Theology.

ATTO'NE. adv.

ATTO'NEMENT. n. s.

See ATONE and ATONEMENT.

To ATTORN or ATTURN.* v. a. [old Fr. attorner, transporter à un autre un droit qu'on a. Lacombe; low Lat. attornare.] To transfer the property or service of a vassal or tenant.

In some case a lord might atturn and assign his vassal's service, to some other: but he might not atturn him to his deadly foe. Saunders's Rights of the Kingdom, p. 16.

To ATTO'RN.* v. n. To acknowledge a new possessor of property, and accept tenancy under him. See ATTOURNMENT.

If one bought an estate with any lease for life or years standing out thereon, and the lessee or tenant refused to attorn to the purchaser, and to become his tenant, the grant or purchase was in most cases void. Blackstone.

ATTO'RNEY. † n. s. [attornatus, low Lat. from tour, Fr. Celui qui vient à tour d'autrui; qui alterius vices subit. Old Fr. attorney, actourné, atourné, mot Celt. Lacombe.]

1. Such a person as by consent, commandment, or request, takes heed, sees, and takes upon him the charge of other men's business, in their absence.

Attorney is either general or special: Attorney general is he that by general authority is appointed to all our affairs or suits; as the attorney general of the king, which is nearly the same with Procurator Caesaris in the Roman empire. Attorneys general are made either by the king's letters patent, or by our appointment before justices in eyre, in open court. Attorney special or particular, is he that is employed in one or more causes particularly specified. There are also, in respect of the divers courts, attorneys at large, and attorneys special, belonging to this or that court only. Cowell.

Attorneys in common law, are nearly the same with proctors in the civil law, and solicitors in courts of equity. Attorneys sue out writs or process, or commence, carry on, and defend actions, or other proceedings, in the names of other persons, in the courts of common law. None are admitted to act without having served a clerkship for five years, taking the proper oath, being enrolled, and examined by the judges. The attorney general pleads within the bar. To him come warrants for making out patents, pardons, &c., and he is the principal manager of all law affairs of the crown.

Chambers.

I am a subject,
And challenge law: attorneys are deny'd me,
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To mine inheritance.

Shakespeare.

The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions.
Despairing quacks with curses fled the place,
And vile attorneys, now an useless race.

Shakespeare.

Pope.

It would indeed be too gross, too fulsome, and too shameless a request for any one to come to his prince and say, Sir, I will not be quiet unless your majesty will make me treasurer, or chancellor, chief justice, or secretary of state, attorney-general, or the like.

South, Sermons, vi. 67.

2. It was anciently used for those who did any business for another; for him who was deputed to fight the battle of his employer at the tourn or tournament. See Madox's Hist. of the Exchequer.
Now used only in law.

I will attend my husband; it is my office;
And will have no attorney but myself;
And therefore let me have him home.

Shakespeare.

I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother.

Shakespeare, K. Richard III.

To ATTO'NEY.† n. a. [old Fr. attorney; low Lat. attornare, the verb is now not in use.]

1. To perform by proxy.
Their encounters, though not personal, have been royally
attorned with interchange of gifts.

Shakespeare.

2. To employ as a proxy.

As I was then

Advertising, and holy to your business,
Not changing heart with habit, I am still attorned to your service.

Shakespeare.

ATTO'NEYSHIP. n. s. [from attorney.] The office of an attorney; proxy; vicarious agency.

Marriage is a matter of more worth,
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship.

Shakespeare.

ATTO'URNMENT. n. s. [attournement, Fr.] A yielding of the tenant to a new lord, or acknowledgement of him to be his lord; for, otherwise, he that buyeth or obtaineth any lands or tenements of another, which are in the occupation of a third, cannot get possession.

Cowell.

To ATTRACT.† n. a. [old Fr. attracter, from atrako, attractum, Lat.]

1. To draw to something.
A man should scarce persuade the affections of the loadstone, or that jet and amber attracteth straws and light bodies.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The single atoms each to other tend,
Attract, attracted to, the next in place
Form'd and impell'd its neighbour to embrace.

Pope.

2. To allure; to invite.

Adorn'd

She was indeed, and lovely, to attract
Thy love; not thy subjection.

Milton.

Shew the care of approving all actions so, as may most effectually attract all to this profession.

Hammond.

Deign to be lov'd, and ev'ry heart subdue!

What nymph could e'er attract such crowds as you!

Pope.

ATTRAC'T.† n. s. [old Fr. subst. attract.] Attraction; the power of drawing: not in use, though Butler repeatedly employs it.

Feel darts and charms, attracts and flames,
And woo and contract in their names.

Hudibras.

*ATTRACTABILITY.* n. s.* [from attract.] That which has the power of attraction.

There is a strong propensity, which dances through every atom, and attracts the minutest particle to some peculiar object; search this universe, from its base to its summit, from fire to air, from water to earth, from all below the moon to all above the celestial spheres, and thou wilt not find a corpuscle destitute of that natural attractability.

Sir W. Jones, Tr. of Shirin and Ferhad, Asiat. Res. iv. 178.

*ATTRACTER.** See ATTRACTOR.

ATTRAC'TICAL. adj. [from attract.] Having the power to draw to it.

Some stones are endued with an electrical or attractical virtue.

Ray on the Creation.

*ATTRAC'TINGLY.* adv.* [from attract.] In an attracting manner.

ATTRAC'TION. n. s. [from attract.]

1. The power of drawing any thing.

The drawing of amber and jet, and other electrick bodies and the attraction in gold of the spirit of quicksilver at distance; and the attraction of heat at distance; and that of fire to naphtha; and that of some herbs to water, though at distance; and divers others, we shall handle.

Bacon.

Loadstones and touched needles, laid long in quicksilver, have not omitted their attraction.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Attraction may be performed by impulse, or some other means; I use that word, to signify any force by which bodies tend towards one another.

Newton, Opticks.

2. The power of alluring or enticing.

Setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.

Shakespeare.

ATTRAC'TIVE.† adj. [Fr. attractif.]

1. Having the power to draw any thing.

What if the sun

Be centre to the world; and other stars,

By his attractive virtue, and their own,

Incited, dance about him various rounds?

Milton.

Some the round earth's cohesion to secure,
For that hard task employ magnetick power;
Remark, say they, the globe, with wonder own
Its nature, like the fan'd attractive stone.

Blackmore.

Bodies act by the attractions of gravity, magnetism, and electricity; and these instances make it not improbable but there may be more attractive powers than these.

Newton.

2. Inviting; alluring; enticing.

Happy is Hermia, wheresoe'er she lies;

For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.

Shakespeare.

I pleas'd, and with attractive graces won,

The most averse, thee chiefly.

Milton.

ATTRAC'TIVE.† n. s. [from the adjective.] That which draws or incites; allurement; except that attractive is of a good or indifferent sense, and allurement generally bad.

That beauty and attractive, which should take the king's eye in Anne of Cleve, not appearing.

She applied to her advantage all the attractives of sweet unguents and perfumes.

Bp. Taylor's Artificial Hands. p. 19.

When the lady of the house, diverted either by the attractives of his discourse or some other occasion, delayed the clients of her charity in alms, or that other most commendable one in surgery, he in his friendly way would chide her out of the room.

Fell's Life of Hammond, sect. 2.

The condition of a servant staves him off to a distance; but the gospel speaks nothing but attractives and invitation.

South, Sermons.

ATTRAC'TIVELY. adv. [from attractive.] With the power of attracting or drawing.

ATTRAC'TIVENESS.† n. s. [from attractive.] The quality of being attractive.

Upon the observing the attractiveness of hot iron, it was queried, whether the same thing might not be done with a wood coal.

Hist. of the Royal Society, iv. 268.

There were then the same incentives of desire on the one side, the same attractiveness in riches.

South, Sermons, vii. 295.

ATTRACTOR. † n. s. [from attract.] The agent that attracts; a drawer.

If the straws be in oil, amber draweth them not; oil makes the straws to adhere so, that they cannot rise unto the attractor. Brown, Vulg. Err.

They are true attracters of love.

Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 343.

ATTRAHENT. n. s. [attrahens, Lat.] That which draws.

Our eyes will inform us of the motion of the steel to its attractent. Glanville, Scopsis.

To ATTRAP* v. a. [low Lat. trappatura, Span. trapo; from trapus, a piece of cloth, Fr. drap.]

To clothe; to dress.

Attrapped royally; "instratus ornatu regio."

Barrel's Alperic.

For all his armour was like salvage weed
With woody moss bedight, and all his steed
With oaken leaves attrapt. Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 39.

ATTRECTION. † n. s. [old Fr. attraction, from attractatio, Lat.] Frequent handling. Dict.

ATTRIBUTABLE. adj. [attribuo, Lat.] That which may be ascribed or attributed; ascribable; imputable.

Much of the origination of the Americans seem to be attributable to the migrations of the Seres. Hale.

To ATTRIBUTE. † v. a. [attribuo, Lat.] Formerly the accent was on the first syllable; and poetry of later times has adopted either accent for its purpose.]

1. To ascribe; to give; to yield as due.

To their very bare judgement somewhat a reasonable man would attribute, notwithstanding the common imbecillities which are incident unto our nature. Hooker.

We attribute nothing to God that hath any repugnancy or contradiction in it. Power and wisdom have no repugnancy in them. Tillotson.

2. To impute, as to a cause.

Faulty men use oftentimes
To attribute their folly unto fate. Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 28.

I have observed a Campania determine contrary to appearances, by the caution and conduct of a general, which were attributed to his infirmities. Temple.

The imperfection of telescopes is attributed to spherical glasses; and mathematicians have propounded to figure them by the conical sections. Newton, Opticks.

ATTRIBUTE. n. s. [from to attribute.]

1. The thing attributed to another, as perfection to the Supreme Being.

Power, light, virtue, wisdom, and goodness, being all but attributes of one simple essence, and of one God, we in all admire, and in part discern. Raleigh.

Your vain poets after did mistake,
Who ev'ry attribute a god did make. Dryden.

All the perfections of God are called his attributes; for he cannot be without them. Watts, Logic.

2. Quality; characteristick disposition.

They must have these three attributes; they must be men of courage, fearing God, and hating covetousness. Bacon.

3. A thing belonging to another; an appendant; adherent.

His sceptre shows the force of temporal pow'r,

The attribute to awe and majesty;

But mercy is above this scepter'd sway,

It is an attribute to God himself. Shakespeare.

The sculptor, to distinguish him, gave him, what the metallists call his proper attributes, a spear and a shield. Addison.

4. Reputation; honour.

It takes
From our achievements, though perform'd at height,
Each sixth and marrow of our attribute. Shakespeare.

ATTRITION. † n. s. [from to attribute.] Communion; qualities ascribed.

If speaking truth,
In this fine age, were not thought flattery,
Such attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world. Shakespeare.
We suffer him to persuade us we are as gods, and never suspect these glorious attributions may be no more than flattery. Deceit of Piety.

Honour considered, according to the acknowledgement or attribution of it in the persons honouring.

Bp. Wilkins, Nat. Rel. ii. 6.

The attribution of prophetic language to birds was common among the orientals. Warton, Hist. Eng. Port. i. Diss. 1.

ATTRIBUTIVE.* adj. [old Fr. attributif.] That which attributes, or communicates.

'Tis mad idolatry,

To make the service greater than the god;

And the will dotes, that is attributive

To what infection itself affects,

Without some image of the affected merit.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress. ii. 2.

ATTRIBUTIVE.* n. s. [from the adj.] The thing attributed.

In abstract nouns [such as whiteness, from white goodness from good,] as also in the infinitive modes of verbs, the attributive is converted into a substantive. Harris, Herm. b. i.

The attributives hitherto treated, that is to say, verbs, participles, and adjectives, may be called attributives of the first order. Ibid.

ATTRITE. † adj. [attritus, Lat.]

1. Ground; worn by rubbing.

Or by collision of two bodies, grind

The air attrite to fire.

2. [With divines.] Sorry.

By virtue of the keys the sinner is instantly of attrite made contrite, and thereupon as soon as he hath made his confession, he presently receiveth his absolution; after this, some sorry penance is imposed, &c.

Abp. Usher on the Religion of the Anc. Irish, ch. 5.

Suppose a man to have lived in a course of wickedness for fifty or sixty years; and, being now upon his death-bed, to be attrite for his sins, that is, heartily to grieve for them, &c.

Bp. Bull's Works, i. 18.

ATTRITENESS. n. s. [from attrite.] The being much worn.

ATTRITION. † n. s. [attritio, Lat.]

1. The act of wearing things, by rubbing one against another.

This vapour, ascending incessantly out of the abyss, and pervading the strata of gravel, and the rest, decays the bones and vegetables lodged in those strata; this fluid, by its continual attrition, fretting the said bodies. Woodward.

The change of the aliment is effected by attrition of the inward stomach, and dissolvent liquor assisted with heat.

Arbuthnot.

"Omnia de lite," opposing wit to wit, wealth to wealth, strength to strength, fortunes to fortunes, friends to friends, as at a sea-fight we turn our broadsides, or [as] two millstones with continual attrition, we fire ourselves, or break another's backs, and both are ruined and consumed in the end.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 435.

Some exhalations shut up in the bowels of the earth, which either by their own nature, or by their violent motion and agitation, or attrition upon rocks, do gather heat, and so impart it to the waters. Howell's Letters, i. 6.

2. The state of being worn.

3. [With divines.] Grief for sin, arising only from the fear of punishment; the lowest degree of repentance.

Nor is it necessary to this absolution, that they should be contrite, or heartily sorry; for attrition, with auricular confession, shall pass in stead of contrition; that is, in effect, if they be but sorry for the penance, though they be not sorry for the sin. Wallis, Sermon, p. 43.

They [Papists] equivocate with us in the term of contrition, and make a distinction thereof into perfect and imperfect.

The former of these is contrition properly; the latter they call attrition, which howsoever in itself it be not true contrition, yet when the priest, with his power of forgiving sins, interposeth himself in the business, they tell us that "attrition by virtue of the keys is made contrition."

Abp. Usher, Answer to a Jesuit's Challenge, p. 205.

Where are those pandars of sin, the Romish casuists, that teach the least measure of sorrow, even meer attrition, is enough for a penitent! Bp. Hall's Remains, p. 164.

To ATTUNE. † v. a. [from tune.]

1. To make any thing musical.

Airs, vernal airs,
Breathing the smell of field and grove, altune
The trembling leaves. Milton, P. L. iv. 265.

2. To tune one thing to another; as, he attunes his voice to his harp.

This is what Epictetus calls, "to attune or harmonize one's mind to the things which happen."

Harris, Three Treat. Notes iii.

Social friends,

Attun'd to happy unison of soul. Thomson, Summer, ver. 1384.

ATTURNEY. n. s. See ATTORNEY.

ATWAIN. * adv. Sax. [See TWAIN. Formerly written atwæne atwægne, from Sax. twainan.] In twain; asunder.

Such smiling rogues as these,

Like rats, oft bite the holy cords atwain
Which are too intrinsic to unloose. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

ATWÆN. adv. or prep. [See BETWEEN.] Betwixt; between; in the midst of two things: obsolete.

Her loose long yellow locks, like golden wire,
Sprinkled with pearl, and perling flowers atween,
Do, like a golden mantle, her attire. Spenser, Epithalam.

ATWIXT. prep. [See BETWIXT.] In the middle of two things: obsolete.

But with outrageous strokes did him restrain,
And with his body barr'd the way atwixt them twain.

Spenser, F. Q.

ATWO * adv. [Sax. on tpa.] Into two. Ancient, but not obsolete.

And eke an axe to smite the cord atwo.

Chaucer, Miller's Tale.

To AVAIL. v. a. [from valoir, Fr. To avail being neatly the same thing with faire valoir.]

1. To profit; to turn to profit: with of before the thing used.

Then shall they seek t' avail themselves of names,
Places, and titles; and with these to join Secular pow'r. Milton.

Both of them avail themselves of those licences, which Apollo has equally bestowed on them. Dryden.

2. To promote; to prosper; to assist.

Mean time he voyag'd to explore the will
Of Jove on high Dodona's holy hill,
What means might best his safe return avail. Pope.

To AVAIL. v. n. To be of use; to be of advantage.

Nor can my strength avail, unless by thee
Endu'd with force, I gain the victory. Dryden.

When real merit is wanting, it avails nothing to have been encouraged by the great. Pope, Preface to his Works.

AVAIL. † n. s. [old Fr. subst. availe.] Profit; advantage; benefit.

For all that else did come, were sure to fail;
Yet would he further none but for avail. Spenser.

I charge thee,
As heav'n shall work in me for thine avail,

To tell me truly. Shakespeare.

Truth, light upon this way, is of no more avail to us than error. Locke.

AVAILABLE. † adj. [old Fr. available, qui est valable. Lacombe.]

1. Profitable; advantageous.

ity is the efficacy of such intercessions to avert judgments; how much more available then may they be to secure the continuance of blessings? Atterbury.

All things subject to action, the will does so far incline unto, as reason judges them more available to our bliss. Hooker.

2. Powerful; in force; valid.

Laws human are available by consent. Hooker.

Drake put one of his men to death, having no authority nor commission available. Rolegh.

AVAILABLENESS. n. s. [from available.]

1. Power of promoting the end for which it is used.

We differ from that supposition of the efficacy or availableness, or suitableness of these to the end. Hale.

2. Legal force; validity.

AVAILABLY. adv. [from available.]

1. Powerfully; profitably; advantageously.

2. Legally; validly.

AVAILMENT. n. s. [from avail.] Usefulness; advantage; profit.

To AVAILE. † v. a. [avaler, to let sink, Fr. from the adverb aval, downward, below. Avallare, low

Lat.] To let fall; to depress; to make abject; to sink: a word out of use.

By that th' exalted Phœbus 'gan avale

His weary wain, and now the frosty night

Her mantle black thro' heav'n 'gan overhale. Spenser, F. Q.

He did abase and avale the sovereignty into more servitude towards that see, than had been among us. Wotton.

To AVAILE. † v. n. To sink; to descend, or come down.

But when his latter ebb 'gins to avale,

Huge heaps of mud he leaves.

Spenser, F. Q.

They thither marcht; but when they came in sight,

And from their sweaty coursers did avale,

They found the gates fast barred long ere night.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 10.

AVANT. † The front of an army. See VAN. It is the Fr. adverb avant, in front.

Shall no man know by his chere,

Which is avant, and which arere. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

AVANT-COURIER. * n. s. [Fr. avant-courreur, which Cotgrave renders an avantcourrois, a fore-runner.]

One who is dispatched in haste, before the rest of the company, to notify their approach.

AVANT-GUARD. n. s. [avantgarde, Fr.] The van; the first body of an army.

The horsemen might issue forth without disturbance of the foot, and the avant-guard without shewing with the battail or arriere. Hayward.

A'VARICE. n. s. [avarice, Fr. avaritia, Lat.] Covetousness; insatiable desire.

There grows

In my most ill compos'd affection, such

A staunchless avarice, that were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands

Shakespeare.

This avarice of praise in times to come,

Those long inscriptions crowded on the tomb.

Dryden.

Nor love his peace of mind destroys,

Nor wicked avarice of wealth.

Dryden.

Avarice is insatiable; and so he went still pushing on for more. L'Estrange.

Be niggards of advice on no pretence,

For the worst avarice is that of sense.

Pope.

AVARICIOUS. adj. [avaricieux, Fr.] Covetous; insatiably desirous.

Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

This speech has been condemned, as avaricious; and Eustathius judges it to be spoken artfully. Broome on the Odyssey.

AVARICIOUSLY. † adv. [from avaricious.] Covetously.

Each is contented with his own possessions, nor avariciously endeavours to heap up more than is necessary for his own subsistence. Goldsmith, Essays, Ess. 16.

AVARICIOUSNESS. n. s. [from avaricious.] The quality of being avaricious.

A'VAROUS.* adj. [Lat. avarus. The old adjective for avaricious, noticed by Elyot.] Covetous. Obsolete.

Men maie well make a likely hede
Betwene hym which is avarous
Of golde, and hym that is jelous,
Of love.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

The bagges ———
That the erle avarous helde and hys heyres.

Visions of P. Plowman.

AVA'ST.† adv. [from basta, Ital. it is enough, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Tooke ridicules this etymology, and proposes avacci, Ital. from avacciare, i. e. be on the watch, be awake.] Skinner gives ab, Lat. and haesten, Dutch, to hasten, which means hasten hence. Kersey defines the word, "make haste, dispatch; also stop, hold, or stay." In a Naval Dictionary of 1705, it is explained simply, "to stay, hold, or stop." And this, I believe, is the present meaning; which may perhaps be referred to the old Fr. avachi, loosened, slackened, from s'ava-chir.] Enough; stop; cease. A word common among seamen.

Avast hailing! don't you know me, mother Partlett?

Cumberland, Com. of the Walloons.

AVAU'NCEMENT.* n. s. The old word for ADVANCEMENT. Avancee is used, in like manner, for ADVANCE.

All thys must be done for the avancement of holye church.
Bale, Yet a Course at the Romyshe Foce, fol. 36. b.

To AVAUNT.* v. a. [Ital. avantare.] To boast; to vaunt.

Let now the papists avaunt themselves of their transubstantiation!

Abp. Cranmer's Answer to Gardiner, p. 333.

They rejoyce and avaunt themselves, if they vanquish and oppress their enemy by craft and deceit.

Robinson, Transl. of More's Utopia, ii. 10.

To AVAUNT.* v. n. To come before another in a vaunting manner; or perhaps simply, to come before, to advance, from the Fr. avant.

To whom avaunting in great bravery,
As peacocks that his painted plumes doth prance,
He smote his courser in the trembling flank.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 6.

AVAU'NT.* } n. s. [from the verb.] Boasting. Obsolete.
AVAU'NTANCE. }
AVAU'NTRY. }

If he gave aught, he durst make avaunt. Chaucer, rol. C.T. 227.

The vice, cleped avauntance,

With pride hath take his acquaintance. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

The worshippie of his name,

Through pride of his avauntie,

He tourneth into vilanie.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

AVAUNT. interject. [avant, Fr.] A word of abhorrence, by which any one is driven away.

O, he is bold, and blushes not at death;

Avaunt, thou hateful villain, get thee gone! Shakespeare.

After this process

To give her the avaunt! it is a pity

Would move a monster.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

Mistress! dismiss that rabble from your throne.

Avaunt! — is Aristarchus yet unknown?

Pope, Dunciad.

A'UBURN.† adj. [from aubour, bark, Fr. Dr. Johnson says. But aubour is the alburnum, the whitesap, or sappy part of trees, on the outside next the bark; "le bois blanc qui n'est pas du coeur de l'arbre." Lacombe in V. ABOUR. Cotgrave mentions the Fr. aubour, a kind of tree, (in Lat. alburnus,) which bears long yellow blossoms. Our English word has been written alburn, instead of auburn, as Ash has noticed; and we have several places, beginning with alb, from their vicinity to white hills, which are pronounced aub, as Albany, Albourn, &c. So likewise aube, instead of alb, the white garment or surplice of the priest. In the time of Shakspeare, auburn certainly meant a light colour rather than a dark one, sulflavus, as Barret in his old Dictionary renders it, i. e. somewhat yellowish; and biondo, as Thomas in his Ital. Gram. and Vocab. of 1550 translates "abernic, that is, between white and yellow." And Florio terms biondella "a golden-locked wench," World of Words, 1598. I have added examples in proof of the etymology (albus) and meaning.] Brown; of a tawny colour.

A U D

Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow. Shakespeare.

The first [sign] is to have his haire abourne, a colour between white and red, [or "between white and saffron colour," as he afterwards says,] and that passing from age to age, they ever become more golden. Trial of Mens Wills, (1594) p. 243.

He's white-hair'd,

Not wanton white, but such a manly colour,

Next to an auburn. Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen, iv. 2.

His auburn locks on either shoulder flow'd,

Which to the fun'ral of his friend he vow'd.

Dryden.

Lo, how the arable with barley grain

Stands thick, o'ershadow'd; these, as modern use

Ordains, infus'd, an auburn drink compose,

Wholesome, of deathless fame.

Philips.

A'UCTION.† n. s. [auctio, Lat.]

1. A manner of sale in which one person bids after another, till so much is bid as the seller is content to take.

After reading Lucian's Auction of Lives, with the wit of which I was not a little diverted, in the midst of a train of thought I insensibly fell asleep, when fancy presented to me the following vision. Methought there was a general auction proclaimed. Student, ii. 93.

2. The things sold by auction.

Ask you why Phrine the whole auction buys;

Phrine foresees a general excise.

Pope.

To A'UCTION. v. a. [from auction.] To sell by auction.

A'UCTIONARY. adj. [from auction.] Belonging to an auction.

And much more honest, to be hir'd, and stand,

With auctionary hammer in thy hand,

Provoking to give more, and knocking thrice

For the old household stuff or picture's price. Dryden, Juo.

AUCTIONEER.† n. s. [from auction.] The person that manages an auction.

There was a general auction proclaimed, a large room chosen, and an acrial auctioneer presented himself to sell furniture for the mind of every sort. Student, ii. 93.

You, Sir, may flatter yourself, you shall sit a state auctioneer, with your hammer in your hand, and knock down to each colony as it bids. Burke, on Concil. with America.

A'UCTIVE. adj. [from auctus, Lat.] Of an increasing quality. Dict.

AUDA'CIOUS.† adj. [audacicus, Fr. audax, Lat.]

α. Bold; impudent; daring; always in a bad sense, Dr. Johnson says; yet surely not so.

Such is thy audacious wickedness,

Thy leud, pestif'rous, and dissentious pranks.

Shakspeare.

Till Jove, no longer patient, took his time
To avenge with thunder their audacious crime. Dryden.
Young students, by a constant habit of disputing, grow impudent and audacious, proud and disdainful. Watts.

2. That which makes bold.

They have got metheglin, and audacious ale,
And talk like tyrants! Beaum. and Fl. Woman's Prize, ii. 5.
3. Spirited; without impudence; not timorous. *

She that shall be my wife must be accomplished with courtly and audacious ornaments. B. Jonson, Silent Woman.
Her sparkling eyes with manly vigour shone;
Big was her voice, audacious was her tone:—
The maid becomes a youth. Dryden, Ov. Iphis and Ianthe.

AUDA'CIOUSLY. † adv. [from audacious.] Boldly; impudently.

An angel shalt thou see;
Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously.

After his conscience has worn off those restrictions, and becomes hardened and steeled with custom in sinning, [he] may lash on furiously and audaciously, with an high hand and bare face, against the grudges of conscience, the terrors of God, and the shame of the world; till at last he ends a wretched course in irrecoverable perdition; unless God in mercy steps in, and by a potent over-ruling hand of conviction rebukes the rage of his corruption, and says, thus far it shall come, and no further. South's Sermon, ix. 189.

AUDA'CIOUSNESS. † n. s. [from audacious.] Impudence.

In the siege of Paris, they were grown to that audaciousness as to persuade the people there, that the thunder of the pope's excommunications had so blasted the hereticks, that their faces were grown all black and ugly as devils, their eyes and looks ghastly, &c. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

He had the audaciousness to throw himself at my feet, talk of the stillness of the evening, and then ran into deifications of my person. Tatler, No. 37.

It was impossible for popery at once to arrive at this height of audaciousness. Young on Idolatrous Corruptions, ii. 259.

AUDA'CITY. n. s. [from audax, Lat.] Spirit; boldness; confidence.

Lean, raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose,
They had such courage and audacity? Shakspeare.

Great effects come of industry and perseverance; for audacity doth almost bind and mate the weaker sort of minds.

For want of that freedom and audacity, necessary in commerce with men, his personal modesty overthrew all his publick actions. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Tatler.

AUDIBLE. adj. [audibilis, Lat.]

1. That which may be perceived by hearing.

Visibles work upon a looking-glass, and audibles upon the places of echo, which resemble in some sort the cavern of the ear. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Eve, who unseen,
Yet all had heard, with audible lament
Discover'd soon the place of her retire. Milton.

Every sense doth not operate upon fancy with the same force. The conceits of visibles are clearer and stronger than those of audibles. Grew.

2. Loud enough to be heard.

One leaning over a wall twenty-five fathom deep, and speaking softly, the water returned an audible echo. Bacon.

AUDIBLE.* n. s. [from the adj.] The object of hearing.

The smell doth not once dream of audibles;
The hearing never knew the verdant paint
Of spring's gay mantle. More, Song of Soul, P. 2. B. 2. C. 2. st. 4.

AUDIBLENESS. n. s. [from audible.] Capableness of being heard.

AUDIBLY. † adv. [from audible.] In such a manner as to be heard.

And last, the sum of all, my Father's voice,
Audibly heard from heav'n, pronounc'd me his. Milton.

Those he meets on the way he blesseth audibly, and with those he overtakes or that overtake him he begins good discourses.

Herbert's Country Parson, ch. 17.
The last word he spoke was Amen, to the commendatory prayer, which he repeated twice distinctly and audibly after his usual manner. Nelson's Life of Bp. Bull, p. 474.

AUDIENCE. n. s. [audience, Fr.]

1. The act of hearing or attending to any thing.

Now I breathe again
Aloft the flood, and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will. Shakspeare.
Thus far his bold discourse, without controul,
Had audience. Milton.

His look
Drew audience, and attention still as night,
Or summer's noon-tide air. Milton.

2. The liberty of speaking granted; a hearing.

Were it reason to give men audience, pleading for the overthrow of that which their own deed hath ratified? Hooker.
According to the fair play of the world,
Let me have audience: I am sent to speak,
My holy lord of Milan, from the king. Shakspeare

3. An auditory; persons collected to hear.

Or, if the star of ev'ning, and the moon,
Haste to thy audience, night with her will bring Silence. Milton.

The hall was filled with an audience of the greatest eminence for quality and politeness. Addison.

It proclaims the triumphs of goodness in a proper audience, even before the whole race of mankind. Atterbury.

4. The reception of any man who delivers a solemn message.

In this high temple, on a chair of state,
The seat of audience, old Latinus sat. Dryden.

AUDIENCE-CHAMBER.* n. s. The place of reception for those who attend a solemn meeting.

He summoned all the prince, now resident in this court, to appear before him in the great audience-chamber.

Translation of Boccaccio, (1626) p. 94.

AUDIENCE COURT. † [A court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, of equal authority with the arches court, though inferior both in dignity and antiquity. The original of this court was, because the archbishop of Canterbury heard several causes extrajudicially at home in his own palace; which he usually committed to be discussed by men learned in the civil and canon laws, whom he called his auditors: and so in time it became the power of the man, who is called causarum negotiorumque audientie Cantuariensis auditor, seu officialis. Coxvel.

This court is now merged in the court of the arches, the official of it for a long time past having been united in the dean of the arches, who keeps his court in doctors-commons' hall. The see of York also has its court of audience. V. Burn, Ecc. Law.]

None to be cited into the arches or audience, but dwellers within the archbishop's diocese or peculiar.

Const. and Canons Eccl. 94.

AUDIENT.* n. s. [Lat. audiens.] A hearer.

The audients of her sad story felt great motions both of pity and admiration for her misfortune.

Shelton's Transl. of Don Quixote, iv. 2.

AUDIT. n. s. [from audit, he hears, Lat.] A final account.

If they, which are accustomed to weigh all things, shall here sit down to receive our audit, the sum, which truth amounteth to, will appear to be but this.

He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows save heav'n? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran,
To A'UDIT.† v. a. [from audit.] To take an account finally. Shakspeare.

Bishops ordinaries auditing all accounts, take twelve pence.

When we reckon up and audit the expenses of the doctor's time.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
Fell's Life of Hammond.

To A'UDIT.† v. n. To sum up. Dr. Johnson had considered this only as a verb active.

I love exact dealing, and let Hocus audit; he knows how the money was disbursed.
Arbutnot.

*A'UDIT-HOUSE.* n. s. [from audit and house.]* An appendage to most cathedrals, for the transactions of affairs belonging to them.

The church of Canterbury (till within this two or three years) had the morning-prayers at seven or eight of the clock in the morning; the sermon at ten in the audit-house; and then the rest of the communion-service, and the communion, in the choir.
Sir G. Whole. Acc. of Churches, p. 115.

AUDITION. n. s. [auditio, Lat.] Hearing.

*A'UDITIVE.* adj. [Fr. auditif.]* Having the power of hearing.
Cotgrave.

A'UDITOR. n. s. [auditor, Lat.]

1. A hearer.

Dear cousin, you that were last day so high in the pulpit against lovers, are you now become so mean an auditor? Sidney.

What a play tow'rd? I'll be an auditor;

An actor too, perhaps.
Shakspeare.

This first doctrine, though admitted by many of his auditors, is expressly against the Epicureans.
Bentley.

2. A person employed to take an account ultimately.

If you suspect my husbandry,

Call me before th' exactest auditors,

And set me on the proof.

Shakspeare, Timon.

3. In ecclesiastical law.

The archbishop's usage was to commit the discussing of causes to persons learned in the law, stiled his auditors.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. In the state.

A king's officer, who, yearly examining the accounts of all under-officers accountable, makes up a general book.
Cowel.

*AUDITORSHIP.* n. s.* The office of auditor.

At the accession of George the First, [he] was made earl of Halifax, knight of the garter, and first commissioner of the treasury, with a grant to his nephew of the reversion of the *auditors*hip of the exchequer.
Johnson, Life of Halifax.

AUDITORY. adj. [auditorius, Lat.] That which has the power of hearing.

Is not hearing performed by the vibrations of some medium, excited in the auditory nerves by the tremours of the air, and propagated through the capillaments of those nerves? Newton.

AUDITORY.† n. s. [auditorium, Lat.]

1. An audience; a collection of persons assembled to hear.

Demades never troubled his head to bring his auditory to their wits, by dry reason.
L'Estrange.

Met in the church, I look upon you as an auditory fit to be waited on, as you are, by both universities.
South.

Several of this auditory were, perhaps, entire strangers to the person whose death we now lament.
Atterbury.

2. A place where lectures are to be heard.

His petition [to read lectures] was granted with a provision, that he should write one hundred verses on the glory of the university, and not suffer Ovid's Art of Love, and the Elegies of Pamphilus, to be studied in his auditory.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 130.

AUDITRESS. n. s. [from auditor.] The woman that hears; a she hearer.

Yet wert she not, as not with such discourse

Delighted, nor not capable her ear

Of what was high: such pleasure she reserv'd,
Adam relating, she sole auditress.

Milton.

*A'VE.* n. s. [Lat. ave, hail!]* The first part of the salutation, used by the Romanists, to the Virgin Mary; an abbreviation of the Ave Maria, or Ave Mary.

Nine hundred paternosters every day,
And thrice nine hundred aves she was wont to say.

Spenser, F. Q. i. iii. 13.

There was before, in the Roman church; a lesser set of 50 aves, and 5 paters, which they call beads.

Brevint's Saul and Samuel at Endor, p. 169.

To AVE'L. v. a. [avello, Lat.] To pull away.

The beaver in chase makes some division of parts, yet are not those parts avelled to be termed testicles. Brown, Vulg. Err.

A'VE' MARY. n. s. [from the first words of the salutation to the Blessed Virgin, Ave Maria.] A form of worship repeated by the Romanists in honour of the Virgin Mary.

'All his mind is bent on holiness,

To number Ave Marias on his beads.

Shakspeare.

A'VENAGE. n. s. [of arena, oats, Lat.] A certain quantity of oats paid to a landlord, instead of some other duties, or as a rent by the tenant. Dict.

*A'VENER, or A'VENOR.* n. s. [old Fr. wayner, avenor.]* An officer of the stable.

The avenor shall suffer no lackeys, boys, women, or others, to be about the stables, that are not of the prince's ordinary grooms.
Birch's Life of Henry, Pr. of Wales, App. p. 436.

To AVE'NGE. v. a. [venger, Fr.]

1. To revenge.

I will avenge me of mine enemies.

Isaiah.

They stood against their enemies, and were avenged of their adversaries.

Wisdom.

I will avenge the blood of Jezebel upon the house of Jehu.

Hosea.

2. To punish.

Till Jove, no longer patient, took his time

To avenge with thunder your audacious crime.

Dryden.

*AVE'NGE.* n. s. [from the verb.]* Revenge; vengeance. Not now in use.

And if to that avenge by you decreed
This hand may helpe, or succour aught supply,
It shall not fail when so ye shall it need.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vi. 8.

AVE'NGEANCE. n. s. [from avenge.] Punishment.

This neglected fear

Signal avengeance, such as overtook

Philips.

AVE'NGEMENT. n. s. [from avenge.] Vengeance; revenge.

That he might work th' avengement for his shame

On those two captives which had bred him blame.

Spenser.

All those great battles which thou boasts to win

Through strife and bloodshed, and avengement

Now praised, hereafter thou shalt repent.

Spenser.

AVE'NGER.† n. s. [from avenge, and Fr. vengeur.]

1. Punisher.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such.

1 Thess.

Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n

By his avengers; since no place like this

Can fit his punishment, or their revenge.

Milton.

2. Revenger; taker of vengeance for.

The just avenger of his injured ancestors, the victorious Louis was darting his thunder.

Dryden.

But just disease to luxury succeeds,

And ev'ry death its own avenger breeds.

Pope.

A'VENS. n. s. [caryophyllata, Lat.] The same with herb bennet. Miller.

AVENTURE. n. s. [aventure, Fr.] A mischance, causing a man's death, without felony; as when he is suddenly drowned, or burnt, by any sudden disease falling into the fire or water. See ADVENTURE. Cowel.

AVENUE. n. s. [avenue, Fr.] It is sometimes pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, as Watts observes; but has it generally placed on the first.]

1. A way by which any place may be entered.

Good guards were set up at all the avenues of the city, to keep all people from going out. Clarendon.

Truth is a strong hold, and diligence is laying siege to it: so that it must observe all the avenues and passes to it. South.

2. An alley, or walk of trees before a house.

To AVER. v. a. [averer, Fr. from verum, truth, Lat.] To declare positively, or peremptorily.

The reason of the thing is clear;
Would Jove the naked truth aver. Prior.

Then vainly the philosopher avers,
That reason guides our deed, and instinct theirs.
How can we justly diff'rent causes frame,
When the effects entirely are the same? Prior.

We may aver, though the power of God be infinite, the capacities of matter are within limits. Bentley.

AVERAGE. n. s. [averagium, Lat.]

1. In law, that duty or service which the tenant is to pay to the king, or other lord, by his beasts and carriages. Chambers.

2. In navigation, a certain contribution that merchants proportionably make towards the losses of such as have their goods cast overboard for the safety of the ship in a tempest; and this contribution seems so called, because it is so proportioned, after the rate of every man's average, or goods carried. Cowel.

3. A small duty which merchants, who send goods in another man's ship, pay to the master thereof for his care of them, over and above the freight. Chambers.

4. A medium; a mean proportion.

To AVERAGE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To compare several sorts or quantities of goods, and thence to fix a price; to estimate according to a given period of time; to proportion.

AVE'RMEN.T. † n. s. [from avrr.]

1. Establishment of any thing by evidence.

To avoid the oath, for avermment of the continuance of some estate, which is eigne, the party will sue a pardon. Bacon.

2. An offer of the defendant to justify an exception, and the act as well as the offer. Blount.

3. Simply, affirmation.

Thus much of the civil and canon lawyers' avermment of an elder brother's right to his father's fortunes.

The Younger Brother's Apology, p. 22.
Your lordship's absence was excused by an avermment that you were indisposed. Bp. Nicolson to Bp. Hordly, p. 19.

That it is the province of the jury, in informations and indictments for libels, to try nothing more than the fact of the composing and of the publishing avermments and innuendos, is a doctrine held at present by all the judges of the King's Bench.

Burke, on the Powers of Juris in Prosecutions for Libels.

AVE'RNAT. n. s. A sort of grape. See VINE.

AVERPENNY.* n. s. [from averia or avere and penny.]

V. AVERAGE. "Averpeny, hoc est, quietum esse de diversis denariis pro averagio domini regis,"

A V E

Rastall.] A word of frequent occurrence in our old charters.

Averpeny, money paid towards the king's carriages by land, instead of service by the beasts (averia) in kind.

Burn, Hist. of Westm. and Cumb. Gloss.

AVERRUNCA'TION. † n. s. [old Fr. averruncation.] The act of rooting up any thing.

Whether averruncation of epidemical diseases, by telems, be feasible and lawful. Robinson, Endoza, (1658) p. 82.

To AVERRUNCATE. † v. a. [averrunco, Lat. averronquer, old Fr.] To root up; to tear up by the roots.

Sure some mischief will come of it,

Unless by providential wit,

Or force, we averruncate it. Hudibras.

AVERSATION. † n. s. [from aversor, Lat.]

1. Hatred; abhorrence; turning away with detestation.

Hatred is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of aversion and hostility included in its essence. South.

Folly is freakish and humorous, impertinent and obstreperous, inconstant and inconsistent, peevish and exceptionous; and consequently fastidious to society, and productive of aversion and disrespect. Barrow's Works, i. 4.

2. It is most properly used with from before the object of hate.

There was a stiff aversion in my lord of Essex from applying himself to the earl of Leicester. Wotton.

They are not all affected with it; nay, on the contrary, find an aversion of their spirits from it. Bp. Hall's Works, ii. 568.

Which impressions of dispositions either produce in the heart a positive inclination to, or at least extinguish its former aversion from, the sin suggested to it. South, Sermon, vi. 261

3. Sometimes with to; less properly.

There is such a general aversion in human nature to contempt, that there is scarce any thing more exasperating. I will not deny, but the excess of the aversion may be levelled against pride. Government of the Tongue.

4. Sometimes, very improperly, with towards.

A natural and secret hatred and aversion towards society, in any man, hath somewhat of the savage beast. Baron.

5. Sometimes with of.

There is in man's nature an aversion or abhorrency of disgrace. Barrow, Expos. on the Creed.

God hath always declared his delight in the felicity, and his aversion of the misery and destruction, of his creatures.

Hallywell's Saving of Souls, p. 32.

AVE'ERSE. adj. [aversus, Lat.]

1. Malign; not favourable; having such a hatred as to turn away.

Their courage languish'd, as their hopes decay'd,
And Pallas, now averse, refus'd her aid. Dryden.

2. Not pleased with; unwilling to.

Has thy uncertain bosom ever strove
With the first tumults of a real love?
Hast thou now dreaded, and now bless'd his sway,
By turns averse, and joyful to obey? Prior.

Averse alike to flatter, or offend,
Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend. Pope.

3. It has most properly from before the object of aversion.

Laws politick are never framed as they should be, unless presuming the will of man to be inwardly obstinate, rebellious, and averse from all obedience unto the sacred laws of his nature.

Hooker.

They believed all who objected against their undertaking to be averse from peace. Clarendon.

These cares alone her virgin breast employ,
Averse from Venus and the nuptial joy. Pope.

4. Very frequently, but improperly, to, Dr. Johnson says; but, as Campbell, in his Philosophy of Rhetoric, observes, from is the Latin idiom; and to is more agreeable to the analogy of our language; dislike and hatred, words synonymous with averse-ness and aversion, being so construed. Perhaps a number of examples with from to averse and av- sion, before Clarendon, might be brought to shew its prevalence then over the usage of to. But the latter seems now to prevail.

He had, from the beginning of the war, been very averse to any advice of the privy council. Clarendon.

Diodorus tells us of one Charondos, who was averse to all innovation, especially when it was to proceed from particular persons. Swift.

AVE'RSELY. † adv. [from averse.]

1. Unwillingly; unfavourably.

My black-wing'd fate
Hovers aversely over that fond hope.

Beaumont and Fl. Marital Maid, ii. 2.

2. Backwardly.

Not only they want those parts of secretion, but it is emitted aversely, or backward, by both sexes. Brown. Vulg. Err.

AVE'RSENESS. † n. s. [from averse.]

1. Unwillingness; backwardness.

Not avoiding his company, or doing any thing of averseness, save in the very act of punishment.

Herbert's Country Parson, ch. 25.

Subject we must be, whether we will or no; but if willingly, then is our service perfect freedom; if unwillingly, then is our averseness everlasting misery. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

The corruption of man is in nothing more manifest, than in his averseness, to entertain any friendship or familiarity with God. Atterbury.

2. With from before the object of dislike.

Is it not commonly sloth rather than activity, an averseness from this rather than an inclination to any other employment, which diverteth us from our prayers? Barrow's Works, i. 61.

Applauding himself for his forwardness to all due reformation, and his averseness from all such kind of sacrilege.

Milton, Eiconoclastes, ch. 14.

3. With to before the object.

Many impotencies, or rather averseness to good, are charged upon a natural account, which indeed are the effects only of habitual sins. Smith, Sermon, vi. 426.

Some men have an averseness to it [dancing,] and these it seldom becomes. Feltham's Resolves, R. 70. B. 2.

AVE'RSION. † n. s. [aversion, Fr. aversio, Lat.]

1. Hatred; dislike; detestation; such as turns away from the object.

What if with like aversion I reject
Riches and realms?

Milton.

The aversion of God's face is confusion; the least bending of his brow is perdition. Bp. Hall's Rem. p. 24.

2. It is used most properly with from before the object of hate.

They had an inward aversion from it, and were resolved to prevent it by all possible means. Clarendon.

With men these considerations are usually causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others; but with God, so many reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Sprat.

The same adhesion to vice, and aversion from goodness, will be a reason for rejecting any proof whatsoever. Atterbury.

3. Sometimes, less properly, with to, Dr. Johnson says; perhaps not correctly, as is shewn in the observation on averse with to.

A freeholder is bred with an aversion to subjection. Addison.
I might borrow illustrations of freedom and aversion to receive new truths from modern astronomy. Watts.

4. Sometimes with for.

The Lucquese would rather throw themselves under the government of the Genoese, than submit to a state for which they have so great aversion. Addison.

This aversion of the people for the late proceedings of the commons, might be improved to good uses. Swift.

5. Sometimes, very improperly, with towards.

His aversion towards the house of York was so predominant, as it found place not only in his councils but in his bed. Bacon.

1. These not, as aversion.

It is not capable of pleasure in compounding law-suits among for which they were the aversion of the ng robe. Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Self-love and reason to one end aspire;
Pain their aversion, pleasure their desire.

Pope.

7. Simply, conversion or change.

The addition of the words "you, and the rest," is a familiar figurative speech, called apostrophe, which is an aversion of speech from one thing or person to another.

Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, p. 161.

To AVE'RT. v. a. [averto, Lat.]

1. To turn aside; to turn off.

I beseech you

To avert your liking a more worthy way,

Than on a wretch.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

At this, for the last time, she lifts her hand,
Averts her eyes, and half unwilling drops the brand. Dryden.

2. To cause to dislike.

When people began to spy the falsehood of oracles, whereupon all gentility was built, their hearts were utterly averted from it. Hooker.

Even cut themselves off from the opportunities of proselytizing others, by averting them from their company.

Government of the Tongue.

3. To put by, as a calamity.

O Lord! avert whatsoever evil our swerving may threaten unto his church. Hooker.

Diversity of conjectures made many, whose conceits averted from themselves the fortune of that war, to become careless and secure. Knolles.

These affections earnestly fix our minds on God, and forcibly avert from us those things which are displeasing to him, and contrary to religion. Sprat.

Thro' threaten'd lands they wild destruction throw,
Till ardent prayer averts the public woe.

Prior.

To AVE'RT.* v. n. [Lat. averto.] To turn away.

A latinism.

Cold, and averting from our neighbour's good. Thomson.

AVE'RTER.* n. s. [from avert.] That which averts or puts by.

Averters and purgers must go together, as tending all to the same purpose, to divert this rebellious humour, [melancholy,] and turn it another way. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 392.

Averters must be used to the liver and spleen. Ibid. p. 405.

AUF. † n. s. [of af, Dutch.] A fool, or silly fellow. Dict.

A meer changeling, a very monster, an auf imperfect.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 524.

A'UGER. n. s. [egger, Dutch.] A carpenter's tool to bore holes with.

The auger hath a handle and bit; its office is to make great round holes. When you use it, the stuff you work upon is commonly laid low under you, that you may the easier use your strength: for in twisting the bit about by the force of both your hands, on each end of the handle one, it cuts great chips out of the stuff. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

AUGHT. pronoun. [auht, aplit, Saxon. It is sometimes, improperly, written ought.] Any thing.

If I can do it,

By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him.

Shakspeare.

They may, for aught I know, obtain such substances as may induce the chymists to entertain other thoughts. Boyle.

But go, my son, and see if aught be wanting

Among thy father's friends.

Addison, Cato.

To AUGMENT. v. a. [augmenter, Fr.] To encrease; to make bigger, or more.

Some cursed weeds her cunning hand did know,

That could augment his harm, encrease his pain.

Fairfax.

Rivers have streams added to them in their passage, which enlarge and augment them. Hale's Common Law of England.

To AUGMENT. v. n. To encrease; to grow bigger.

But as his heat with running did augment,
Much more his sight encreas'd his hot desire.

Sidney.

A U G

The winds redouble, and the rains augment;
The waves on heaps are dash'd, Dryden, Virgil.

AUGMENT. n. s. [augmentum, Lat.]

1. Encrease; quantity gained.

You shall find this augment of the tree to be without the diminution of one drachm of the earth. Walton's Angler.

2. State of encrease.

Discussions are improper in the beginning of inflammations; but proper, when mixed with repellents, in the augment. Wiseman.

AUGMENTATION.† n. s. [from augment.]

1. The act of encreasing or making bigger.

Those who would be zealous against regular troops after a peace, will promote an augmentation of those on foot. Addison.

2. The state of being made bigger.

What modification of matter can make one embryo capable of so prodigiously vast augmentation, while another is confined to the minuteness of an insect. Bentley.

3. The thing added, by which another is made bigger.

By being glorified, it does not mean that he doth receive any augmentation of glory at our hands; but his name we glorify, when we testify our acknowledgment of his glory. Hooker.

4. In heraldry, an especial mark of honour, borne either as an escutcheon, or a canton; as the baronets of England bear the arms of Ulster in Ireland, in an escutcheon on their own arms.

AUGMENTATION Court.† A court erected by king Henry the Eighth, for the increase of the revenues of his crown, by the suppression of monasteries.

In the year 1536, he was constituted, by the king, treasurer of the court of augmentations of the king's revenue, on its first establishment by act of parliament.

Warton's Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 11.

AUGMENTATIVE.* adj. [Fr. augmentatif.] Having the quality of augmenting.

Some of them [terminations of verbal nouns] being augmentative, some diminutive. Instructions for Oratory, p. 32.

AUGMENTER.* n. s. [from augment, an old substantive indeed, preserved by Cotgrave in augmentateur, but not noticed in the dictionary of Johnson, though it had been employed by him in his plan of it.] He who enlarges or augments.

Perhaps I may at last have reason to say, after one of the augmenters of Furetier, that my book is more learned than its author. Johnson's Plan of an English Dict.

AUGRE. n. s. A carpenter's tool. See AUGER.

Your temples burned in the cement, and
Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an augre's bore. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

AUGRE-HOLE. n. s. [from augre and hole.] A hole made by boring with an augre; proverbially a narrow space.

What should be spoken here,
Where our fate hid within an augre-hole,
May rush and seize us. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

AUGUR. n. s. [augur, Lat.] One who pretends to predict by omens, as by the flight of birds.

What say the augurs?

— They would not have you stir forth to-day:
Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast. Shakspeare.

Calchas, the sacred seer, who had in view
Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew:
Supreme of augurs. Dryden, Fables.

As I and mine consult thy augur,
Grant the glad omen; let thy fav'rite rise
Propitious, ever soaring from the right. Prior.

To AUGUR. v. n. [from augur.] To guess; to conjecture by signs.

The people love me, and the sea is mine,
My pow'r's a crescent, and my *aug'r*ing hope
Says it will come to the full. Shakspeare.

My *aug'r*ing mind assures the same success. Dryden.

A V I

To AUGUR.* v. a. To foretell.

I did augur all this to him before-hand. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

To AUGURATE.† v. n. [augurator, Lat.] To judge by augury.

I have just now from Bath got sight of the remarks. I augurated truly the improvement they would receive this way.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. cli.

AUGURATION. n. s. [from augur.] The practice of augury, or of foretelling by events and prodigies.

Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he continued the tripudiary augurations. Brown, Vulg. Err.

AUGURER. n. s. [from augur.] The same with augur.

These apparent prodigies,

And the persuasion of his augurers,
May hold him from the capitol to-day. Shakspeare.

AUGURIAL. adj. [from augury.] Relating to augury.

On this foundation were built the conclusions of soothsayers, in their augurial and tripudiary divinations. Brown.

To AUGURISE. v. n. [from augur.] To practise divination by augury. Dict.

AUGUROUS. adj. [from augur.] Predicting; prescient; foreboding.

So fear'd

The fair-man'd horses, that they flew back, and their chariots turn'd, Presaging in their augurous hearts the labours that they mourn'd. Chapman's Iliad.

AUGURY. n. s. [augurium, Lat.]

1. The act of prognosticating by omens or prodigies.

Thy face and thy behaviour,
Which, if my augury deceive me not,
Witness good breeding. Shakspeare.

The winds are chang'd, your friends from danger free,
Or I renounce my skill in augury. Dryden, Æneid.

She knew by augury divine,
Venus would fail in the design. Swift.

2. An omen or prediction.

What if this death, which is for him design'd,
Had been your doom (far be that augury!)
And you not, Aurengzebe, condemn'd to die? Dryden.

The pow'rs we both invoke,
To you, and yours, and mine, propitious be,
And firm our purpose with an augury. Dryden.

AUGUST. n. s. [Augustus, Lat.] The name of the eighth month from January inclusive.

August was dedicated to the honour of Augustus Cæsar, because, in the same month, he was created consul, thrice triumpher in Rome, subdued Egypt to the Roman empire, and made an end of civil wars; being before called Sextilis, or the sixth from March. Peacham.

AUGUST. adj. [augustus, Lat.] Great: grand; royal; magnificent; awful.

There is nothing so contemptible, but antiquity can render it august and excellent. Glanville, Scipius.

The Trojan chief appear'd in open sight,
August in visage, and serenely bright;
His mother goddess, with her hands divine,
Had form'd his curling locks, and made his temples shine. Dryden.

AUGUSTNESS. n. s. [from august.] Elevation of look; dignity; loftiness of mien or aspect.

AVIARY. n. s. [from avis, Lat. a bird.] A place inclosed to keep birds in.

In aviaries of wire, to keep birds of all sorts, the Italians bestow vast expence; including great scope of ground, variety of bushes, trees of good height, running waters, and sometimes a stove annexed, to temper the air in winter. Wolton's Architecture.

Look now to your aviary; for now the birds grow sick of their feathers. Evelyn's Kalendar.

A U L

AVI'DIOUSLY.* adv. [Lat. avidus, Fr. avide, Welsh awyddus, greedy, covetous.] The old Eng. adverb for eagerly; greedily. Not now in use. See AVIDITY.

Nothing is more avidously to be desired than is the sweet peace of God. Bible, on the Revelations, sign. D. viii.

Avydously we drynke the wyne of other landes, we bye up their fruites and spyes. Leland's New Year's Gift, sign. K. 3. b.

AVIDITY.† n. s. [avidité, Fr. aviditas, Lat. awydd, Welsh, corresponding with the old Fr. avyd, (desir brulant,) from the Celtick. V. Lacombe. Avidity is an old English word, as it occurs in a dictionary of 1623, and is used by an excellent writer of that period; though Dr. Johnson found no example.] Greediness; eagerness; appetite; insatiable desire.

In all which we may see an infinite avidity; and such as cannot be satisfied with any finite object.

Fotherby's Athcomastir, p. 199.

To AVI'LE.* v. a. [old Fr. aviler, to despise.] To depreciate; to hold cheap.

Being deprest awhile,

Want makes us know the price of what we' avile.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

To AVI'SE.* v. n. [Fr. aviser.] To consider. Not now in use. See To AVIZF.

They stay'd not to avise who first should bee,

But all spurr'd after, fast as they mote fly,

To reskew her from shamefull villany. Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 18.

AVI'SE.* n. s. [Fr. avis, Ital. aviso, low Lat. advviso.]

To AUMA'IL.† v. a. [from maille, Fr., the mesh of a net; whence a coat of aumail, a coat with network of iron.] To variegate; to figure. Upton explains it, to enamel; and he is right, though Dr. Johnson seems to doubt it; and the word may be referred to the low Lat. amelatus, amelled. Fr. esmail, ammel, or enamel. See AMELLED.

In gilden buskins of costly cordwaine,

All bard with golden bendes, which were entail'd

With curious anticks, and full fair aumail'd.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 27.

AU'BRY. See AMBRY.

AUNT.† n. s. [tante, Fr. amita, Lat. Dr. Johnson says; but it is from the old Fr. ante, which is derived from the Celtick. V. Lacombe.] A father or mother's sister, correlative to nephew or niece.

Who meets us here? my niece Plantagenet,

Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Glo'ster. Shakespeare

She went to plain work, and to purling brooks,

Old fashion'd halls, dull aunts, and croaking rooks. Pope.

A'UNTER.* n. s. The old word for ADVENTURE, of which it is a corruption.

AVOCADO. n. s. [Span. Persica, Lat.] The name of a tree that grows in great plenty in the Spanish West Indies.

The fruit is of itself very insipid, for which reason they generally eat it with the juice of lemons and sugar, to give it a poignancy. Miller.

To AVOCATE.† v. a. [avoco, Lat.] To call off from business; to call away.

Seeing now all proceeding in England inhibited, the cause avocated to Rome, Campegius recalled, &c.

Ld. Herbert's Hist. Hen. VIII. p. 259.

Their divesture of mortality dispenses them from those laborious and avocating duties to distressed christians, and their secular relations, which are here requisite. Boyle.

AVOCATION.† n. s. [from avocate. All Dr. Johnson's examples give the word in the plural number, and Mr. Boucher denies that it is used in the singular. It should seem, by our old lexicography, to have been received in the singular: "AVOCATION, a withdrawing, or calling from; a distraction;" Bullokar's Expos. of Hard Words.]

1. The act of calling aside.

The bustle of business, the avocations of our senses, and the din of a clamorous world, are impediments. Glanville.

Stir up that remembrance, which his many avocations of business have caused him to lay aside. Dryden.

God does frequently inject into the soul blessed impulses to duty, and powerful avocations from sin. South.

2. The business that calls; or the call that summons away.

It is a subject that we may make some progress in its contemplation within the time, that in the ordinary time of life, and with the permission of necessary avocations, a man may employ in such a contemplation. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

By the secular cares and avocations which accompany marriage, the clergy have been furnished with skill in common life. Atterbury

To AVOID.† v. a. [vuider, Fr.]

1. To shun; to decline.

The wisdom of pleasing God, by doing what he commands, and avoiding what he forbids. Tillotson.

2. To escape; as, he avoided the blow, by turning aside.

3. To endeavour to shun.

A toad contains not those urinary parts which are found in other animals to avoid that serous excretion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

6. To oppose; to hinder effect.

The removing that which caused putrefaction, doth prevent and avoid putrefaction. Bacon.

7. To vacaté; to annul. [old Fr. avoyde, nul, compté pour rien.]

How can these grants of the king's be avoided without wronging of those lords which had these lands and lordships given them? Spenser.

Many who had followed the king in the war, and so made themselves liable to those penalties which the parliament had prepared for them and subjected them to, had made many feigned conveyances, with such limitations and so absolutely (that no trust might be discovered by those who had power to avoid it) that they were indeed too absolute to be avoided by themselves; and their estates became so much out of their own disposal, that they could neither apply them to the payment of their just debts, or to the provision for their children. Ld. Clarendon's Life, ii. 307.

To AVOID. v. n.

1. To retire.

And Saul cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it; and David avoided out of his presence twice. 1 Sam.

2. To become void or vacant.

Bishopricks are not included under benefices: so that if a person takes a bishoprick, it does not avoid by force of that law of pluralities, but by the ancient common law. Ayliffe.

AVOIDABLE. adj. [from avoid.]

1. That which may be avoided, shunned, or escaped.

Want of exactness in such nice experiments is scarce avoidable. Boyle.

To take several things for granted, is hardly avoidable to any one, whose task it is to shew the falsehood or improbability of any truth. Locke.

2. Liable to be vacated or annulled.

The charters were not avoidable for the king's nonage; and if there could have been any such pretence, that alone would not avoid them. Judge Hale.

AVOIDANCE. † n. s. [from avoid.]

1. The act of avoiding.

Both of them [light and darkness] are mentioned with an intention of drawing in an exhortation to that purity which we should affect, and the avoidance of all the state and works of darkness which we should abhor. Bp. Hall's Rem. p. 37.

It is appointed to give us vigour in the pursuit of what is good, or in the avoidance of what is hurtful. Watts.

2. The course by which any thing is carried off.

For avoidances and drainings of water, where there is too much, we shall speak of. Bacon.

3. The act or state of becoming vacant.

Avoidance of an ecclesiastical benefice, is 1. by death, which is the act of God. 2. by resignation, which is the act of the incumbent. 3. by cession, or the acceptance of a benefice incompatible, which also is the act of the incumbent. 4. by deprivation, which is the act of the ordinary. 5. by the act of the law; as in case of simony; not subscribing the articles or declaration; or not reading the articles or the common prayer. Burn.

4. The act of annulling.

AVOIDER. † n. s. from avoid.]

1. The person that avoids or shuns any thing.

Good sir, steal away; you were wont to be a curious avoider of woman's company. Braun, and Fl. Honest Man's Fortune, iv. i.

2. The person that carries any thing away.

3. The vessel in which things are carried away.

AVOIDLESS. † adj. [from avoid.] Inevitable; that which cannot be avoided.

She too, when sipsen'd years she shall attain,
Must, of avoidless right, be yours again. Dryden, Trans. of Ovid's Met. b. 10.

That avoidless ruin in which the whole empire would be involved. Dennis's Letters.

AVOIRDUPOIS. † n. s. [avoir du poids, Fr. Dr. Johnson says; but he should have added averia ponderis, Lat., literally, goods of weight, i. e. goods sold by weight, aver in old Fr. and avoir in modern, signifying goods, like the low Lat. averium, averum, avere. V. Du Cange. Our word is also written averdupois.] A kind of weight, of which a pound contains sixteen ounces, and is in proportion to a pound Troy, as seventeen to fourteen. All the larger and coarser commodities are weighed by avoirdupois weight. Chambers.

Probably the Romans left their ounce in Britain, which is now our avoirdupois ounce: for our Troy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To AVO'KE. \ v. a.* [Lat. avoco. Mr. Boucher has noticed this verb, but with the example only of a Scottish author. It is an old Eng. verb, found in a vocabulary of 1623.] To call from, or back again. Not now in use. Cockeram.

AVOLA'TION. n. s. [from avolo, to fly away, Lat.] The act of flying away; flight; escape.

These airy vegetables are made by the relics of plantal emissives, whose avolation was prevented by the condensed enclosure. Glanville, Scepis.

Strangers, or the fungous parcels about candles, only signify a pluvius air, hindering the avolation of the faviolous particles. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

To AVOUCH. v. a. [avouer, Fr. for this word we now generally say vouch.]

1. To affirm; to maintain; to declare peremptorily.

They boldly avouched that themselves only had the truth, which they would at all times defend. Hooker.

Wretched though I seem,

I can produce a champion that will prove
What is avouched here. Shakspeare, King Lear.

2. To produce in favour of another.

Such antiquities could have been avouched for the Irish. Spenser, Ireland.

3. To vindicate; to justify.

You will think you made no offence, if the duke avouch the justice of your dealing. Shakspeare, Measure for Measure.

AVO'UCH. n. s. [from the verb.] Declaration; evidence; testimony.

I might not this believe,
Without the sensible and try'd avouch
Of mine own eyes. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

AVO'UCHABLE. † adj. [from avouch.] That which may be avouched. Sherwood.

AVO'UCHER. n. s. [from avouch.] He that avouches.

AVO'UCHMENT. \ n. s.* [from avouch.] Declaration.

The neglecting any of their auspices, or the chirping of their chickens, was esteemed a piacular crime which required more expiation than murder. Bp. Story on the Priesthood, ch. 5.

2. Protection; favour shewn.

Great father Mars, and greater Jove,
By whose high auspice Rome hath stood

So long. B. Jonson.

B. Jonson.

3. Influence; good derived to others from the piety of their patron.

It [the armada] was so great,
Yet by the auspice of Eliza beat. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.
But so may he live long, that town to sway,
Which by his auspice they will nobler make,
As he will hallow their ashes by his stay. Dryden.

4. Persons that [anciently] handfasted the married couple; that wished them good luck; that took care for the dowry: and heard them profess that they came together for the sake of children. [B. Jonson, note to the following passage.]

In the midst went the auspices; after them, two that sung.
Masques at Court, Hymenæi.

And bright as heav'n from whence the blessing came. Roscommon.

Two battles your auspicious cause has won;
Thy sword can perfect what it has begun. Dryden.

- AUSPICIOUSLY. † adj. [from auspicious.] Happily; prosperously; with prosperous omens.

I look'd for ruin: and encrease of honour
Meets me auspiciously. Middleton, Witch, iv. 1.

AUSPICIOUSNESS. n. s. [from auspicious.] Prosperity; promise of happiness.

AUSTERE. † adj. [austerus, Lat., austere, Fr.]

1. Severe; harsh; rigid.

When men represent the Divine nature, as an austere and rigorous master, always lifting up his hand to take vengeance; such conceptions must unavoidably raise terror. Rogers.

Austere Saturnus say,
From whence this wrath? or who controuls thy sway? Pope.

2. Sour of taste; harsh.

Th' austere and pondrous juices they sublime,
Make them ascend the porous soil, and climb
The orange-tree, the citron, and the lime. Blackmore.

Austere wines, diluted with water, cool more than water alone, and at the same time do not relax. Arbuthnot on Alim.

AUSTERELY. † adv. [from austere.] Severely; rigidly.

Ah! Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Might'st thou perceive austerely in his eye,
That he did plead in earnest. Shakspeare.

Hypocrites austerely talk
Of purity, and place, and innocence. Milton, P. L.

I am not so austerely scrupulous as to deny the lawfulness of these abundant provisions, upon just occasions.

Bp. Hall, Occ. Meditations, lxxxii.

AUSTERENESS. n. s. [from austere.]

1. Severity; strictness; rigour.

My unsoil'd name, th' austereness of my life,
May vouch against you; and my place i' th' state
Will so your accusation outweigh. Shakspeare.

If an indifferent and unjudicious object could draw the austereness into a smile, he hardly could resist the proper motives thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Roughness in taste.

AUSTERITY. n. s. [from austere.]

1. Severity; mortified life; strictness.

Now, Marcus Cato, your new consul's spy,
What is your sour austerity sent t' explore? B. Jonson.

What was that snakey-headed Gorgon shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin,
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone,
But rigid looks of chaste austerity,
And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence
With sudden adoration and blank awe? Milton.

This prince kept the government, and yet lived in this convent with all the rigour and austerity of a capuchin. Addison.

2. Cruelty; harsh discipline.

Let not austerity breed servile fear;
No wanton sound offend her virgin ear. Roscommon.

AUSTRAL. adj. [australis, Lat.] Southern; as the austral signs.

To AUSTRALIZE. v. n. [from auster, the south wind, Lat.] To tend towards the south.

Steel and good iron discover a verticity, or polar faculty; whereby they do septentriate at one extreme, and australize at another. Brown, Vulg. Err.

AUSTRINE. adj. [from austrinus, Lat.] Southern; southernly.

AUTHENTICAL. † adj. [from authentick.] Not fictitious; being what it seems; applied also to persons.

Of statutes made before time of memory, we have no authentic records, but only transcripts. Hale.

Any other nutriment, that by the judgement of the most authentic physicians where I travel, shall be thought dangerous. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

AUTHENTICALLY. adv. [from authentic.] After an authentick manner; with all the circumstances requisite to procure authority.

This point is dubious, and not yet authentically decided. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Conscience never commands or forbids any thing authentically, but there is some law of God which commands or forbids it first. South.

AUTHENTICALNESS. † n. s. [from authentic.] The quality of being authentick; genuineness; authority.

They did not at all rely upon the authenticness thereof. Barrow's Works, i. 357.

The instrument of Dr. Parker's consecration; with some attestations of the authenticness of it.

Burnet, Hist. Ref. vol. ii. Records, p. 363.

Nothing can be more pleasant than to see virtuosos about a cabinet of medals, descending upon the value, rarity, and authenticness of the several pieces. Addison.

To AUTHENTICATE. \ v. a.* [old Fr. authentifier.]

To prove by authority; to make authentick.

Bishop Kennet's "Parochial Antiquities," however elaborate or exact, replete with research and authenticated by curious evidences, are restricted to a few places and a short period.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, Pref. p. vi.

We are surprised to find verses of so modern a cast as the following at such an early period; which in this sagacious age we should judge to be a forgery, was not their genuineness authenticated, and their antiquity confirmed, by the venerable types of Caxton, &c. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 59.

AUTHENTICITY. n. s. [from authentick.] Authority; genuineness; the being authentick.

AUTHENTICK. † adj. [authenticus, Lat. authentique, Fr.] That which has every thing requisite to give it authority, as an authentick register. It is used in opposition to any thing by which authority is destroyed, as authentick, not counterfeit. It is never used of persons, Dr. Johnson says; whereas no word is more frequently applied to persons, as my examples will shew. Genuine; not fictitious; having authority.

Thou art wont his great authentick will Interpreter through highest heav'n to bring. Milton.
She joy'd th' authentick news to hear,
Of what she guess'd before, with jealous fear. Cowley.
But censure's to be understood
The authentick mark of the elect,
The publick stamp Heav'n sets on all that's great and good.

You are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authentick in your place and person. Shakespeare, M. Wiv. of Wind. ii. 2.

These are the most authentick rebels, next Tyrone, I ever heard of. Beaumont and Fl. Woman's Prize i. 3.
Some of the authentickest annalists report, that the old Gauls (now the French) and the Britons understood one another. Howell, Letters, ii. 55.

Don Face! why, he's the most authentick dealer
In these commodities! the superintendant
To all the quainter traffickers in town. B. Jonson, Alchemist.
Herodotus, much more authentique, futhers the chief upon Cleopas. Blount, Voyage to the Levant, p. 83.
Origen, a most authentick author in this point. Brevint, Saul and Samuel at Endor, p. 77.

AUTHENTICKLY. † adv. [from authentick.] After an authentick manner.

The doctrine and discipline of our church are authentickly contained in the foresaid books, canons, and constitutions. Bp. Barlow, Remains, p. 53.

AUTHENTICKNESS. † n. s. [from authentick.] The same with authenticity.

Could any the least suspicion have been raised among them concerning the authentickness of the fundamental records of the Jewish commonwealth. Stillingfleet, Orig. Sac. ii. 1.
They would receive no books as the writings of inspired men, but such of whose authentickness they had rational grounds. Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, p. xxvi.

AUTHOR. n. s. [auctor, Lat.]

1. The first beginner or mover of any thing; he to whom any thing owes its original.

That law, the author and observer whereof is one only God, to be blessed for ever. Hooker.
The author of that which causeth another thing to be, is author of that thing also which thereby is caused. Hooker.
I'll never

Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand
As if a man was author of himself,
And knew no other kin. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
My being gav'st me; whom should I obey
But thee? Milton, P. L.

But Faunus came from Picus, Picus drew
His birth from Saturn, if records be true.
Thus king Latinus, in the third degree,
Had Saturn author of his family. Dryden.

If the worship of false gods had not blinded the heathen, instead of teaching to worship the sun, and dead heroes, they would have taught us to worship our true Author and benefactor, as their ancestors did under the government of Noah and his sons, before they corrupted themselves. Newton.

2. The efficient; he that effects or produces any thing.

That which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Shakespeare.

Now while the tortur'd savage turns around,
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound;
The wound's great author close at hand provokes
His rage. Dryden, Fables.

From his loins
New authors of dissention spring; from him
Two branches, that in hosting long contend
For sovereign sway. Philips.

3. The first writer of any thing; distinct from the or or compiler.

To stand upon every point in particulars, belongeth to the first author of the story. 2 Macc. ii. 30.
An author has the choice of his own thoughts and words, which a translator has not. Dryden.

4. A writer in general.
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the laud Salike lies in Germany. Shakespeare.

To AUTHOR. * v. a. [from the noun.] To occasion; to effect.

Oh, execrable slaughter,
What hand hath author'd it? Beaumont and Fl. Bloody Brother.
Do you two think much,
That he thus wisely, and with need, consents
To what I author for your country's good? Ibid.

AUTHORESS. * n. s. [old Fr. authrice, "an autrix, authoress, or actress." Cotgrave.] A female efficient.

O Amarillis, auth'ress of my flame!
Sir R. Fanshawe, Past. T. p. 14.
Albeit his [Adam's] loss, without God's mercy, was absolutely irrecoverable; yet we never find he twitted her as authoress of his fall. Fellham, Sermon on St. Luke, xiv. 20.

AUTHORITATIVE. † adj. [from authority.]

1. Having due authority.

As the original word for Almighty is not put only for the Lord of Hosts, but often also for the Lord Shaddai; so we must not restrain the signification to the power authoritative, but extend it also to that power which is properly operative and executive. Pearson on the Creed, Art. I.
It is of perilous consequence, that foreigners should have authoritative influence upon the subjects of any prince. Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

Tempering the rigour of an authoritative character with the affability of a companion. Warton's Life of Bathurst, p. 86.

2. Having an air of authority.

I dare not give them the authoritative title of apophthegms, which yet may make a reasonable moral prognostick. Wotton.
The mock authoritative manner of the one, and the insipid mirth of the other. Swift, Examiner.

AUTHORITATIVELY. † adv. [from authoritative.]

1. In an authoritative manner; with a shew of authority.

The authority of the church stands thus; to determine controversies of faith only ministerially, as the ordinary dispensers of the Word, as servants of Christ, and ministers of the Gospel; not absolutely and authoritatively, as lords of our faith and infallible interpreters of scripture. Leslie, of priv. Judg. &c. p. 29.

It is a matter of prudence, that our essays of this kind be rather perfective than destructive; that is, that we do not take upon us authoritatively to quash and controul other discourse. Goodman, Wint. Ec. Com. p. 1.

He resumes the chair, and thus authoritatively dictates to us. Boyle against Bently, p. 74.

2. With due authority.

No law foreign binds in England, till it be received, and authoritatively engrafted, into the law of England. Hale.
No man can forgive them [sins] absolutely, authoritatively, by primer and original power. Mountague's Appeal to Caesar, p. 317.

This church doth authoritatively teach; secondly, judge; thirdly, command; fourthly, punish those who disobey. Bp. Barlow's Rem. p. 598.

The indiscriminate collation of degrees has justly taken away that respect which they originally claimed, as stamps by which the literary value of men so distinguished was authoritatively denoted. Dr. Johnson, Journ. West. Isl.

AUTHORITATIVENESS. n. s. [from authoritative.] An acting by authority; authoritative appearance. Dict.

AUTHORITY. n. s. [auctoritas, Lat.]

1. Legal power.

Idle old man,
That still would manage those authorities,
That he hath given away! Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Adam's sovereignty, that the virtue of being proprietor of the whole world, he has no authority over men, could not have been inherited by any of his children. Locke.

Influence; credit.

Power arising from strength, is always in those that are governed, who are many; but authority arising from opinion, is in those that govern, who are few. Temple.

The weak are fitter to give rules than cities, where those that call themselves civil and rational, go out of their way, by the authority of example. Locke.

3. Power; rule.

I know, my lord,
If law, authority, and pow'r deny not,
It will be hard with poor Antonio. Shakespeare.

He should suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. 1 Tim. ii. 12.

Support; justification; countenance.

Do'st thou expect th' authority of their voices,
Whose silent wills condemn thee? B. Jonson.

5. Testimony.

Something I have heard of this, which I would be glad to find by so sweet an authority confirmed. Sidney.

We urge authorities in things that need not, and introduce the testimony of ancient writers, to confirm things evidently believed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Having been so hardy as to undertake a charge against the philosophy of the schools, I was liable to have been overborne by a torrent of authorities. Glanville, Sccepis.

6. Weight of testimony; credibility; cogency of evidence.

They consider the main consent of all the churches in the whole world, witnessing the sacred authority of scriptures, ever since the first publication thereof, even till this present day and hour. Hooker.

AUTHORIZATION. n. s. [old Fr. autorization.] Establishment by authority.

The obligation of laws arises not from their matter, but from admission and reception, and authorization in this kingdom. Hale.

To AUTHORIZE. v. a. [autoriser, Fr.]

1. To give authority to any person.

Making herself an impudent suitor, authorizing herself very much, with making us see, that all favour and power depended upon her. Sidney.

Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis authorize their skill. Dryden.

2. To make any thing legal.

Yourself first made that title which I claim,
First bid me love, and authorize'd my flame.
I have nothing farther to desire,
But Sancho's leave to authorize our marriage. Dryden.

To have countenanced in him irregularity and disobedience to that light which he had, would have been, to have authorized disorder, confusion, and wickedness in his creatures. Locke.

3. To establish any thing by authority.

Lawful it is to devise any ceremony, and to authorize any kind of regiment, no special commandment being thereby violated. Hooker.

Those forms are best which have been longest received and authorized in a nation by custom and use. Temple.

4. To justify; to prove a thing to be right.

All virtue lies in a power of denying our own desires, where reason does not authorize them. Locke.

5. To give credit to any person or thing.

Although their intention be sincere, yet doth it notoriously strengthen vulgar error, and authorize opinions injurious unto truth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Be a person in vogue with the multitude, he shall authorize any nonsense, and make incoherent stuff, seasoned with twang and tautology, pass for rhetoric. South.

AUTHORLESS. adj. [from author and less.] Without an author or authority.

As I am not ignorant, so ought I to be sensible of the false aspersions some authorless tongues have laid upon me. Sir Isaac Sackville, Guardian, No. 153.

AUTHORSHIP. n. The quality of being an author.

The gentleman, whose merit lies toward authorship, are unwilling to make the least abatement on the foot of ceremonial. Shaftesbury.

AUTOCRASY. n. s. [autokratia, from αὐτο, self, and κρατος, power.] Independent power; supremacy.

It [the Divine Will] moves not by the external impulse or inclination of objects, but determines itself by an absolute autocracy. South, Serm. viii. 285.

AUTOCRATICAL. adj. [Gr. αὐτοκρατορικος.] Belonging to independent power; absolutely supreme.

The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, in respect of the same divinity, have the same autocratorial power, dominion, and authority. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 7.

AUTOGRAPH. n. s. [Fr. autographe, Gr. αὐτογραφ.] The word is of late introduction into our language. Autographon is used, instead of it, in Pilkington's Remarks on the Translation of the Bible. 8vo. 1759. p. 5.] The particular handwriting of a person; the original writing, and not a copy, in opposition to apograph; the signature.

It is the author's autograph; and the work is dedicated to Humphry, duke of Gloucester. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. ii. 45.

AUTOGRAPHICAL. adj. [from autography.] Of one's own writing. Dict.

AUTOGRAPHY. n. s. [αὐτογραφία, from αὐτο, and γραφω, to write.] A particular person's own writing; or the original of a treatise, in opposition to a copy.

AUTOMATICAL. adj. [from automaton.] Belonging to an automaton; having the power of moving itself.

AUTOMATON. n. s. [Gr. αὐτοματόν. In the plural, automata.] A machine that hath the power of motion within itself, and which stands in need of no foreign assistance. Quincy.

For it is greater to understand the art, whereby the Almighty governs the motions of the great automaton, than to have learned the intrigues of policy. Glanville, Sccepis.

The particular circumstances for which the automata of this kind are most eminent, may be reduced to four. Wilkins.

AUTOMATOUS. adj. [from automaton.] Having in itself the power of motion.

Clocks, or automatus organs, whereby we distinguish of time, have no mention in ancient writers. Brown, Vulg. Err.

AUTONOMY. n. s. [Gr. αὐτονομία.] The living according to one's mind and prescription. Dict.

AUTOPSY. n. s. [Gr. αὐτοψία.] Ocular demonstration; seeing a thing one's self. Quincy.

In those that have forked tails, autopsy convinceth us, that it hath this use. Ray on the Creation.

AUTOPTICAL. adj. [from autopsy.] Perceived by one's own eyes.

Evinced by autoptical experience. Evelyn, b. iii. ch. 3. § 29.

AUTOPTICALLY. adv. [from autoptical.] By means of one's own eyes.

Were this true, it would autoptically silence that dispute. Brown.

That the galaxy is a meteor, was the account of Aristotle; but the telescope hath autoptically confuted it: and he, who is not Pyrrhonian enough to the disbelief of his senses, may see that it is no exhalation. Glanville, Sccepis.

AUTOSCHEDIASTICAL. adj. [Gr. αὐτοσχεδιαστικός.] Hasty; slight; extemporary.

You so much over-value my autoschediastical and indigested censure of St. Peter's primacy over the rest of the apostles, as if I had sent you some rare stuff which you had not (and much better) of your own. Denn Martin's Letters, p. 21.

AUTUMN. n. s. [autumnus, Lat.] The season of the year between summer and winter, beginning astrono-mically at the equinox, and ending at the solstice; popularly, autumn comprises August, September, and October.

For I will board her, though she chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack; Shakespeare.
I would not be over confident, till he hath passed a spring or autumn. Wiseman, Surgery.

The starving brood,
Void of sufficient sustenance, will yield
A slender autumn. Philips.

Autumn nodding o'er the yellow plain,
Comes jovial on. Thomson.

AUTUMNAL. adj. [from autumn.] Belonging to autumn; produced in autumn.

No spring, or summer's beauty, hath such grace,
As I have seen in one autumnal face. Donne.

Thou shalt not long
Ride in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
Or light'ning, thou shalt fall. Milton.

Bind now up your autumnal flowers, to prevent sudden gusts,
Which will prostrate all. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows. Pope.

AUTUMNITY. n. s. [Lat. autumnitas.] The season of autumn.

Thy furnace reeks
Hot steams of wine, and can aloof describe
The drunken draughts of sweet autumnity. Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 1.

AVULSED. part. adj. [old Fr. avulsé, Lat. avulsus.]
Plucked away.

Who scatter wealth, as though the radiant crop
Glitter'd on every bough; and every bough,
Like that the Trojan gather'd, once avuls'd,
Were by a splendid successor supplied,
Instant, spontaneous. Shenstone.

AVULSION. n. s. [from avulsio, Lat.] The act of pulling one thing from another.

Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow
Redundant; but the thronging clusters thin
By kind avulsion. Philips.

The pressure of any ambient fluid can be no intelligible cause of the cohesion of matter; though such a pressure may hinder the avulsion of two polished superficies one from another, in a line perpendicular to them. Locke.

AUXESIS. n. s. [Latin.] An increasing; an exornation, when, for amplification, a more grave and magnificent word is put instead of the proper word. Smith's Rhetoric.

By this figure, auxesis, the orator doth make a low dwarf a tall fellow; of a little cottage, a great castle; of pebble stones, pearls; and of thistles, mighty oaks.

Peacham's Garden of Eloquence, sign. N. iij.

AUXILIAR. part. adj. [Fr. auxiliaire, from auxilium, Lat.] Assistant; helping; confederate.

The giant brood,
That fought at Thebes and Ilium on each side,
Mix'd with auxiliar gods. Milton, P. L.

Their tractates are little auxiliary unto ours, nor afford us any light to detenebrate this truth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

There is not the smallest capillary vein but it is present with,
and auxiliary to it, according to its use. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

Nor from his patrimonial heav'n alone
Is Jove content to pour his vengeance down;
Aid from his brother of the seas he craves,
To help him with auxiliary waves. Dryden.

AUXILIARY Verb. A verb that helps to conjugate other verbs.

AUXILIAR. n. s. Helper; assistant; confederate.

In the strength of that power, he might, without the auxiliaries of any further influence, have determined his will to a full choice of God. South.

There are, indeed, a sort of underling auxiliaries to the difficulty of a work, called commentators and critics. Pope.

In almost all languages of the most nouns and verbs have many irregular and common verbs.
verbs, to be and to have, and to be done, &c.

AUXILIATION. n. s. [from auxiliatus, Lat.] Help;
aid; succour. Dick.

AUXILIATORY. adj. [from auxiliatus, Lat.] Assisting; helping.

So sweet is the taste of gain from whatsoever; the visiting their holy reliques, the purchasing of masses both auxiliary and expiatory, their rewards for praying, their collections for preachings. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

TO AWAIT. v. a. [from a and wait.] See WAIT.

1. To expect; to wait for.

Even as the wretch condemn'd to lose his life,
Awaits the falling of the murdering knife.
Betwixt the rocky pillars Gabriel sat,
Chief of th' angelick guards, awaiting night.

2. To attend; to be in store for.

To shew thee what reward
Awaits the good; the rest, what punishment. Milton.
Unless his wrath be appeased, an eternity of torments awaits
the objects of his displeasure. Rogers.

AWAIT. n. s. [from the verb.] Ambush. See WAIT.

And least mishap the most bliss alter may;
For thousand perils lie in close await
About us daily, to work our decay. Spenser.

TO AWAKE. v. a. [Sax. apacian.] To awake has the preterite awoke, Sax. apoc, or, (as we now more commonly speak,) awaked, Sax. apacod. Goth. and Icel. waka, Gerin. waccke.]

1. To rouse out of sleep.

Take heed,
How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shakespeare.
Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep. John, ch. xi.

2. To raise from any state resembling sleep.

Hark, hark, the horrid sound
Has rais'd up his head;
As awak'd from the dead,
And amaz'd he stares round. Dryden, St. Cecilia.

3. To put into new action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
And strive your excellent self to excel. Spenser, F. Q.

The fair
Repairs her smiles, awakens ev'ry grace,
And calls forth all the wonders of her face. Pope.

TO AWAKE. v. n. To break from sleep; to cease to sleep.

Alack, I am afraid they have awak'd;
And 'tis not done! Shakespeare, Macbeth.
I awaked up last of all, as one that gathereth after the grapegatherers. Eccles. xxxii. 16.

AWAKE. adj. [from the verb.] Not being asleep;
not sleeping.

Imagination is like to work better upon sleeping men, than men awake. Bacon.

Cares shall not keep him on the throne awake,
Nor break the golden slumbers he would take. Dryden.

TO AWAKEN. v. a. and v. n. The same with AWAKE.

Awake Argantyr, Hervor the only daughter
Of thee and Suafu doth awaken thee. Hickes.
The book ends abruptly with his awakening in a fright.

AWAKENER. n. s. [from awaken.] Formerly written awaker. V. Cotgrave in esveilleur.] That which awakens.

Eternal flames become their first awakeners; and men begin to be wise when it is too late. Stillingfleet, Sermons, p. 29.

AWAKENING. n. s. [from awaken.] The act of awaking.

Supposing the inhabitants of a country quite sunk in sloth, or even fast asleep, whether upon the gradual awakening and exertion, first of the sensitive and locomotive faculties, next of reason and reflexion, then of justice and piety, the more than in such country or state, would not, in proportion thereto, become still more and more considerable?

Sp. Berkely, Quaker, &c.

TO AWARD. v. a. [derived by Skinner, somewhat improbably, from peapb, Sax. towards, Dr. Johnson says, and very justly; but he proposes no other etymology. It is from the old Fr. awarder, "prononcer sur le competence des juges d'une affaire;" not from à garder, as Mr. Tooke would lead us to believe, in his Diversions of Purley, according to his definition, "to have or hold in possession," in contradiction to Spelman's "custodire, to keep;" over whom he therefore needlessly triumphs. ward is also the old Ft. subst. for arbitrage, an ard. V. Lacombe and Roquefort.] To adjudge; to give any thing by a judicial sentence.

A pound of that same merchant's flesh is thine;

The court awards it, and the law doth give it. Shakspeare.

It advances that grand business, and according to which their eternity hereafter will be awarded. Decay of Piety.

A church which allows salvation to none without it, nor awards damnation to almost any within it. South.

Satisfaction for every affront cannot be awarded by stated laws. Collier, on Duelling.

TO AWARD. v. n. To judge; to determine.

Th' unwise award to lodge it in the towers,

An off'ring sacred. Pope's Odyssey.

AWARD. † n. s. [old Fr. award.] Judgement; sentence; determination.

Now hear th' award, and happy may it prove

To her, and him who best deserves her love. Dryden.

Affection bribes the judgment, and we cannot expect an equitable award, where the judge is made a party. Glanville.

To urge the foe,

Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,
Were to refuse the awards of Providence. Addison's Cato.

AWARDER. \ n. s.* [from award.] A judge.

The high awarders of immortal fame. Thomson, Liberty, ii.

AWARE. † adv. [from a and ware, an old word for cautions; it is however, perhaps an adjective; γρηπαν, Sax. Dr. Johnson says. He might have confirmed his supposition by the Goth. and Su. adj. war, Sax. pap.] Excited to caution; vigilant; in a state of alarm; attentive.

Ere I was aware, I had left myself nothing but the name of a king. Sidney.

Ere sorrow was aware, they made his thoughts hear away something else besides his own sorrow. Sidney's Arcadia.

Temptations of prosperity insinuate themselves; so that we are but little aware of them, and less able to withstand them. Atterbury.

TO AWARE. v. n. To beware; to be cautious.

So warn'd he them aware themselves; and Instant, without disturb, they took alarm. Par. Lost.

This passage is by others understood thus, He warned those who were aware, of themselves.

TO AWAREN. \ v. a.* [from a and warn.] To caution.

Now gan the humid vapour shed the ground

With perly dew, and th' earth's gloomy shade

Did dim the brightness of the welkin round,

That every bird and beast awarned made

To shrowd themselves, while sleep their senses did invade.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 46.

AWAY. † adv. [apez, Saxon.]

1. In a state of absence; not in any particular place.

They could make

Love to your dress, although your face were away.

Ben. Jonson, Catiline.

It is impossible to know properties that are so annexed to it, that any of them being away, that essence is not there. Locke.

2. From any place or person.

I have a pain in my forehead here —

— Why that's wise watching; 'twill away again. Shakspeare.

When the fowls came down upon the carcases, Abraham drove them away again. Gen. xv. 11.

Would you youth and beauty stay,

Love hath wings, and will away.

Waller.

Summer suns roll unperceiv'd away.

Pope.

3. Let us go.

Away, old man; give me thy hand; away;

King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter away;

Give me thy hand. Come on.

4. Begone. [Sax. apez-gan, away go.]

Away, and glister like the god of war,

When he intendeth to become the field. Shakspeare, K. John.

I'll to the woods among the happier brutes;

Come, let's away; hark, the shrill horn resounds.

Smith, Phadra and Hippolytus.

Away, you flatt'rer!

Nor charge his gen'rous meaning.

Rowe, Jago Shore.

5. Out of one's own hands; into the power of something else.

It concerns every man, who will not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, to inquire into those matters. Tillotson.

6. It is often used with a verb; as to drink away an estate; to idle away a manor; that is, to drink or idle till an estate or manor is gone.

Pope.

He play'd his life away.

7. On the way; on the road: perhaps this is the original import of the following phrase.

Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?

Shakspeare.

8. Perhaps the phrase, he cannot away with, may mean he cannot travel with; he cannot bear the company; Dr. Johnson says. It certainly means endure; as the instance, which I bring from Scripture, also shews.

She never could away with me. — Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide master Shallow.

Shakspeare.

The calling of assemblies, I cannot away with. Isaiah, i. 13.

9. Away with. Throw away; take away.

Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas.

If you dare think of deserving our charms,

Away with your sheephooks, and take to your arms. Dryden.

AWAYWARD. \ adv.* [Sax. apez peapb.] Our elder *ad-*verb for away, in the sense of turning aside from a place or person.

But he, that kyng, with eyen wrothe,

His chere [his face] *awe*ward fro me caste.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

AWE. † n. s. [Goth. ogan, to fear; agis, terror; eye, oga, Saxon.] Reverential fear; reverence.

They all be brought up idly, without awe of parents, without precepts of masters, and without fear of offence.

Spenser, State of Ireland.

This thought fixed upon him who is only to be feared, God: and yet with a filial fear, which at the same time both fears and loves. It was awe without amazement, and dread without distraction.

South.

What is the proper awe and fear, which is due from man to God?

Rogers.

TO AWE. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with reverence, or fear; to keep in subjection.

If you will work on any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him; or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weaknesses and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him. Bacon.

Why then was this forbid? Why, but to awe?

Why, but to keep you low, and ignorant,

His worshippers?

Milton.

Heav'n that hath plac'd this island to give law,

To balance Europe, and her states to awe.

Waller.

The rods and axes of princes, and their deputies, may awe many into obedience; but the fame of their goodness, justice, and other virtues, will work on more.

Atterbury.

A W H

AWEARY.* adj. [from a and weary. A word, Mr. Mason says, twice used by Shakespeare. I believe it is used till half a dozen times by the great poet; from whom it has been perhaps adopted by Wycherley, in an example which Mr. Tooke has cited.]

Wear; tired.

I am awear s. give me leave a while.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Juliet.

Are you awear of that title? Wycherley, Love in a Wood.

AWE-BANDON.* s. [from awe and band.] A check.
Dict.

AWE-COMMANDING.* adj. [from awe and command.] Striking with awe.

Her hon port, her awe-commanding face,

Attempt'd sweet to virgin grace. Gray, The Bard.

AWE-STUCK.* part. adj. [from awe and strike.] Impressed with awe.

I was awe-struck,

And, as I past, I worshipt.

Milton, Comus, ver. 301.

AWFUL.* adj. [from awe and full.]

1. That which strikes with awe, or fills with reverence.

So awful, that with honour thou may'st love

Thy mate; who sees, when thou art seen least wise.

Milton, P. L.

I approach thee thus, and gaze

Insatiate; I thus single; nor have fear'd

Thy awful brow, more awful thus retir'd,

Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair! Milton.

2. Worshipful; in authority; invested with dignity. This sense is obsolete.

Know then, that some of us are gentlemen,

Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth

Thrust from the company of awful men.

Shakespeare.

3. Struck with awe; timorous; scrupulous. This sense occurs but rarely.

To pay their awful duty to our presence.

Shakespeare, K. Rich. III.

It is not nature and strict reason, but a weak and awful reverence for antiquity, and the vogue of fallible men. Watts.

AWFULLY.* adv. [from awful.]

1. In a reverential manner.

It will concern a man, to treat this great principle awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids. South.

All men will be ready most awfully to dread Him, unto whom they see princes themselves humbly to stoop and bow.

Barrow's Works, i. 36.

How shall I then attempt to sing of Him,

Who, Light Himself, in uncreated light

Invested deep, dwells awfully retir'd

From mortal's eye, or angel's purer ken!

Thompson, Summer, ver. 177.

2. In a manner striking with awe.

The lion awfully forbids the prey.

Dryden, Hind. and Panther, v. 304.

AWFUL-EYED.* adj. [from awful and eye.] Having eyes exciting awe.

Pure and undefiled Temperance, manly and awful-eyed fortitude. More, Sing of the Soul, Notes p. 373.

AWFULNESS. n. s. [from awful.]

1. The quality of striking with awe; solemnity.

These objects naturally raise seriousness; and night heightens the awfulness of the place, and pours out her supernumerary horrors upon every thing. Addison.

2. The state of being struck with awe; little used.

An help to prayer, producing in us reverence and awfulness to the divine majesty of God. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

To AWHAPPE.* v. a. [This word I have met with only in Spenser, nor can I discover whence it is derived; but imagine, that the Teutonick language had anciently wapen, to strike, or some such word, from which wapen, or offensive arms, took their denomination. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement. The word is found both in Chaucer and Widgate, and the etymology seems to be Sax. æther aþeopan, to cast down, or papean, to wonder or be amazed. To strike; to confound; to terrify.

A W K

Ah! my dear gossip, answer'd then the ape;

Deeply do your sad words my wits awhape,

Both for because your grief doth greatly appear,

And eke because myself am touch'd near. M. Hubbard's Tale.

AWHEELS.* adv. On wheels.

And will they not cry then, the world runs awheels.

B. Jonson, Masques, Vis. of Delight.

AWHILE. adv. [This word, generally reputed an adverb, is only a while, that is, a time, an interval.] Some time; some space of time.

Stay, stay, I say;

And if you love me, as you say you do,

Let me persuade you to forbear awhile.

Shakespeare.

Into this wild abyss the wayfiend

Stood on the brink of hell, and look'd awhile,

Pond'ring his voyage.

AWHIT.* adv. [Sax. apit. This word is sometimes used adverbially, but it is only a whit, that is, a jot, a tittle.

Did he [God] find our sins laid upon the blessed Son of his love, of his nature? He spares him not awhit.

Bp. Hall's Remains, p. 188.

AWK.* adj. [A barbarous contraction of the word awkward, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites L'Estrange in proof. But the fact is, awk is one of our old adjectives; and is found in the Promptuarium Parvulorum, (1510,) with two definitions; "awke or angry, contrarius; awke or wrong, sinister." The adverb awky or perversely, is also there. It may be from the old Goth. auk, a beast.] Odd; out of order.

We have heard as arrant jangling in the pulpits, as the steeples; and professors ringing as awk as the bells to give notice of the conflagration. L'Estrange.

AWKWARD.* adj. [Dr. Johnson gives the Saxon æpeþb, i. e. backward, untoward, as the etymology. Perhaps the German quar or quer, opposite, oblique, or crooked, may have contributed to the formation of this word; or rather it is the old adj. awk with the Sax. peapb, towards.]

1. Inelegant; unpolite; untaught; ungenteel.

Proud Italy,

Whose manners still our tardy, apish nation

Limps after in base awkward imitation.

Shakespeare.

Their own language is worthy their care; and they are judged of by their handsome or awkward way of expressing themselves in it. Locke.

An awkward shame, or fear of ill usage, has a share in this conduct. Swift.

2. Unready; unhandy; not dexterous; clumsy.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick;

So true, that he was awkward at a trick.

Dryden.

3. Perverse; untoward;

And twice by awkward wind from England's bank

Drove back again.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. p. 2.

A kind and constant friend

To all that regularly offend;

But was implacable, and awkward,

To all that interlop'd and hawk'd.

Hudibras.

AWKWARDLY. adv. [from awkward.] Clumsily; unready; inelegantly; ungainly.

• Dametns nodding from the waste upwards, and swearing he never knew man go more awkwardly to work. Sidney.

When any thing is done awkwardly, the common saying will pass upon them, that it is suitable to their breeding. Locke.

If any pretty creature is not of genius, and would perform her part but awkwardly, I must nevertheless insist upon her working.

She still remembers the ancient scene;
Forgets the forty years between;
Awkwardly gay, and oddly merry;
Her scarf pale pink, her head-knot cherry. Prior.
If a man be taught to hold his pen awkwardly, yet writes sufficiently well, it is not worth while to teach him the accurate methods of handling that instrument.

Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

AWKWARDNESS. n. s. [from awkward.] Inelegance; want of gentility; oddness; unsuitableness.

One may observe awkwardness in the Italians, which easily discovers their airs not to be natural. Addison.

His airs of behaviour have a certain awkwardness in them; but these awkward airs are worn away in company.

Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

AWL. † n. s. [Goth. aal, Sax. æle, ale, Germ. ahl.]

A pointed instrument to bore holes.
He which was minded to make himself a perpetual servant, should, for a visible token thereof, have also his ear bored through with an awl. Hooker.

You may likewise prick many holes with an awl, about a joint that will lie in the earth. Mortimer, Husbandry.

A'WLESS. adj. [from awe, and the negative less.]

1. Wanting reverence; void of respectful fear.

Against whose fury, and th' unmatched force,
The awless lion could not wage the fight. Shakespeare.

He claims the bull with awless insolence,
And having seiz'd his horns, accosts the prince. Dryden.

2. Wanting the power of causing reverence.

Ah me! I see the ruin of my house;
The tyger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind:
Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless throne. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

AWME, or AUME. n. s. A Dutch measure of capacity for liquids, containing eight steckans, or twenty verges or verteels; answering to what in England is called a tierce, or one sixth of a ton of France, or one-seventh of an English ton.

Arbuthnot.

AWN. † n. s. [Goth. ahana, Su. agn.] The beard growing out of the corn or grass. An old subst. in the Prompt. Parv.

A'WNING. † n. s.

1. A cover spread over a boat or vessel, to keep off the weather.

Our ship became sulphureous, no decks, no awnings, nor invention possible, being able to refresh us.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 7.

2. A covering to defend those who sit under it from the rays of the sun.

Round the parapet-wall at top are placed rows of square pillars, meant either for ornament according to some traditional mode of decoration, or to fix awnings to, that such as sit there for the benefit of the sea-breeze may be sheltered from the rays of the sun. Swinburne's Trav. through Spain, Let. 28.

AWO'KE. The preterite from awake.

And she said, the Philistines be upon thee, Sampson. And he awoke out of his sleep. Judges, xvi. 20.

AWO'RK. adv. from a and work.] On work; into a state of labour; into action.

So after Pyrrhus' pause,

Aroused vengeance sets him new awork. Shakespeare.

By prescribing the condition, it sets us awork to the performances of it, and that by living well. Hammond.

AWO'RKING. adj. from awork.] Into the state of working.

Long they thus travelled, yet never met
Adventure which might them aworking set. Hubbard's Tale.

AWRY. † adv. [from the Sax. ppridan, Su. wrida, to writhe.]

1. Not in a straight direction; obliquely.

But her sad eyes still fast'ned on the ground,
Are governed with goodly modesty;
That suffers not one look to glance awry,
Which may let in a little thought unsound.

Spenser.

Like perspectives which rightly gaz'd upon,
Shew nothing but confusion; ey'd awry,
Distinguish form.

Shakespeare, Richard II.

A violent cross wind, from either coast,
Blows them transverse; ten thousand leagues awry
Into the devious air.

Milton.

2. Asquint; with oblique vision:

You know the king

With jealous eyes has look'd awry
On his son's actions.

Denham's Sophy.

3. Not in the right or true direction.

I hap to step awry, where I see no path, and can discern but few steps afore me. Brerewood.

4. Not equally between two points; unevenly.

Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,
Not Cynthia when her manteau's pin'd awry,
Ere felt such rage.

Pope.

5. Not according to right reason; perversely.

All awry, and which wried it to the most wry course of all, wit abused, rather to feign reason why it should be amiss, than how it should be amended.

Sidney.

Much of the soul they talk, but all awry,
And in themselves seek virtue, and to themselves
All glory arrogate, to God give none.

Milton.

AXE. † n. s. [eax, æce, Sax. ascia, Lat. auxi, Goth. ax, Su-Dalekarl.] An instrument consisting of a metal head, with a sharp edge, fixed in a helve or handle, to cut with.

No metal can,

No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy.

Shakespeare.

There stood a forest on the mountain's brow,
Which overlook'd the shaded plains below;
No sounding axe presum'd these trees to bite,
Coeval with the world; a venerable sight.

Dryden.

A'XHED.* n. s. [from axe and head.] The head or iron part of the axe.

As one was felling a beam, the axhead fell into the water.

2 Kings, vi. 5.

If an axhead be supposed to float upon water, which is specifically much lighter than it; it had been supernatural at that time, as well as in the days of Elisha. Bentley, Sermon, p. 131.

A'XILL.A. n. s. [axilla, Lat.] The cavity under the upper part of the arm, called the arm-pit.

A'XILLAR. † adj. [from axilla, Lat.] Belonging to

A'XILLARY. † the arm-pit.

Axillary artery is distributed unto the hand; below the cubit, it divideth into two parts.

Brown.

A'XIOM. n. s. [axioma, Lat. ἀξίωμα, from ἀξίω.]

1. A proposition evident at first sight, that cannot be made plainer by demonstration.

Axioms, or principles more general, are such as this, that the greater good is to be chosen before the lesser.

Hooker.

2. An established principle to be granted without new proof.

The axioms of that law, whereby natural agents are guided, have their use in the moral.

Hooker.

Their affirmations are no axioms; we esteem thereof as things unsaid, and account them but in list of nothing.

Brown.

AXIOMATICAL.* adj. [from axiom.] Relating to an axiom.

Hippocrates did well to front his axiomatical experiments (the book of Aphorisms) with the grand miscarriages in the practice of most able physicians.

Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 109.

A'XIS. n. s. [axis, Lat.] The line real or imaginary that passes through any thing, on which it may revolve.

A Y R

But since they say our earth, from north to south,
On its own axis is oblig'd to turn;
That swift rotation must disperse in air
All things which on the rapid orb appear.

It must annually have compassed the sun, and yet never have once turned upon its axis.
On their own axis as the planets run,
And make at once their circle round the sun;
So two consistent motions act the soul,
And one regards itself, and one the whole.

Pope.
A'XLE. n. s. [axis, Lat.] The pin which A'XLE-FREE. n. s. passes through the midst of the wheel, on which the circumvolutions of the wheel are performed.

Venerable Nestor
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecians ears
To his experien'd tongue.
The fly sat upon the axle-tree of the chariot-wheel, and said, What a dust do I raise!
And the gilded ear of day
His glowing axle doth allay
In the steep Atlantick stream.

Milton, Comus.
He saw a greater sun appear,
That his bright throne or burning axle-tree could bear.
Milton, Christ's Nativity.

Ay. adv. [perhaps from aio, Lat. Dr. Johnson says.
But we derive it more probably from the Goth. and Sax. ga and ia, yea. Brit. and Corn. a, yes. Ar-morick also ha, yes.]

1. Yes; an adverb of answering affirmatively.
Return you thither? —
Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed. Shakespeare.
What say'st thou? Wilt thou be of our consort?
Say ay; and be the captain of us all. Shakespeare.

2. It is a word by which the sense is enforced; even;
yes, certainly; and more than that.
Remember it, and let it make thee crest fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. Shakespeare.

AY ME. interj. [Gr. αἰμα, Ital. ahime.] A phrase, often found in pastoral and elegiac poetry, implying dejection and sorrow; and so much used in the courtship of elder days, as to render it the object of laughter and contempt. It is the same as ah me! See AIL.

Ay me! I fondly dream! Milton, Lycidas, ver. 56.
Aymce, and hearty heigh-hoes,
Are sallets fit for soldiers! Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca, i. 2.
Cupid is the hero of heigh-hoes, [and] admiral of *ay-me*s.
Heywood's Love's Mistress.

Sonnets from the melting lover's brain,
Ay-mces and elegies. The Woman Hater, (1607) iii. 1.

AYE. adv. [Goth. aiv (an aiva, for ever,) Sax. apu, or rather aa, from the old Goth. a, always.] Always; to eternity; for ever. It is now rarely used, and only in poetry.

And now in darksome dungeon, wretched thrall,
Remedyless for aye he doth him hold. Spenser, F.
Either prepare to die,
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerly and single life. Shakespeare.

The soul, though made in time, survives for aye;
And, though it hath beginning, sees no end. Sir J. Davies.
Aye round about Jove's altars sing. Milton.
The astonish'd mariners aye ply the pump;
No stay, nor rest, till the wide breach is clos'd. Philips.

AGREEN. n. s. The same with houseleek; which
see. Dict.

A'YRY. n. s. [It should be written eyry or eyry.
Sax. cy, an egg.] The nest of the hawk.

I should discourse on the brancher, the haggard, and then treat of their several ayries. Walton's Angler.

A'ZEROLE. n. s. [Fr. azarole.] A small medlar tree, called the three-grained medlar, or Neapolitan medlar-tree. Cotgrave.

A'ZIMUTH. n. s. [Arab.]

1. The azimuth of the sun, or of a star, is an arch between the meridian of the place, and any given vertical line.

2. Magnetical Azimuth, is an arch of the horizon cotained between the sun's azimuth circle and magnetical meridian; or it is the apparent distance of the sun from the north or south point of the compass.

3. Azimuth Compass, is an instrument used at sea for finding the sun's magnetic azimuth.

4. Azimuth Dial, is a dial whose stile or gnomon is at right angles to the plane of the horizon.

5. Azimuths, called also verticle circles, are great circles intersecting each other in the zenith and nadir, and cutting the horizon at right angles in all the points thereof. Chambers.

A'ZURE. adj. [azur, Fr. azurro, Span. lazar, Arab.
from lazuli, a blue stone.] Blue; faint blue.

Like pomels round of marble clear,
Where azur'd veins well mixt appear. Sidney.

The blue of the first order, though very faint and little, may be the colour of some substance; and the azure colour of the skies seems to be this order. Newton.

Thus replies
Minerva, graceful with her azure eyes. Pope.

The sea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain,
Your empire owns. Thomson.

To A'ZURE. v. a. [from the adj.] To colour thing blue. Elyot's Dict.

A'ZURED. adj. [from azur.] Blue.

I have bedimm'd
The noon-tide sun, call'd forth the mutinous winds,
And 'twixt the green sea and the azur'd vault
Set roaring war. Shakespeare, Tempest.

The proceeding and power of God, covering, from his heaven and azured throne, his poor children, exposed otherwise unto all injuries of weather, storms, and tempests.

Harnar's Transl. of Beza's Sermons, p. 371.

Come, serene looks,
Clear as the crystal brooks,
Or the pure azur'd heaven. Sir H. Wotton's Rem. p. 391.

A'ZURN. adj. [Fr. azurin, Ital. azzurino.] Of a bright blue colour; azury, as Cotgrave calls it, or sky-coloured.

The azurn sheen
Of turkis blue, and emerald green. Milton, Comus, v. 893.

A'ZYME. n. s. [Fr. azyme, from Gr. α, without, and ζυμ, leaven. This word was introduced into our language by the earlier translators of the Bible, and is condemned by the translators of the present version in their address to the reader.] Unleavened bread.

We have shunned the obscurity of the Papists in their aymes;
tunick, &c. The Translators of the Bible to the Reader.

B A B

D M D

B, The second letter of the English alphabet, is pronounced as in most other European languages, by pressing the whole length of the lips together, and forcing them open with a strong breath. It has a near affinity with the other labial letters, and is confounded by the Germans with P, and by the Gascons with V; from which an epigrammatist remarks, That bibere and vivere are in Gascony the same. The Spaniards, in most words, use B or V indifferently.

BAA.† n. s. [Bisc. and old Fr. bee, bleating.] The cry of a sheep.

—Therefore thou art a sheep—

With another proof would make me cry baa. Shakspeare.

To BAA.† v. n. [ballo, Lat. bee, Fr. See the substantive.] To cry like a sheep.

Or like a lamb, whose dam away is fet,
He treble baas for help, but none can get. Sidney.
He's a lamb indeed, that baes like a bear.

To BA'BBLE.† v. n. [babbelen, Germ. babiller, Fr. balbus, Lat. supposed from babel, Heb. See BABEL.]

1. To prattle like a child; to prate imperfectly.

My babbling praises I repeat no more,
But hear, rejoice, stand silent, and adore. Prior.

2. To talk idly, or irrationally.

John had conned over a catalogue of hard words; these he used to bubble indifferently in all companies. Arbutnot.

Let the silent sanctuary show,
What from the babbling schools we may not know. Prior.

3. To talk thoughtlessly; to tell secrets.

There is more danger in a reserved and silent friend, than in a noisy babbling enemy. L'Estrange.

4. To talk much.

The babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shakspeare.

And had I pow'r to give that knowledge birth,
In all the speeches of the babbling earth. Prior.

The babbling echo had descri'd his face;
She, who in other's words her silence breaks. Addison.

To BA'BBLE.* v. a. To prate.

Others [of the old philosophers] have gone yet farther, and babbled something of eternal life.

Harmer's Tr. of Beza's Sermons, (1587,) p. 108.

BA'BBLE. n. s. [babil, Fr.] Idle talk; senseless prattle.

This bubble shall not henceforth trouble me;
Here is a coil with protestation! Shakspeare.

—Come, no more,
This is mere moral babble. Milton.

With volleys of eternal babble,
And clamour more unanswerable.

Hudibras.

• The babble, impertinence, and folly, I have taken notice of in disputes. Glanville.

BA'BBLEMENT. n. s. [from babble.] Senseless prate; empty words.

Deluded all this while with ragged notions and babblements, while they expected worthy and delightful knowledge.

Milton, of Education.

BA'BBLER.† n. s. [from babble, and Germ. babbler.]

1. An idle talker; an irrational prattler.

We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a babbler. Shakspeare.

The serpent will bite without enchantment; and a babbler is no better. Eccles. x. 11.

The apostle had no sooner proposed it to the masters at Athens, but he himself was ridiculed as a babbler. Rogers.

2. A teller of secrets.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd;
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime. Spenser, F. Q.

Great babblers, or talkers, are not fit for trust. L'Estrange.

BA'BLING.* n. s. [from babble.] Foolish or unprofitable talk.

O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane babbings, and oppositions of science falsely so called. 1 Tim. vi. 20.

BABE. n. s. [baban, Welch; babbaerd, Dutch; bambino, Ital.] An infant; a child of either sex.

Those that do teach your babes,
Do it with gentle means; and easy tasks;
He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding. Shakspeare.

Nor shall Sebastian's formidable name
Be longer us'd, to lull the crying babe. Dryden.

The babe had all that infant care beguiles,
And early knew his mother in her smiles. Dryden.

BA'BEL.* n. s. [Heb. "That pregnant relique of the new world's ambition, Babel by name; so called from the event of that, because there their language was confounded. For so the Hebrews intimate by the word babel; a word which, in our mother tongue, we yet retain from our Saxon ancestors, as they from Askenaz; for when we hear a man speak confusedly, we say he babbles." Gregory's Posthuma, 1650, p. 186. The word is in our old dictionaries. Bullokar's Exposition of Hard Words defines it confusion.] Disorder; irregular mixture; tumult.

I heard a hundred cries, the devil, the devil;
• Then roaring, and then tumbling; all the chambers
Are a mere babel, or another bedlam.

Braun, and Fl. Little Chief.

That babel of strange heathen languages.

Hammond, Serm. p. 508.

B A B

Swift, Rom. Club. Reasons for Dep. the Test.
We have seen what a lofty babel has been raised by this grand architect of mischief and confusion, the devil.

South's Sermons, viii. 129.

BA'BERY. n. [from babe.] Flattery to please a babe or child.

So have I seen trim boys in velvet dight,
With gold leaves and painted babery
Of sely boys, please unacquainted sight.

Sidney.

BA'BRUS. adj. [from babe.] Childish.

If he be bashful, and will soon blush, they call him a babish and ill brought up thing.

Ascham.

BA'BOON. n. s. [babouin, Fr.] It is supposed by Skinner to be the augmentation of babe, and to import a great babe. Bryant says, that it is so called from the Egyptian deity Babon, to which it was sacred. Anc. Mythol. A monkey of the largest kind.

You had looked through the grate like a geminy of baboon.

Shakespeare.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and came a baboon.

Addison.

BA'BY. n. s. [See BABE.]

1. A child; an infant.

The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart

Goes all decorum.

Shakespeare.

The child must have sugar plums, rather than make the poor baby cry.

Locke.

He must marry, and propagate: the father cannot stay for the portion, nor the mother for babies to play with.

Locke.

2. A small image in imitation of a child, which girls play with.

The archduke saw that Perkin would prove a runagate; and it was the part of children to fall out about babies. Bacon.

Since no image can represent the great Creator, never think to honour him by your foolish puppets, and babies of dirt and clay.

Stillingfleet.

BA'BY. adj. [from the substantive.] Like a baby; diminutive; small.

In such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen

The baby figure of the giant mass

Of things to come at large.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cressida.

What is this,

That rises like the issue of a king,

And wears upon his baby brow the round

And top of sovereignty.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

TO BA'BY. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat one like a baby; to impose upon.

At best it [wealth] babies us with endless toys,
And keeps us children till we drop to dust. Young, N. Th. 6.

BA'BYHOOD. n. s. [from baby.] The latter of these

BA'BYSHIP. } words is in Minshew's old dictionary.

Infancy; childhood.

BA'BYISH. adj. [from baby, Welsh babuidd.] This is the modern word; for it was anciently written babysh, without the i. See also BABISH, as given by Johnson.] Childish; in the state of an infant.

Humbleness of spirit, babyish submission.

Confutation of N. Sharon, (1546), sign. G. 4. b.

He was then so weak, so infatuate, and babyish, that not only wise men, learned men, and strong men, did set him light, but also yonge maydes, children, &c.

Bale on the Revelations, sign. Dd. 7. b.

BABYLO'NICAL. adj. [from Babel or Babylon.] Turbulent; disorderly.

He saw plainly their antiquity, novelty; their universality, a babylonical tyranny; and their consent, a conspiracy.

Harinkton's Br. View of the Church. n. 97.

BACCATED. adj. [baccatus, Lat.] Bristled with pearls; having many berries. Dict.

BACCHANAL. n. s. [from bacchanalia, Lat.] Drunken; revelling.

Your solemn and bacchanal feasts, that you observe yearly. Crowley's Deliberate Answer, (1587), fol. 26.

BACCHANAL. n. s. A reveller; a devotee to Bacchus, the god of wine.

Living voluptuous like a bacchanal.

Marston's Scourge of Vill. iii. 9.

Arnobius, satirizing upon the Bacchanals, says, You wind yourselves round with snakes.

Stukeley, Palaeograph. Sacra, p. 44.

BACCHANA'LIAN. n. s. [from bacchanalia, Lat.] A riotous person; a drunkard. Dr. Johnson has given no example of this word; and perhaps it has not been beyond a century in our language. Colles takes no notice of it in his Dict. at the close of the 17th century. I find it used by Dr. Stukeley, a physician and divine of great learning, in his remarks on the followers of Bacchus, printed in one of his Antiquarian Discourses in 1736. He applies the adjective also (which is common enough in later times, though wholly unnoticed by Dr. Johnson), to what respects the festivals of those followers.

All sculptures of the Bacchinalia [Bacchanians] represent frantick men and women. Stukeley, Palaeograph. Sacra, p. 44.

BACCHANA'LIAN. adj. Relating to revelry.

If the one represents a religious or a bacchanalian subject, its companion represents another of the same kind.

A. Smith, of the Imitating Arts.

West-country lads, who drank ale, smoked tobacco, punned, and sung bacchanalian catches the whole evening.

Graves's Recoll. of Shentons, p. 15.

BACCHANALS. n. s. [bacchanalia, Lat.] The drunken feasts and revels of Bacchus, the god of wine.

Ha, my brave emperor,

Shall we dance now the Egyptian bacchanals,

And celebrate our drink?

Shakespeare.

What wild fury was there in the heathen bacchanals, which we have not seen equalled?

Decay of Picty.

Both extremes were banish'd from their walls,
Carthusian fasts, and fulsome bacchanals. Pope, Imit. of Horace.

BACCHUS BOLE. n. s. A flower not tall, but very full and broad-leaved.

Mortimer.

BACCI'FEROUS. adj. [from bacca, a berry, and fero, to bear, Lat.] Berry-bearing.

Bacciferous trees are of four kinds.

1. Such as bear a bacculate or naked berry; the flower and calix both falling off together, and leaving the berry bare; as the sassafras trees.

3. Such as have a naked monospermous fruit, that is, containing in it only one seed; as the arbutus.

3. Such as have but polyspermous fruit, that is, containing two or more kernels or seeds within it; as the jesminum, ligustrum.

4. Such as have their fruit composed of many acini, or round soft balls set close together like a bunch of grapes; as the uva marina.

Ray.

BACCHANTE. n. s. [Lat. bacchans, from bacchor.]

BACCHANTE. } He or she who is a reveller, who lives like Bacchus.

BACCHICAL. adj. [Lat. bacchicus.] Relating to Bacchus.

BACCHICK. } the riotous feasts of Bacchus.
They [the Grecian sophists] raised up a kind of bacchical enthusiasm, and transported their hearers, with some honey words, soft and effeminate phrases and accents, and a kind of singing tones.

Spencer's Vanity of Riches, p. 78.

The bacchick organ were celebrated on the tops of hills and desolate wild places. Stukeley, Palæograph. p. 39.

BACCI'VOUS. adj. [from bacca, a berry, and vorare, to devour, Lat.] Devouring berries. Dict.

BA'CHELOR. n. s. [This is a word of very uncertain etymology, it not being well known what was its original sense. Junius derives it from bas, foolish; Menage, from bas chevalier, a knight of the lowest rank; Spelman, from baculus, a staff; Cuijas, from buccella, an allowance of provision. The most probable derivation seems to be from bacca laurus, the berry of a laurel or bay; bachelors being young, are of good hopes, like laurels in the berry. They are often addressed at Oxford, as florentissimi. Dr. Lawrence has observed, that Menage's etymology is much confirmed by the practice in our universities of calling a Bachelor, Sir. In Latin, baccalarius, Sax. bachleap, old Fr. bachelor. Barbazan derives the word from baccalia, the bay or laurel tree, which Roquefort approves; though that of Menage is not to be discarded in the contemptuous manner which Roquefort would dictate.]

1. A man unmarried.

Such separation

Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid. Shakspeare.

The haunting of dissolute places, or resort to courtesans, are no more punished in married men than in bachelors. Bacon.

A true painter naturally delights in the liberty which belongs to the bachelor's estate. Dryden.

Let stiff bachelors their woes deplore,
Full well they merit all they feel and more. Pope.

2. A man who takes his first degrees at the university in any profession.

Being a boy, new bachelor of arts, I chanced to speak against the pope. Ascham.

I appear before your honour, in behalf of Martinus Scriblerus, bachelor of physick. Mart. Scriblerus.

3. A knight of the lowest order. This is a sense now little used.

King Richard II. in the first year of his reign is said to have constituted certain persons to be of counsel to him; 1. Earls; 2. Barons; 3. Bannerets; and 4. Bacheliers. And, in the instrument of his deposition, the lower house of parliament are called the bachelors and commons of the land. But by bachelors in those two places is to be understood, I think, not the commons in general, but knight; and to this very day simple knights are styled knight bachelors.

Hody, Hist. of Convocations, p. 354.

4. Applied by Ben Jonson to an unmarried woman.

We do not trust your uncle; he would keep you
A bachelor still, by keeping of your portion;
And keep you not alone without a husband,
But in a sickness. Magnetick Lady.

BA'CHELORSHIP. n. s. [from bachelor.]

1. The condition of a bachelor.

Her mother, living yet, can testify,
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship. Shakspeare.

2. The state of him who has taken his first degree at the university.

The third year of my bachelorship should at once both make an end of my maintenance, and in respect of standing, give me a capacity of further preferment in that house.

Bp. Hall, Rem. Life, p. 8.

BACK. n. s. [Goth. ibukai, bac, bæc, Sax. bach, Germ.]

1. The hinder part of the body, from the neck to the thighs.

Part following enter, part remain without,
And mount on others' backs, in hopes to share. Dryden.

2. The outer part of the hand when it is shut: opposed to the palm.

Method he love playing me, when he saw this Gave me your hand, the backs and palms to kiss. Donne.

3. The outward part of the body; that which requires clothes; opposed to the belly.

Those who, by their ancestors, have their set free from constant drudgery to their backs and the lies, should stow some time on their heads.

4. The rear: opposed to the face.

He might conclude that Walter would upon the king's back, as his majesty was upon his. Sheldon.

5. The place behind.

As the voice goeth round, as well towards the back as towards the front of him that speaketh, so does the echo: for you have many back echos to the place where you stand. Bacon.

Antheus, Sergestus grave, Cleanthus strong,
And at their backs a mighty Trojan throng. Dryden.

6. The part of any thing out of sight.

Trees set upon the backs of chimnies do ripen fruit sooner. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

7. The thick part of any tool opposed to the edge; as, the back of a knife or sword; whence backsword, or sword with a back: as,

Bull dreaded not old Lewis either at backsword, single faulchion or cudgel-play. Arbuthnot.

8. To turn the back on one; to forsake him, or neglect him.

At the hour of death, all friend-ships of the world bid him adieu, and the whole creation turns its back upon him. South.

9. To turn the back; to go away, to be not within the reach of taking cognizance.

His back was no sooner turned, but they returned to their former rebellion. Sir J. Davies.

10. A large vessel used by brewers and distillers: a vat.

11. The bat is called the back or reremouse, in Huloet's old dictionary; and appears to have been once the usual word for it.

The other face — had wings like a backe or flindermouse.

Knight, Tryal of Truth, (1580) fol. 9. b.

BACK. adv. [from the noun.]

1. To the place from which one came.

Back you shall not to the house, unless
You undertake that with me. Shakspeare.

He sent many to seek the ship Argo, threatening that if they brought not back Medea, they should suffer in her stead.

Raleigh, History of the World

Where they are, and why they came not back,
Is now the labour of my thoughts. Milton.

Back to thy native island might'st thou sail.
And leave half heard the melancholy tale. Pope.

2. Backward; as retreating from the present station.

I've been surpris'd in an unguarded hour,
But must not now go back; the love that lay
Half smother'd in my breast, has broke through all Its weak restraints. Addison.

3. Behind; not coming forward.

I thought to promote thee unto great honour; but lo, the Lord hath kept thee back from honour. Numb. xxix. 11.

Constrain the glebe, keep back the hurtful weed. Blackmore.

4. Towards things past.

I had always a curiosity to look back unto the sources of things, and to view in my mind the beginning and progress of rising world. Burnet.

5. Again: in return.

The lady's mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
Take and give back affairs, and their dispatch,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing. Shakspeare.

6. Again; a second time.

This Cæsar found, and that ungrateful age,
With losing him, went back to blood and rage. Waller.

2. Slowness of progression; tardiness.

To BA'CKWOUND. * v. a. [from back and wound.] To wound secretly, behind the back.

The whitest virtue strikes. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

BA'CON. * n. s. [probably from baken, that is, dried flesh, Dr. Johnson says; and Mr. Horne Tooke contends that it is evidently the past participle of the Sax. bacon, to bake or dry by heat, Div. of Pur. vol. ii. p. 71. I may, however, refer, perhaps as strongly to the old Fr. bacon, which means dried flesh, and pork. V. Lacombe, Wachter, Le Grand, and Roquefort. The Welsh also have bacen.]

1. The flesh of a hog salted and dried.

High o'er the hearth a chine of bacon hung, Good old Philemon seiz'd it with a prong, Then cut a slice. Dryden.

2. The animal itself.

A young bacon, Or a fine little smooth horse-colt. Kyd's Spanish Tragedy.

3. To save the bacon, is a phrase for preserving one's self from being hurt; borrowed from the care of housewives in the country, where they have seldom any other provision in the house than dried bacon, to secure it from the marching soldiers.

What frightens you thus? my good son! says the it; You murder'd, are sorry, and have been confest. O father! my sorrow will scarce save my bacon; For 'twas not that I murder'd, but that I was taken. Prior.

B A D

BACULO'METRY. n. s. [from baculus, Lat. and metron.] The art of measuring distances by one or more staves.

BAID. adj. [quand, Dutch, compar. worse; superl. worst.] Sir T. Herbert, in his Travels, tells us, that in the Mohl language "badd Adam is a bad man," p. 99. The Gothick band, insipid, has been thought by Mr. H. Tooke to be the etymological root; but it may be doubted. I have met with the direct superlative of bad, which I offer as a curiosity, and not for imitation: "The baddest among the cardinals is chosen pope." Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.]

1. Ill; not good: a general word, used in regard to physical or moral faults, either of men or things.

Most men have politicks enough to make, through violence, the best scheme of government a bad one. Pope.

2. Vicious; corrupt.

Thou may'st repent,
And one bad act, with many deeds well done,
May'st cover.

Milton.

Thus will the latter, as the former, world
Still tend from bad to worse.

Milton.

Our unhappy fates
Mix thee amongst the bad, or make thee run
Too near the paths, which virtue bids thee shun.

3. Unfortunate; unhappy.

The sun his annual course obliquely made,
Good days contracted, and enlarg'd the bad. Dryden

4. Hurtful; unwholesome; mischievous pernicious with for.

Reading was bad for his eyes, writing made his head ache. Addison.

5. Sick: with of: as, bad of a fever.

BAD. } The preterite of bid.

And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade, me from him call thee thane of Cawdor. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

BADGE. n. s. [A word derived by Junius from bode or bade, a messenger; and supposed to be corrupted from badage, the credential of a messenger: but taken by Skinner and Minshew from bagge, Dut. a jewel, or bague, a ring, Fr. But it seems to come from bajulo, to carry, Lat. The Sax. bad or bade, a pledge, may also be offered.]

1. A mark or cognizance worn to shew the relation of the wearer to any person or thing.

But on his breast a bloody cross he bore,
The dear resemblance of his dying lord;
For whose sweet sake that glorious badge he wore. Spenser.
The outward splendour of his office, is the badge and token of that sacred character which he inwardly bears. Atterbury.

2. A token by which one is known.

A savage tygress on her helmet lies;
The famous badge Clarinda us'd to bear. Fairfax.

3. The mark or token of any thing.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakespeare.

Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge.
Let him not bear the badges of a wreck,
Nor beg with a blue table on his back. Dryden.

To BADGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark as with a badge.

Your royal father's murdered ——
—— Oh, by whom? ——

Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had don't;
BAC'd hands and faces were all badg'd with blood, behind their daggers, Shakespeare, Macbeth.

B A F

2. To mark actually with a badge.

A man may walk from one end of the town to the other, without seeing one beggar regularly badged.

Swift, on giving Badges to the Poor.

BA'DGELESS. \ adj.* [from badge and less.] Having no badge.

Whiles his light heels their fearful flight can take,
To get some badgeless blue upon his back. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 5.

BA'DGER. n. s. [bedown, Fr. melis.] An animal that earths in the ground, used to be hunted.

That a brock, or badger, hath legs of one side shorter than the other, is received not only by theorists and unexperienced believers, but most who behold them daily. Brown.

To BA'DGER. \ v. a.* [perhaps from the noun.] To weary a person; to confound. Used only in colloquial language.

BA'DGER-LEGGED. adj. [from badger and legged.] Having legs of an unequal length, as the badger is supposed to have.

His body crooked all over, big-bellied, badger-legged, and his complexion swarthy. L'Estrange.

BA'DGER. † n. s. [perhaps from the Latin bajulus, a carrier; but, by Junius, derived from the badger, a creature who stows up his provision; and by Minshew from baggage. Bajulus, however, seems to be the true etymology. Fuller, in his Worthies, (under Sussex,) mentions "higglers as bajulating provisions to London."] One that buys corn and victuals in one place, and carries it unto another.

Cowel.

BA'DINAGE. \ } n. s.* [Fr. The first of these words
BADINERIE. } was in use for foolery a century and a half ago. See Coles's English Dict. in V.] Light or playful discourse.

When you find your antagonist beginning to grow warm, put an end to the dispute by some genteel badinage.

Ld. Chesterfield.

The fund of sensible discourse is limited; that of jest and badinerie is infinite. Shenstone.

BA'DLY. adv. [from bad.] In a bad manner; not well.

How goes the day with us? O tell me, Hubert.—
Badly, I fear. How fares your majesty? Shakespeare.

BA'DNESS. n. s. [from bad.] Want of good qualities, either natural or moral; desert; depravity.

It was not your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set at work by a reproveable badness in himself. Shakespeare.

There is one convenience in this city, which makes some amends for the badness of the pavement. Addison on Italy.

I did not see how the badness of the weather could be the king's fault. Addison.

To BA'FFLE. † v. a. [Fr. befler, according to Dr. Johnson, which indeed signifies to deceive. But it may be traced to the old Fr. en bas fouler; and also to baffoiler, which Cotgrave translates into baffle and disgrace.]

1. To elude; to make ineffectual.

They made a shift to think themselves guiltless in spite of all their sins; to break the precept, and at the same time to baffle the curse. South.

He hath deserved to have the grace withdrawn, which he hath so long baffled and defied. Atterbury.

2. To confound; to defeat with some confusion, as by perplexing or amusing; to baffle is sometimes less than to conquer.

Etruria lost,
He brings to Turnus' aid his baffled host. Dryden.
When the mind has brought itself to close thinking, it may go on roundly. Every abstruse problem, every intricate question will not baffle, discourage, or break it. Locke.

B A G

A foreign potentate trembles at a war with the English nation, ready to employ against him such revenues as baffle his designs upon their country. Addison.

3. To disgrace; to insult; to mock.

[He] blotted out his arms with falshood blent,
And himself baffled, and his armes unherst,
And broke his sword in twaine. Spenser, P. Q. v. iii. 37.

See him laugh'd at, see him baffled!
Fanshawe, Past. Fido, p. 81.

I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled here.
Shakspeare, K. Richard II.

Alas, poor fool, how have they baffled thee!
Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

To BATTLE. * v. n. To practise deceit.

Do we not palpably baffle, when, in respect to God, we pretend to deny ourselves, yet, upon urgent occasion, allow him nothing? Barrow, Works, i. 437.

To what purpose can it be to juggle and baffle for a time?
Ibid. iii. 180.

BA'FFLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A defeat.

It is the skill of the disputant that keeps off a baffle. South.
The authors having missed of their aims, are fain to retreat with frustration and a baffle. South.

BA'FFLER. n. s. [from baffle.] He that puts to confusion, or defeats.

Experience, that great baffler of speculation, assures us the thing is too possible, and brings, in all ages, matter of fact to confute our suppositions. Government of the Tongue.

BAG. † n. s. [belge, Sax. from whence perhaps by dropping, as is usual, the harsh consonant, came bege, la bag; Goth. balgs, pouch or bag; Germ. balg.]

1. A sack, or pouch, to put any thing in, as money, corn.

Cousin, away for England; haste before,
And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their imprison'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakspeare.

What is it that opens thy mouth in praises? Is it that thy bags and thy barns are full? South.

Waters were inclosed within the earth as in a bag. Burnet.
Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke. Pope.

2. That part of animals in which some particular juices are contained, as the poison of vipers.

The swelling poison of the several sects,
Which, wanting vent, the nation's health infects,
Shall burst its bag. Dryden.

Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd;
So may thy cows their burden'd bags distend. Dryden.

3. An ornamental purse of silk tied to men's hair.

We saw a young fellow riding towards us full gallop, with a bob wig and black silken bag tied to it. Addison.

4. A term used to signify different quantities of certain commodities; as, a bag of pepper; a bag of hops.

To BAG. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into a bag.

Accordingly he drain'd those marshy grounds,
And bagg'd them in a blue cloud. Dryden.
Hops ought not to be bagg'd up hot. Markiner.

2. To load with a bag.

Like a bee bagg'd with his honey'd venom,
He brings it to your hive. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

To BAG. † v. n. To swell like a full bag. Formerly used in the figurative sense of swelling with disdain; as was the obsolete adverb baggingly.

She gothe upright, and yet she halte,
That baggish foul, and lokith fair, Chaucer, Drewe, ed. Urr. 623.

B A G

The skin seemed much contracted, yet it bagged, and had a porringer full of matter in it. Wiseman.

Two kids that in the valley stray'd
I found by chance, and to my fold convey'd:
They drain two bagging udders every day. Dryden.

To BAG. * v. a. To swell; to make tumid. [In the Prompt. Parv. 1514, a baggen, or bolen out, occurs, and is rendered tumeo.]

How doth an unwelcome dropsy bagge up the eyes, and misshape the face and body, with unpleasing and unkindly tumours! Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 408.

BAGATELLE. † n. s. [bagatelle, Fr.] A trifle; a thing of no importance: a word not naturalised, Dr. Johnson says; which seems to be a mistake; for it has been in use nearly two centuries. Bp. Jeremy Taylor writes it bagatello. Howell's books were published in the former part of the 17th century.]

They [the nuns] will entertain discourse till one be weary, if he bestow on them some small bagatels, as English gloves, or knives, or ribands. Howell, Instruct. for Foreign Travel, p. 34.

By this correspondence with you, I do as our East India merchants use to do; I venture beads and other bagatels, out of the proceed whereof I have pearl and other oriental jewels returned me in your's. Howell, Letters, iv. 44.

Even so small bagatelles, or toys
Bp. Taylor's Artif. Handsomeness, p. 27.

Heaps of hair rings and cypher'd seals;
Rich trifles, serious bagatelles. Prior.

BA'GGAGE. † n. s. [from bag; baggage, Fr. bagages, Su.]

1. The furniture and utensils of an army.

The army was an hundred and seventy thousand footmen, and twelve thousand horsemen, beside the baggage. Judith, vii. 2.
Riches are the baggage of virtue; they cannot be spared, nor left behind, but they hinder the march. Bacon.

They were probably always in readiness, and carried among the baggage of the army. Addison on Italy.

2. The goods that are to be carried away, as bag and baggage.

They and their married women, with bagge and baggages, would runne awaic from hence unto the countrie of Gogce.

Martin, on the Marriage of Priests, (1554.) sign. B. iv. b.

For dame the doxey to march round the circuit,
With bag and baggage. B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady.

Dolabella designed, when his affairs grew desperate in Egypt, to pack up bag and baggage, and sail for Italy. Arbutnot.

3. A worthless woman; in French bagasse, so called, because such woman follow camps. Ital. bagascia.

A spark of indignation did rise in her, not to suffer such a baggage to win away any thing of hers. Sidney.

When this baggage meets with a man who has vanity to credit relations, she turns him to account. Spectator.

4. Not always the worthless woman, which Dr. Johnson means, viz. her who has forfeited her honour: but a pert young woman, a flirt, as Cotgrave also renders bagasse; and used jocosely.

Though the baggage [Annabella Lizard] would not speak out, I found the sum of her wishes was a rich fool, or a man so turned to her purposes, that she might enjoy his fortune, and insult his understanding. Guardian, No. 31.

5. Refuse; lumber; trumpery.

I believe that this baptism ought to be ministered, not with oil, salt, spittle, and such-like baggage, but only in clean and fair water. Bp. Hooper, Conf. of Chr. Faith, (1584) § 61.

He speaketh not of receiving the pope's pardons, jubilees, dispensations, absolutions, and such like baggage. Fulke against Allen, p. 473.

BA'GNIO. n. s. [bagno, Ital. a bath.] A house for bathing, sweating, and otherwise cleansing the body.

I have known two instances of malignant fevers produced by the hot air of a bagno. Arbutnot on Air.

BA'GPIPE. n. s. [from bag and pipe; the wind being received in a bag.] A musical instrument, consisting of a leathern bag, which blows up like a foot-ball by means of a port vent or little tube fixed to it, and stopped by a valve; and three pipes or flutes, the first called the great pipe or drone, and the second the little one; which pass the wind out only at the bottom; the third has a reed, and is played on by compressing the bag under the arm, when full; and opening or stopping the holes, which are eight, with the fingers. The bagpipe takes in the compass of three octaves.

Chambers.

No banners but shirts, with some bad bagpipes instead of drum and fife. Sidney.

He heard a bagpipe, and saw a general animated with the sound. Addison, Freeholder.

BA'GPIPER. n. s. [from bagpipe.] One that plays on a bagpipe.

Some that will evermore peep thro' their eyes,
And laugh, like parrots, at a bagpiper. Shakspeare.

BAGUETTE. n. s. [Fr. a term of architecture.] A little round moulding, less than an astragal; sometimes carved and enriched.

To BAIGNE. v. a. [bagner, Fr.] To drench; to soak: a word out of use.

The women forswore not to baigne them, unless they plead their heels, with a worse perfume than Jugurth found in the dungeon. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

BAIL.† n. s. [Of this word the etymologists give many derivations; it seems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand; to deliver up, as a man delivers himself up in surety.]

1. Bail is the freeing or setting at liberty one arrested or imprisoned upon action either civil or criminal, under security taken for his appearance. There is both common and special bail; common bail is in actions of small prejudice, or slight proof, called common, because any sureties in that case are taken: whereas, upon causes of greater weight, or apparent speciality, special bail or surety must be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainprise; for he that is mainprised, is at large, until the day of his appearance: but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and custody for the time: and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in prison at that time, or otherwise at their will.

Cowel.

Worry'd with debts, and past all hopes of bail,
The unpy'd wretch lies rotting in a jail. Roscommon.

And bribe with presents, or when presents fail,
They send their prostituted wives for bail. Dryden.

2. A surety; a bondsman; one who gives security for another.

Let me be their bail —

They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer their suspicion. Titus Andronicus.

3. A certain limit or bound within a forest. Kersey.

Figuratively, power.
So did Diana and her maydens all
Use silly Fannus, now within their baile. Spenser, F.Q. vii. 49.

To BAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give bail for another.

Let me be their bail —

They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer their suspicion —
Thou shalt not bail them. Titus Andronicus.

4. To admit to bail.

When they had bailed the twelve bishops, who were in the Tower, the house of commons, in great indignation, caused them immediately to be recommitted to the Tower. Clarendon.

BA'ILABLE.† adj. [from bail.] That may be set at liberty by bail or sureties.

They are not baillable.

They stand committed without bail or mainprise.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

BA'ILIF.† n. s. [a word of doubtful etymology, but borrowed by us from laillie, Fr. In our old vocabularies written baily, and so a steward is still called in many places.]

1. A subordinate officer.

Lausanne is under the canton of Berne, governed by a bailiff sent every three years from the senate of Berne. Addison.

2. An officer whose business it is to execute arrests.

It many times happeneth, that, by the under-sheriff and their bailiffs, the owner hath incurred the forfeiture, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process that runneth against him. Bacon.

A bailiff, by mistake, seized you for a debtor, and kept you the whole evening in a spunging-house. Swift.

Swift as a bard the bailiff leaves behind. Pope.

3. An under steward of a manor.

BA'ILIWICK. n. s. [of baillie, Fr. and pie, Sax.] The place of the jurisdiction of a bailiff within his hundred, or the lord's franchise. It is that liberty which is exempted from the sheriff of the county, over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff. Cowel.

A proper officer is to walk up and down his bailiwicks.

Spenser.

There issued writs to the sheriffs, to return the names of the several land owners in their several bailiwicks. Hale.

BA'ILMENT.* n. s. The delivery of things whether writings, goods, &c. sometimes to be delivered back to the bailor, that is, to him that so delivered them; sometimes to the use of the bailee, that is, of him to whom they are delivered; and sometimes also to a third person. Cowel.

BA'ILY.* n. s. [Fr. baillie.] The office or jurisdiction of a bailiff. The word, with this meaning, is not found in modern dictionaries, but in that of Coles, nearly a century and a half since, it is defined government. By the editors of Wicliffe's translation of the N. Test. it has been mistakenly explained, in the Glossary, only as the officer. This old word probably gave rise to bailiwick.

He seide also to his disciplis, Ther was a man that hadde a baylyf. And this was defamed to him, as he hadde wastid his goodis. And he clepede him, and seyde to him, What heere I this thing of thee? Yelde rekonyng of thi baylye, for thou myght not now be baylyf. Wicliffe, S. Luke, xvi. 1. 2.

BAIN.* n. s. [Fr. bain, baign, Ital. bagno, from bagnare, Lat. balneum. A word which occurs in most of our old dictionaries.] A bath; a washing-place.

Our baines at Bath with Virgil's to compare,
For their effects, I dare almost be bold.

Hakewill's Apology, p. 134.

To lie sweating so long in the baines. Ibid. p. 363.

To BAIN.* v. a. See To BAIGNE. To bathe. Obsolete.

Bayning my breast.

Turberville's Poems, (1570.)

To be bained, or wet.

Huloet.

BAIRN.* } n. s. [Sax. beapn.] A child. See BEARN.

BAIRN.

To BAIT. v. a. [batan, Sax. baitzen, Germ.]

- i. To put meat upon a hook, in some place, to tempt fish or other animals.

Oh, cunning enemy, that to catch a saint
With saints dost bait thy hook! more dangerous
Is that temptation that doth good
To sin in loving virtue. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a sure baited delay, till he hath pawned his horses to mine host of the garter. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

Many sorts of fishes feed upon insects, as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray.

How are the sex improv'd in amorous arts!

What new-found snares they bait for human hearts! Gay.

2. To give meat to one's self, or horses, on the road.

What so strong,
But wanting rest, will also want of might?
The sun, that measures heaven all day long,
At night doth bait his steeds the ocean waves among. Spenser.

To BAIT.† v. a. [from battre, Fr. to beat, Dr. Johnson says; but it is rather from the Icel. and Goth. beita, beitan, to incite, to stir up.]

1. To attack with violence.

*Who seeming sorely chaffed at his band,
As chained bear, whom cruel dogs do bait,
With idle force did fain them to withstand. Spenser, F. Q.

I will not yield
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet;
And to be baited with the rabble's curse. Shakespeare, Macb.

2. To harass by the help of others; as, we bait a boar with mastiffs, but a bull with bull-dogs.

To BAIT.† v. n. To stop at any place for refreshment. Perhaps this word is more properly bate; to abate speed, Dr. Johnson says. But it is more probably from Sax. batan, to offer a bait. Dr. Jamieson thinks the Icel. beita, to drive cattle to pasture, (whence beit, feeding; pasture,) as the original.]

But our desires tyrannical extortion,
Doth force us there to set our chief delightfulness,
Where but a baiting place is all our portion. Sidney.

As one who on his journey baits at noon,
Though bent on speed: so here th' archangel paus'd. Milton.

In all our journey from London to his house, we did not so much as bait at a whig inn. Addison, Spectator.

To BAIT.† v. n. [Written also bate. A term in falconry. The word is derived by Minsheu either from the Fr. batre, to beat, or s'abatre, to descend.] To flap the wings, to make an offer of flying; to flutter, as a hawk when it pounces on its prey.

All plum'd like estridges, that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats like images. Shakespeare.

Hood my unmann'd blood baiting in my cheeks
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold, Thinks true love acted simple modesty. Shakespeare.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her as we watch these kites,
That bait and beat, and will not be obedient. Shakespeare.

BAIT.† n. s. [from the verb, or the Icel. sub. beit. See To BAIT. Mr. Horne Tooke contends that it is the past participle of the verb bite, in the supposed confirmation of which he brings, from B. Jonson's Sejanus, "baits, baitis, for us to bite at."]

1. Meat set to allure fish, or other animals, to a snare.

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden ours the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait. Shakespeare.

2. A temptation; an enticement; allurements.

And that same glorious beauty's idle boast,
Is but a bait such wretches to beguile. Spenser.

Take th' therewith the souls of men, as with the baits. Hooker.

Sweet words I grant, baits and allurements sweet,
But greatest hopes with greatest crosses meet. Fairfax.

Fruit, like that
Which grew in paradise, the bait of Eve
Us'd by the tempter. Milton.

Secure from foolish pride's affected state,
And specious flattery's more pernicious bait. Roscommon.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was ty'd above:
Sweet negligence! unheeded bait of love! Dryden.

Grant that others could with equal glory,
Look down on pleasures, and the baits of sense. Addison.

3. A refreshment on a journey.

If you grow dry before you end your business, pray take a bait here; I have a fresh hoghead for you.

Beaumont and Fl. Scornful Lady.
The men of this world enjoy the good things of this life as their ultimate happiness, beyond which they look no farther;
but good men use them as a viaticum or bait, as a present support and refreshment in their pursuit of a far greater happiness.
Bp. Hall's Works, ii. 660.

BAIZE. n. s. A kind of coarse open cloth stuff, having a long nap; sometimes frized on one side, and sometimes not frized. This stuff is without wale, being wrought on a loom with two treddles, like flannel. Chambers.

To BAKE. v. a. participle passive, baked or baken.
[bæcan, Sax. becken, Germ. supposed by Wachter to come from bec, which, in the Phrygian language, signified bread.]

1. To heat any thing in a close place; generally in an oven.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea he kindleth it,
and baketh bread. Isaiah.

The difference of prices of bread proceeded from their delicacy in bread, and perhaps something in their manner of baking. Brown.

2. To harden in the fire.

The work of the fire is a kind of baking; and whatsoever
the fire baketh, time doth in some degree dissolve. Bacon.

3. To harden with heat.

With vehement suns
When dusty summer bakes the crumbling clods,
How pleasant is't, beneath the twisted arch,
To ply the sweet carouse! Philips.

The sun with flaming arrows pierc'd the flood,
And, darting to the bottom, bak'd the mud. Dryden.

To BAKE. v. n.

1. To do the work of baking.

I keep his house, and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scort, dress meat, and make the beds, and do all myself. Shakespeare.

2. To be heated or baked.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

BAKE-MEATS.† } Meats dressed by the oven.

BAKED MEATS. }
In the uppermost basket there was all manner of bakemeats for Pharaoh. Gen. xl. 14.

There be some houses, wherein sweetmeats will rot, and baked meats will mould, more than others. Bacon.

BA'KEHOUSE.† n. s. [Sax. bæchur.] A place for baking bread.

I have marked a willingness in the Italian artizans, to distribute the kitchen, pantry, and bakehouse under ground. Wotton.

BA'KEN. The participle from to bake.

There was a cake baken on the coals, and a cruse of water at his head. 1 Kings.

BA'KER. † n. s. [Sax. bæcepe.] He whose trade is to bake.

In life and health, every man must proceed upon trust, there being no knowing the intention of the cook or baker. South.

BA'KER-FOOT. * n. s. An expression for an ill-shaped, or distorted foot.

The unhandsome warpings of bow-legs and baker-feet.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 60.

BALANCE. n. s. [balance, Fr. bilanx, Lat.]

1. One of the six simple powers in mechanicks, used principally for determining the difference of weight in heavy bodies. It is of several forms. Chambers.

* A pair of scales.

A balance of power, either without or within a state, is best conceived by considering what the nature of a balance is. It supposes three things; first, the part which is held, together with the hand that holds it; and then the two scales, with whatever is weighed therein. Swift.

For when on ground the burden balance lies,

The empty part is lifted up the higher.

Sir J. Davies.

3. A metaphorical balance, or the mind employed in comparing one thing with another.

I have in equal balance justly weighed,

What wrong our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer:

Griefs heavier than our offences.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

4. The act of comparing two things, as by the balance.

Comfort arises not from others being miserable, but from this inference upon the balance, that we suffer only the lot of nature. L'Estrange.

Upon a fair balance of the advantages on either side, it will appear, that the rules of the gospel are more powerful means of conviction than such message. Atterbury.

5. The overplus of weight; that quantity by which, of two things weighed together, one exceeds the other.

Care being taken, that the exportation exceed in value the importation; and then the balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

6. That which is wanting to make two parts of an account even; as, he stated the account with his correspondent, and paid the balance.

7. Equipoise; as, balance of power. See the second sense.

Love, hope, and joy, fair pleasure's smiling train;

Hate, fear, and grief, the family of pain;

These mix'd with art, and to due bounds confin'd,

Make and maintain the balance of the mind.

Pope.

8. The beating part of a watch.

It is but supposing that all watches, whilst the balance beats, think; and it is sufficiently proved, that my watch thought all last night. Locke.

9. [In astronomy.] One of the twelve signs of the zodiack, commonly called Libra.

Or wilt thou warm our summers with thy rays,

And seated near the balance poise the days.

Dryden.

To BALANCE. v. a. [balancer, Fr.]

1. To weigh in a balance, either real or figurative; to compare by the balance.

If men would but balance the good and the evil of things, they would not venture soul and body for dirty interest. L'Estrange.

2. To regulate the weight in a balance; to keep in a state of just proportion.

Heav'n that hath plac'd this island to give law,

To balance Europe, and her states to awe.

Waller.

3. To counterpoise; to weigh equal to; to be equipollent; to counteract.

The attraction of the glass is balanced, and rendered ineffectual by the contrary attraction of the liquor. Newton.

4. To regulate an account, by stating it on both sides.

Judging is balancing an account, and determining on which side the odds lie. Locke.

5. To pay that which is wanting to make the two parts of an account equal.

Give him leave

To balance the account of Blenheim's day.

Prior.

Though I am very well satisfied, that it is not in my power to balance accounts with my Maker, I am resolved, however, to turn all my endeavours that way. Addison, Spectator.

To BALANCE. v. n. To hesitate; to fluctuate between equal motives, as a balance plays when charged with equal weights.

Were the satisfaction of lust, and the joys of heaven, offered to any one's present possession, he would not balance, or err in the determination of his choice. Locke.

Since there is nothing that can offend, I see not why you should balance a moment about printing it. Atterbury to Pope.

BALANCEP. † n. s. [Fr. balanceur.] The person that weighs any thing. Cotgrave.

BALANCING. * n. s. [from balance.] Equilibrium; poise.

Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds? Job xxxvii. 16.

The strange balancings of parties for the safety of the whole.

Dr. Spenser, Sermon. (1660.) p. 50.

BA'CLASS Ruby. † n. s. [balas, Fr. supposed to be an Indian term, according to Dr. Johnson. Some call it a Turkish ruby. Palsgrave renders it balé, and Cotgrave balay.] A kind of ruby.

Balasa ruby is of a crimson colour, with a cast of purple, and seems best to answer the description of the ancients.

Woodward on Fossils.

To BALBU'CINATE. v. n. [from balbutio, Lat.] To stammer in speaking. Diet.

To BALBU'TIATE. v. n. The same with balbucinate. Diet.

BALCO'NY. † n. s. [balcon, Fr. balcone, Ital. Formerly written balcon in our language. Sax. balc, a beam.] A frame of iron, wood, or stone, before the window of a room.

Then pleasure came, who, liking not the fashion,

Began to make balconies, terraces,

Till she had weaken'd all by alteration.

Herbert.

Houses of two stories have, many of them, very large upper rooms, which have many double doors in the sides of them, like those in our balconies, to open and let in fresh air.

Terry's Voyage to East India, (1655.) p. 190.

To look upon a woman, that passeth by, veiled; or to look up, if any be at a window, or in a balcony, is the cause of death [in the East] unto many. M. Casanbon, of Credulity, &c. p. 291.

When dirty waters from balconies drop,

And dextrous damsels twist the sprinkling mop.

Gay.

BALD. † adj. [bal, Welsh. Written balled or ballid by Chaucer and Wicliffe, which seems to be the etymology. See BALL. "His head was balled, and shone as any glass," Prol. C. T. 198. i. e. smooth as a ball. Wicliffe uses ballid for despoiled of hair, Isaiah iii. 17. 1 Cor. xi. 6.]

1. Wanting hair; despoiled of hair by time or sickness.

Neither shall men make themselves bald for them. Jeremiah.

I find it remarked by Marchetti, that the cause of baldness in men is the dryness of the brain, and its shrinking from the skull; he having observed, that in bald persons, under the bald part, there was a vacuity between the skull and the brain. Ray.

He should imitate Caesar, who, because his head was bald, covered that defect with laurels. Addison.

2. Without natural covering.

Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,

And high top bald with dry antiquity.

Shakspeare.

3. Without the usual covering.

He is set at the upper end o' the table; but they stand bald before him. Shakspeare.

4. Unadorned; inelegant. [old Fr. bauide, Rom. de R.]

Hobbes, in the preface to his own bald translation of the Ilias, begins the praise of Homer where he should have ended it. Dryden, Fab., Pref.

And that, though labour'd, line must bald appear,
That brings ungrateful musick to the ear. Creech.

5. Mean; naked; without dignity; without value; bare.

What should the people flo with these bald tribunes?

On whom depending, their obedience fails
To the greater bench. Shakspeare.

6. Bald was used by the northern nations, to signify the same as audax, bold; and is still in use. So Baldwin, and by inversion Winbald, is bold conqueror; Ethelbald, nobly bold; Eadbald, happily bold; which are of the same import as Thrascas, Thrasymachus, and Thrasymbulus, &c. Gibson.

BA'LDACHIN.† n. s. [baldachino, Ital. baldecchino, old Fr. drap de fil d'or, Lacombe.] A piece of architecture, in form of a canopy, supported with columns, and serving as a covering to an altar. It properly signifies a rich silk, (Du Cange,) and was a canopy carried over the host. Builder's Dict.

No baldachino, no cloth of state, was there; the king being absent. Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 185.

BA'LDERDASH.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson proposes the Sax. balð, bold, and dash; Dr. Jamieson suggests the Icelandick buldur, the prating of fools. But the etymology is of laughable origin perhaps. Balderdash, in its primary sense, probably signified (as Mr. Malone has also observed) the froth or foam made by barbers in dashing their balls backwards and forwards in hot water; it afterwards seemed to denote a mixture of liquours.] Any thing jumbled together without judgement; a rude mixture; a confused, light, or frothy discourse.

They would no more live under the yoke of the sea, or have their heads washed with his bubbly spume or barbers balderdash. Nash, Lenten Stuff, 1599. p. 8.

It is against my freehold, my inheritance,
To drink such balderdash, or bonny-clabber!

B. Jonson, New Inn, i. 2.
Mine is such a drench of balderdash.

Beaumont and Fl. Woman's Prize.

To BA'LDERDASH.† v. a. [from the noun.] To mix or adulterate any liquor.

When monarchy began to bleed,
And treason had a fine new name;
When Thames was balderdash'd with Tweed,
And pulpits did like beacons flame. The Geneva Ballad, 1674.

BA'LDLY. adv. [from bald.] Nakedly; meanly; inelegantly.

BA'LDMONY. n. s. The same with GENTIAN.

BA'LDNESS.† n. s. [from bald.]

1. The want of hair.

The baldness, thinness, and deformity of their hair, is usually supplied by borders and combings.

Hp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 43.

2. The loss of hair.

Which happen'd on the skin to light,
And thus corrupting to a wound,
Spread grossy and baldness round. Swift.

3. Meanness of writing; inelegance.

Borde has all the baldness of allusion, and barbarity of versification, belonging to Skelton, without his strokes of satire and severity. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 74.

BA'LDPATE.* n. s. [from bald and pate.] A head, shorn of hair; applied to a friar.

Come hither, goodman baldpate; do you know me?

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

BA'LDPATE.* } adj. Shorn of hair; without natural BA'LDPATED. } covering.

Nor with Dubartus bridle up the floods,
Nor perriwig with snow the baldpate woods.

Soame and Dryden, Art of Poetry.

You baldpated, lying rascal, you must be hooded, must you?
Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

BA'LDRIK.† n. s. [Of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. It was formerly written bandrick, and signified a belt of leather, from the old Fr. bandrier, derived from the verb baudroyer, to dress skins. V. Lacombe. low Lat. bandrañus, Lat. balteus.]

1. A girdle. By some dictionaries it is explained a bracelet; but I have not found it in that sense.

Athwart his breast a baldrick have he ware,
That shin'd like twinkling stars, with stones most precious rare.
Spenser, F. Q.

A radiant baldrick o'er his shoulders ty'd,
Sustain'd the sword that glitter'd at his side. Pope.

2. The zodiack.

That like the twins of Jove, they seem'd in sight,
Which deck the baldrick of the heavens bright. Spenser.

BALE.† n. s. [bale, Fr.]

1. A bundle or parcel of goods packed up for carriage.

One hired an ass in the dog-days, to carry certain bales of goods to such a town. L'Estrange.

It is part of the bales in which bohea tea was brought over from China. Woodward.

2. A pair of dice. Obsolete.

It is a false die of the same bale, but not the same cut.

Overbury, Charact. sign. Q. 2.

For exercise of arms a bale of dice. B. Jonson, New Inn.

To BALE. v. n. [emballer, Fr. imballare, Ital.] To make up into a bale.

To BALE. v. a. A word used by the sailors, who bid bale out the water; that is, lave it out, by way of distinction from pumping. Skinner. I believe from bailler, Fr. to deliver from hand to hand.

BALE.† n. s. [bæl, Sax. bale, Dan. bal, bol, Icelandick, Cimbr. baul.] Misery; calamity; mischief; poison, its genuine meaning.

She look'd about, and seeing one in mail,
Armed to point, sought back to turn again;
For light she hated as the deadly bale. Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 14.

BA'LEFUL.† adj. [Sax. bealofull.]

1. Full of misery; full of grief; sorrowful; sad; woful.

Ah! luckless babe, born under cruel star,
And in dead parents baleful ashes bred. Spenser, F. Q.

But when I feel the bitter baleful smart,
Which her fair eyes unware do work in me,
I think that I a new Pandora see. Spenser.

Round he throws his baleful eyes,
That witness'd huge affliction and dismay,
Mix'd with obdurate pride and stedfast hate. Milton.

2. Full of mischief; destructive; poisonous. See BALE.

But when he saw his threat'ning was but vain,
He turn'd about, and search'd his baleful books again. Spenser, F. Q.

Boiling choler chokes,
By sight of these, our baleful enemies. Shakspeare.

Unseen, unfelt, the fiery serpent skims,
Betwixt her linen and her naked limbs;
His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides. Dryden.

Happy lerne, whose most wholesome air
Poison'd venom'd spiders, and forbids
The baleful toad, and vipers from her shore. Phillips.

BA'LEFULLY. adv. [from baleful.] Sorrowfully; mischievously.

BA'LISTER. * n. s. [Lat. balista, Fr. baleste.] A cross-bow. See ARCUBALIST.

A spindle full of raw thread, to make a false string for the king's balister or cross-bow. Blount's Tenures, p. 92.

BALK. † n. s. [balk, Dutch and Germ. balc, Sax.]

A great beam, such as is used in building; a rafter over an outhouse or barn.

BALK. † n. s. [derived by Skinner from valicare, Ital. to pass over. It is the Welsh bale, the Sax. balc, and the Su. Goth. balk.]

1. A ridge of land left unploughed between the furrows, or at the end of the field; land over which the plough slips without turning it up: figuratively, any thing over-passed untouched.

Doles and mark, which of ancient time were laid for the division of meres and balks in the fields, to bring the owners to their right. Homilies, ii. 235.

The mad steale about doth fiercely fly,
Not sparing wight, ne leaving any balk;
But making way for death at large to walke.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 16.

2. A disappointment.

There cannot be a greater balk to the tempter, nor a more effectual defeat to all his temptations. South, Serm. vi. 311.

To BALK. † v. a. [See the noun.]

1. To disappoint; to frustrate; to elude.

Another thing in the grammar schools I see no use of, unless it be to balk young lads in learning languages. Locke.

Every one has a desire to keep up the vigour of his faculties, and not to balk his understanding by what is too hard for it.

Locke.

But one may balk this good intent,
And take things otherwise than meant.

Prior.

The prices must have been high; for a people so rich would not balk their fancy.

Arbuthnot.

Balk'd of his prey, the yelling monster flies,
And fills the city with his hideous cries

Pope.

Is there a variance? enter but his door,

Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more.

Pope.

2. To miss any thing; to leave untouched.

Who can believe, that we could so balk the substance, and name that only, which in comparison is but an appendix thereto.

Mede, Apostasy of the Latter Times, P. 2.

He [St. John] balked not one of Herod's sins, but reformed him of all the evils that he had done.

Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 116.

They were somewhat perplexed by spying the French ambassador, with the king's and other attending him; which made them balk the beaten road, and teach posthackneys to leap hedges.

Sir H. Wotton, Rem. P. 213.

By grisly Pluto he doth swear,

He rent his clothes, and tore his hair;

And as he runneth here and there,

An acorn cup he greeteth;

Which soon he taketh by the stalk,

About his head he lets it walk,

Nor doth he any creature balk,

But lays on all he meeteth.

Drayton, Nimphol.

3. To omit, or refuse any thing.

This was looked for at your hand, and this was balkt.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

I shall balk this theme.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 213.

4. To heap, as on a ridge. This, or something like this, seems to be intended here.

Ten thousand bold Scots, three and twenty knights,

Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter see

On Holmedon's plains. Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. 1.

To BALK. * v. n. [Twice used by Spenser, with arbitrary meanings.]

1. To turn aside.

[When as the ape him heard so much to talke
Of labour, that did from his liking balk,
He would have slipt the collar handsomely.

Mother Hubbard's Tale, v. 268.

2. To deal in cross purposes; to speak differently from the intention.

But to occasion him to further talke,
To feed her humor with his pleasing style,
Her list in stryfull termes with him to balk,
And thus replyde.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. ii. 12.

BA'LKERS. n. s. [In fishery.] Men who stand on a cliff, or high place on the shore, and give a sign to the men in the fishing-boats, which way the passage or shoal of herrings is.

Cowet.

The pilchards are pursued by a bigger fish, called a plasher, who leapeth above water, and bewrayeth them to the balker.

Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

BALL. n. s. [bol, Dan. bol, Dutch.]

Bal, diminutively Belin, the sun, or Apollo of the Celts, was called by the ancient Gauls, Ab'llio. Whatever was round, and in particular the head, was called by the ancients either Bâl, or Bol, and likewise Bol and Bill. Among the modern Persians, the head is called Pole; and the Flemings still call the head Boile. Πέλος is the head or poll, and πολεῖν, is to turn. * Βίλος likewise signifies a round ball, whence bowel, and bell, and ball, which the Welsh term bêl. By the Scotch also the head is named bhêl; whence the English bill is derived, signifying the beak of a bird. Figuratively, the Phrygians and Thuriens, by βαλλων understood a king. Hence also, in the Syriack dialects, βαλλ, βέλλ, and likewise βέλλ, signifies lord, and by this name also the sun; and, in some dialects, * Ἥλ and * Ἥλ, whence * Ἥλος, and * Ἥλιος, and * Ἥλιος, and also in the Celtic diminutive way of expression, * Ἥλιος, * Ἥλιος, and * Ἥλιος, signified the sun; and * Ἥλιος, * Ἥλιος, and * Ἥλιος, the moon. Among the Teutonicks, hol and heil have the same meaning; whence the adjective helig, or heilig, is derived, and signifies divine or holy; and the aspiration being changed into s, the Romans form their Sol. Baxter.

1. Any thing made in a round form, or approaching to round.

Worms with many feet, round themselves into balls under logs of timber, but not in the timber.

Bacon.

Nor arms they wear, nor swords and bucklers wield,

But whirl from leathern strings huge balls of lead.

Dryden.

Like a ball of snow tumbling down a hill, he gathered strength as he passed.

Howel.

Still unripen'd in the dewy mines,
Within the ball a trembling water shines,

That through the crystal darts.

Addison.

Such of those corpuscles as happened to combine into one mass, formed the metallick and mineral balls or nodules, which we find.

Woodward.

2. A round thing to play with, either with the hand or foot, or a racket.

Balls to the stars, and thralls to fortune's reign,
Turn'd from themselves, infected with their cage,
Where death is fear'd, and life is held with pain.

Sidney.

Those I have seen play at ball, grow extremely earnest who should have the ball.

Sidney.

3. A small round thing, with some particular mark, by which votes are given, or lots cast.

Let lots decide it.

For ev'ry number'd captive put a ball
Into an urn; three only black be there,
The rest all white, are safe.

Dryden.

- Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rows;
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden.
4. A globe; as, the ball of the earth.
Julius and Antony, those lords of all,
Low at her feet present the conquer'd ball. Granville.
Ye gods, what justice rules the ball?
Freedom and arts together fall. Pope.
5. A globe borne as an ensign of sovereignty.
Hear the tragedy of a young man, that by right ought to hold the ball of a kingdom; but, by fortune, is made himself a ball, tossed from misery to misery, from place to place. Bacon.
6. Any part of the body that approaches to roundness; as the lower and swelling part of the thumb, the apple of the eye.
Be subject to no sight but mine; invisible
To every eye ball else. Shakspeare.
To make a stern countenance, let your brow bend so, that it may almost touch the ball of the eye. Peacocks.
7. The skin spread over a hollow piece of wood, stuffed with hair or wool, which the printers dip in ink, to spread it on the letters.
BALL. n. s. [bal, Fr. from ballare, low Lat. from βαλλίζω, to dance.] An entertainment of dancing, at which the preparations are made at the expence of some particular person.
If golden sconces hang not on the walls,
To light the costly suppers and the balls. Dryden.
He would make no extraordinary figure at a ball; but I can assure the ladies, for their consolation, that he has writ better verses on the sex than any man. Swift.
- BA'LLAD. n. s. [balade, Fr.] A song.
Ballad once signified a solemn and sacred song, as well as trivial, when Solomon's Song was called the ballad of ballads; but now it is applied to nothing but trifling verse. Watts.
As I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, may a cup of sack be my poison. Shakspeare.
Like the sweet ballad, this amusing lay
Too long detains the lover on his way. Gay.
- To BA'LLAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To make or sing ballads.
Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets, and scall'd rhimers
Ballad us out o' tune. Shakspeare.
- To BA'LLAD.* v. n. [from the noun.] To write ballads.
A whining ballading lover. B. Jonson, Masques.
These envious libellers ballad against them. Donne, Par. 1.
- BA'LLAD-MAKER.* n. s. [from ballad and make.] He who writes a ballad.
Such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour, that ballad-makers cannot be able to express it. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
- BA'LLAD-MONGER.* n. s. [from ballad and monger.] A trader in ballads; a singer of ballads.
I had rather be a kitten, and cry—mew,
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. p. 1.
- BA'LLAD-SINGER. n. s. [from ballad and sing.] One whose employment is to sing ballads in the streets.
No sooner 'gan he raise his tuneful song,
But lads and lasses round about him throng.
Not ballad-singer, plac'd above the crowd;
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet and loud. Gay.
- BA'LLAD-STYLE.* n. s. [from ballad and style.] The air or manner of a ballad.
The familiarity which doctor Milles assigns to the ballad-style. Warton, Rowley Eng. p. 46.
- BA'LLAD-TUNE.* n. s. [from ballad and tune.] The tune of a ballad.
By each of the royal [French] family, and the principal nobility of the court, a psalm [of Clement Marot's version] was

- choson, and fitted to the ballad-tune which each liked best. Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 163.
- BA'LLAD-WRITER.* n. s. [from ballad and write.] A composer of ballads.
Thomas Deloney, a famous ballad-writer of these times, mentioned by Kemp, one of the original actors in Shakspeare's plays. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 430.
- BA'LLADER.* n. s. [old Fr. baladeur.] A maker or singer of ballads.
Poor verbal quip, outworn by serving-men, tapsters, and milk-maids; even laid aside by balladers. Oceburg's Character, sign. G. 4.
- BA'LLADRY.* n. s. [from ballad.] The subject or style of ballads.
Stay, till the abortive and extemporal din
Of balladry were understood a sin. B. Jonson, Masques.
To see this butterfly,
This windy bubble, task my balladry! Marston's Sc. of Vill. ii. 6.
To bring the gravity and seriousness of that sort of musick [Italian] into vogue and reputation among our countrymen, whose humour it is time now should begin to lose the levity and balladry of our neighbours. Purcell's Anthems, Pref.
- To BA'LLARAG.* v. a. A ludicrous and low word, purporting to overpower by word or act; to bully; to threaten. It is still used in the North, and pronounced bullyrag.
On Minden's plains, ye meek Mounseers!
Remember Kingsley's grenadiers.
You vainly thought to ballarag us
With your fine squadron off Cape Lagos. Warton, Newsman's Verses.
- BA'LLAST. n. s. [ballaste, Dutch.]
1. Something put at the bottom of the ship to keep it steady to the center of gravity.
There must be middle counsellors to keep things steady; for, without that ballast, the ship will roll too much. Bacon.
As for the ascent of a submarine vessel, this may be easily contrived, if there be some great weight at the bottom of the ship, being part of its ballast; which, by some cord within, may be loosened from it. Wilkins.
As when empty barks or billows float,
With sandy ballast sailors trim the boat;
So bees bear gravel stones, whose poisoning weight
Steers through the whistling winds their steady flight. Dryden.
  2. That which is used to make any thing steady.
Those men have not ballast enough of humility and fear. Hammond's Sermons, p. 612.
Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.
- To BA'LLAST.† v. a. [from the noun. Originally ballass, and the participle ballasted, i. e. ballassed.]
1. To put weight at the bottom of a ship, in order to keep her steady.
If this be so ballasted, as to be of equal weight with the like magnitude of water, it will be moveable. Watts.
  2. To keep any thing steady.
That man that would be heaving sail in these deeps of scripture, had need be well ballast and well tackled. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.
'Tis Charity must ballast the heart. Hammond's Sermon, p. 611.
Whilst thus to ballast love, I thought,
And so more steadily I have gone,
I saw, I had love's pinnacle overfraught. Donne.
Now you have given me virtue for my guide,
And with true honour ballasted my pride. Dryden.
- BA'LLATED.* part. adj. [from ballare, Ital. whence ballata.] Sung in a ballad.
I make but repetition
Of what is ordinary and Ryalto talk,
And ballated, and would be plaid on the stage
But that vice many times finds such loud friends,
That preachers are charm'd silent. Webster's Vittoria Corombona.

BA'LLATRY.* n. s. [Ital. ballata, from ballare.] A jig; a song.

The ballatry and the gamut of every municipal fiddler.

Milton, Areopagitica.

BALLE.T.† n. s. [ballette, Fr.] A dance in which some history is represented.

The title of ballet was [also] often applied to poems of considerable length.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 423.

BA'LLIARDS.† n. s. [from ball and yard, or stick to push it with. A play at which a ball is driven by the end of a stick; now corruptly called billiards, Dr. Johnson says. But billiards is not a corruption, being the Fr. billard, from bille, the term for the ball used in playing.]

With dice, with cards, with balliards, far unfit,

With shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit.

Spenser.

BA'LLISTER. See BALUSTER.

BALLON.† n. s. [ballon, Fr.]

BALLO'ON.

1. A large round short-necked vessel used in chymistry.

2. [In architecture.] A ball or globe placed on the top of a pillar.

3. [In fireworks.] A ball of pasteboard, stuffed with combustible matter, which, when fired, mounts to a considerable height in the air, and then bursts into bright sparks of fire, resembling stars.

4. [In aerology.] A hollow vessel of silk, which is filled with inflammable air, and ascends with considerable weight annexed to it into the atmosphere. It is of recent usage; but there have not been wanting, of late years, several navigators in these frail barks. By the following citation it looks as if the existence of such a machine had been known 150 years since.

Like balloones full of wind, the more they are pressed down, the higher they rise.

Hewyt's Sermons, (1658.) p. 115.

5. A game at play; the wind-ball, as Minshew calls it, to play withal.

Foot-ball, balloon, quintance, &c. which are the common recreations of the country folks. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 266.

BA'LLOT. n. s. [ballote, Fr.]

1. A little ball or ticket used in giving votes, being put privately into a box or urn.

2. The act of voting by ballot.

To BA'LLOT. v. n. [balloter, Fr.] To choose by ballot, that is, by putting little balls or tickets, with particular marks, privately in a box; by counting which it is known what is the result of the poll, without any discovery by whom each vote was given.

None of the competitors arriving to a sufficient number of balls, they fell to ballot some others.

Wotton, Rem. p. 262.

Giving their votes by balloting, they lie under no awe. Swift.

BALLOTATION. n. s. [from ballot.] The act of voting by ballot.

The election of the duke of Venice is one of the most intricate and curious forms in the world, consisting of ten several ballotations.

Wotton, Rem. p. 260.

BALM. n. s. [baume, Fr. balsamum, Lat.]

1. The sap or juice of a shrub, remarkably odoriferous.

Balm trickles through the bleeding veins
Of happy shrubs, in Idumean plains.

Dryden.

2. Any valuable or fragrant ointment.

Thy place is filled, thy sceptre wrung from Thy balm wash'd off wherewith thou wast

B A L

31 Any thing that soothes or mitigates pain.

You were conducted to a gentle bath,

And balms apply'd to you.

Shakespeare.

Dearest and best.

Shakespeare.

A tender smile, our sorrow's only balm.

Young.

BALM. } n. s. [melissa, Lat.] The name of a

BALM Mint. } plant.

The species are, 1. Garden balm. 2. Garden balm, with yellow variegated flowers. 3. Stinking Roman balm, with softer hairy leaves.

Miller

BALM of Gilead.

1. The juice drawn from the balsam tree, by making incisions in its bark. Its colour is first white, soon after green; but when it comes to be old, it is of the colour of honey. The smell of it is agreeable, and very penetrating; the taste of it bitter, sharp and astringent. As little issues from the plant by incision, the balm sold by the merchants, is made of the wood and green branches of the tree, distilled by fire, which is generally adulterated with turpentine.

Calnet.

It seems to me, that the zori of Gilead, which we render in our bible by the word balm, was not the same with the balsam of Mecca, but only a better sort of turpentine, then in use for the cure of wounds and other diseases.

Prudeau, Connections.

2. A plant remarkable for the strong balsamick scent, which its leaves emit, upon being bruised; whence some have supposed, erroneously, that the balm of Gilead was taken from this plant.

Miller.

To BALM, v. a. [from balm.]

1. To anoint with balm; or with any thing medicinal.

Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood.

Shakespeare.

2. To soothe; to mitigate; to assuage.

Opprest nature sleeps:

This rest might yet have balm'd thy senses.

Shakespeare.

BA'LMY. adj. [from balm.]

1. Having the qualities of balm.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid,
In balmy sweat; which with his beams the sun
Soon dry'd.

Milton.

2. Producing balm.

Let India boast her groves, nor envy we
The weeping amber, and the balmy tree.

Pope.

3. Soothing; soft; mild.

Come, Desdemona, 'tis the soldiers' life
To have their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife.
Such visions hourly pass before my sight,
Which from my eyes their balmy slumbers fright.

Shakespeare.

Dryden.

4. Fragrant; odoriferous.

Those rich perfumes which, from the happy shore,
The winds upon their balmy wings convey'd,
Whose guilty sweetness first the world betray'd.

Dryden.

First Eurus to the rising morn is sent,
The regions of the balmy continent.

Dryden.

5. Mitigating; assuasive.

Oh balmy breath, that doth almost persuade Justice to break her word!

Shakespeare.

BA'LINEAL.* adj. [from balneum, Lat.] Belonging to a bath.

The farmenting gentle temper of generative heat that goes to the production of the said minerals, doth impart and actually communicate this balneal virtue and medicinal heat to these waters.

Howell's Letters, i. vi. 35.

BA'LINEARY. n. s. [balnearium, Lat.] A bathing-room.

The balnearies, and bathing-places, he exposeth unto the summer setting.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

BALNEATION. n. s. [from balneum, Lat. a bath.] The act of bathing.

As the head may be disturbed by the skin, it may the way be relieved, as is observable in balneations, and stomata-tions of that part. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BA'LINEATORY. adj. [balnearius, Lat.] Belonging to a bath or stove.

BALNEUM.* n. s. [Lat.] A word often used in chymistry; generally meaning a vessel filled with water, sand, or the like, in which another vessel, called the cucurbite, containing any matter to be distilled, and requiring a more gentle heat than the naked fire, is placed. See BATH and CUCURBITE.

I am unwilling to affront this atheist so much, as to suppose him to believe, that the first organical body might possibly be effected in some fluid portion of matter, while its heterogeneous parts were jumbled and confounded together by a storm, or hurricane, or earthquake. To be sure, he will rather have the primitive man to be produced by a long process in a kind of digesting balneum, where all the heavier lees may have time to subside, and a due equilibrium be maintained, not disturbed by any such rude and violent shocks, that would ruffle and break all the little stamina of the embryo, if it were a making before. Bentley, Serm. p. 133.

BA'LOTADE. n. s. The leap of an horse, so that when his fore-feet are in the air, he shews nothing but the shoes of his hinder-feet, without yerking out. A balotade differs from a capriole; for when a horse works at caprioles, he yerks out his hinder legs with all his force. Furrier's Dict.

BA'LSAM. n. s. [balsamum, Lat.] Ointment; unguent; an unctuous application thicker than oil, and softer than salve.

Christ's blood our balsam; if that cure us here, Him, when our judge, we shall not find severe. Denham.

BA'LSAM Appl. [momordica, Lat.] An annual Indian plant.

BA'LSAM Tree.

This is a shrub which scarce grows taller than the pomegranate tree; the blossoms are like small stars, very fragrant; whence spring out little pointed pods, inclosing a fruit like an almond, called carpobalsamum, as the wood is called xylobalsamum, and the juice opobalsamum. Calmet.

BALSAMA'TION.* n. s. [from balsam.] That which has the qualities of balsam.

Mr. Hooke produced a paper, which he had received from Mr. Haak, being an account of the several things affirmed to be performed by Dr. Elsholt of Berlin; which paper was read. It contained an account of, 1. His universal balsamation. 2. His great vine and wine cure in five particulars, &c.

Hist. of the Royal Society, iv. 109.

BALSA'MICAL.† } adj. [from balsam, and Fr. balsa-
BALSA'MICK. } mique.] Having the qualities of balsam; unctuous; mitigating; soft; mild; oily.

If there be a wound in my leg, the vital energy of my soul thrusts out the balsamical humour of my blood to heal it. Hale.

The aliment of such as have fresh wounds ought to be such as keeps the humours from putrefaction, and renders them oily and balsamick. Arbuthnot.

BALSA'MICK.* n. s. That which has the qualities of balsam.

It is — good against too great a fluidity as a balsamick, and good against viscidty as a soap. Ep. Berkeley's Ser. § 60.

BA'LSAM-SWEATING.* part. adj. [from balsam and sweat.] That which yields balsam.

There is no need at all,
That the balsam-sweating bough
So coyly should let fall
Her med'cinable tears.

BA'LUSTER.† n. s. [According to Du Cange, from balastrum, low Lat. a bathing place, Dr. Johnson says. But it is rather from balestrieria, Ital. a spike-hole, or loop-hole, to shoot out at; the intervals between balusters being similar to loop-holes. Mr. Malone agrees with me in this etymology. Baluster is sometimes corruptly written banister.] A small column or pilaster from an inch and three quarters to four inches square or diameter. Their dimensions and forms are various; they are frequently adorned with mouldings; they are placed with rails on stairs, and in the fronts of galleries in churches.

This should first have been planched over, and railed about with balusters. Carew.

BA'LUSTERED.* part. adj. [from baluster.] Having balusters.

Here is a vista, there the doors unfold,
Balconies here are balustred with gold.

Sir W. Soame's and Dryden's Art of Poetry.

There is a black marble ballastred [balustred] over his body.

A. Wood, Fasti Oxon, i. 240.

BA'LUSTRATE.† n. s. [from baluster.] An assemblage of one or more rows of little turned pillars, called balusters, fixed upon a terras, or the top of a building, for separating one part from another.

The terraces and balustrades, built along the river, are now overgrown with roses. Swinburne's Trav. through Spain, L. 38.

BAM, BEAM, being initials in the name of any place, usually imply it to have been woody; from the Saxon beam, which we use in the same sense to this day. Gibson.

BA'MBOO.† n. s. An Indian plant of the reed kind. It has several shoots, much larger than our ordinary reeds, which are knotty, and separated from space to space by joints. The bamboo is much larger than the sugar-cane.

They raise their houses upon arches or posts of bamboos that be large reeds. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 360.

To BAMBOO'ZLE.† v. a. [a cant word not used in pure or in grave writings, from the low word bam, a cheat, Canting Dict.] To deceive; to impose upon; to confound.

After Nick had bamboozled about the money, John called for counters. Arbuthnot.

All the people upon earth, excepting those two or three worthy gentlemen, are imposed upon, cheated, bubbled, abused, bamboozled! Addison, Drummer, i. 1.

BAMBOO'ZLER. n. s. [from bamboozle.] A tricking fellow; a cheat.

There are a set of fellows they call banterers and bamboozlers, that play such tricks. Arbuthnot.

BAN. n. s. [ban, Teut. a publick proclamation, as of proscription, interdiction, excommunication, publick sale.]

1. Publick notice given of any thing, whereby any thing is publickly commanded or forbidden. This word we use especially in the publishing matrimonial contracts in the church, before marriage, to the end that if any man can say against the intention of the parties, either in respect of kindred or otherwise, they may take their exception in time. And, in the canon law, banna sunt proclamationes sponsi & sponse in ecclesiis fieri solite. Cowel.

I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord.
And I her husband contradict your bans.
To draw her neck into the bans.

Shakespeare, Hudibras.

2. A curse; excommunication.

B A N

Thou mixture rank of midnight weeds collected,
With Hecate's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected. Hamlet.
A great oversight it was of St. Peter, that he did not accurse Nero, whereby the pope might have got all; yet what need of such a ban, since Mar Vincent could tell Atabalipa, that kingdoms were the pope's. Raleigh.

3. Interdiction.

Bold deed to eye
The sacred fruit, sacred to abstinence,
Much more to taste it, under ban to touch. Milton.

4. Ban of the Empire; a publick censure by which the privileges of any German prince are suspended.

He proceeded so far by treaty, that he was proffered to have the imperial ban taken off Altapinus, upon submission. Hovel.

To BAN.† v. a. [bannen, Dut. to curse, abannan, Sax. to denounce.] To curse; to execrate.

Shall we think that it bawth the work which they leave behind them, or taketh away the use thereof? Hooker.

It is uncertain whether this word, in the foregoing sense, is to be deduced from ban, to curse, or banc, to poison.

In thy closet pent up, rue my shame
And ban our enemies, both mine and thine. Shakspeare.

Before these Moors went a Numidian priest, bellowing out charms, and casting scrowls of paper on each side, wherein he cursed and banned the Christian. Kneller.

To BAN.* v. n. To curse.

With that all mad and furious he grew,
Like a fell mastiff through curaging heat,
And curst, and baw'd, and blasphemies forth threw
Against his gods, and fire to them did threat
Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 12.

BANA'NA Tree. A species of plantain.

BAND.† n. s. [bende, Dutch; band, Sax. bandi, Goth. ban, Celt. a tye.]

1. A tye; a bandage; that by which one thing is joined to another.

You shall find the band, that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their amity. Shakspeare.

2. A chain by which any animal is kept in restraint.

This is now usually spelt, less properly, bond.
So wild a beast, so tame ytaught to be,
And buxom to his bands, is joy to see.

Spenser, M. Hubberd's Tale.

Since you deny him entrance, he demands
His wife, whom cruelly you hold in bands. Dryden.

3. Any means of union or connexion between persons.

Here's eight that must take hands,
To join in Hymen's bands. Shakspeare.

4. Something worn about the neck; a neckcloth. It is now restrained to what is worn by clergymen, lawyers, and students in colleges.

For his mind I do not care,
That's a toy that I could spare:
Let his title be but great,
His cloaths rich, and band sit neat. B. Jonson.

Little plain bands, which they liked not, because the Jesuits wore such. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 119.

He took his lodging at the mansion-house of a tailor's widow, who washes and can clear-starch his bands. Addison.

5. Any thing bound round another.

In old statues of stone in cellars, the feet of them being bound with leaden bands, it appeared that the lead did swell, Bacon.

6. In architecture. Any flat low member or moulding, called also fascia, face, or plinth.

7. A company of soldiers; as, the Train bands. [Ital. banda, Fr. bande.]

And, good my lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot. Shakspeare.

8. A company of persons joined together in any common design, or profession; as a band of musick.

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers. Shakspeare.

B A N

The queen in white array before her band,
Saluting took her rival by the hand; Dryden.
On a sudden, methought this select band sprang forward, with a resolution to climb the ascent, and follow the call of that heavenly musick. Taller.

Straight the three bands prepare in arms to join,
Each band the number of the sacred Nine. Pope.

To BAND.† v. a. [from band.]

1. To unite together into one body or troop.

The bishop, and the duke of Glo'ster's men,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble stones,
And banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do pelt at one another's pates. Shakspeare.

Some of the boys banded themselves as for the major, and others for the king, who, after six days skirmishing, at last made a composition, and departed. Carew.

They to live exempt
From Heav'n's high jurisdiction, in new league
Banded against his throne. Milton

2. To bind over with a band.

And by his mother stood an infant lover,
With wings unledg'd, his eyes were banded over. Dryden.

3. [In heraldry.] Any thing tied round with a band of a different colour from the charge, is said to be banded; as, a sheaf of arrows argent, banded azure.

4. To drive away; to banish. [Ital. bandire.]

Sweet love such lewdness bands from his fair company.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. ii. 41.

To BAND.* v. n. To associate; to unite.

With them great Ashur also bands,
And doth confirm the knot. Milton, Psalm lxxxiii. 29.

BANDS of a Saddle, are two pieces of iron nailed upon the bows of the saddle, to hold the bows in the right situation.

BA'NDAGE. n. s. [bandage, Fr.]

1. Something bound over another.

Zeal too had a place among the rest, with a bandage over her eyes; though one would not have expected to have seen her represented in snow. Addison.

Cords were fastened by hooks to my bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Gulstrev.

2. It is used, in surgery, for the fillet or roller wrapped over a wounded member; and, sometimes, for the act or practice of applying bandages.

BA'NDBOX. n. s. [from band and box.] A slight box used for bands and other things of small weight.

My friends are surprised to find two bandboxes among my books, till I let them see that they are lined with deep erudition. Addison.

With empty bandbox she delights to range,
And feigns a distant errand from the 'Change. Gay, Trivia.

BA'NDELET.† n. s. [bandelet, Fr. in architecture.] Any little band, flat moulding, or fillet.

The longer he wore the diadem, the bandelet still became more tight and irksome. Orrery on Swift, p. 89.

BA'NDER.* n. s. [from band.] He who unites with others.

Yorke and his banders proudly preased in
To challenge the crown by title of right,
Beginning with law and ending with might. Mir. for Mag. p. 352.

BA'NDIT.† n. s. [bandito, Ital.] A man outlawed.

No savage fierce, bandit, or mountaineer,
Will dare to soil her virgin purity. Milton.

Just as much fidelity might be expected from them in a common cause, as there is amongst a troop of honest murdering and ravishing bandits. Dryden, Post. to Hist. of the League.

No bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride,
No cavern'd hermit, rests self satisfy'd. Pope.

BANDI'TTO.† n. s. in the plural banditti. [bandito, Ital.] A man outlawed, or a robber.

A Roman sworder, and banditto slave, Murder'd sweet Tully. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

There we find the holy man in a great strait of affliction; wandering like an exile or bandito in the wilderness of Egedi. Abp. Sancroft, Sermon, p. 123.

Banditti saints disturbing distant lands.

Thomson, Liberty, P. 4.

Whether Mr. Bayle be sufficiently justified in calling this company a troop of banditti, that is, ruffians, robbers, and murderers, — the candid reader will judge for himself.

Delany, Life of David, i. 12.

BA'NDOG.† n. s. [from ban or band, and dog. The original of this word is very doubtful. Cuius, De Canibus Britannicis, derives it from band, that is, a dog chained up. Skinner inclines to deduce it from banda, a murderer. May it not, come from ban, a curse, as we say a curst cur, or rather from baund, swelled or large, a Danish word; from whence, in some counties they call a great nut a ban-nut. To these remarks of Dr. Johnson it must be added, that several of our old dictionaries render this word in Latin, canis catenarius; or catenatus, i. e. a dog chained; and that several of our elder authors write it band-dog. Huloet, in his Dictionary, gives it Jond-dog. It may be safely concluded, therefore, that bandog is merely a corruption of band-dog. See Minshew, Bullokar, Bp. Hall's Works, ii. 75, and Marston's Satires, Sat. 5.] A kind of large dog.

The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screech-owls cry, and bandogs howl.

Shakspeare, Henry VI.

Or privy, or pert, if any bin,
We have great bandogs will tear their skin. Spenser.

BA'NDLE.* n. s. An Irish measure of two feet in length. Cockeram.

BANDOLETTERS.† n. s. [bandouliers, Fr.] Small wooden cases covered with leather, each of them containing powder that is a sufficient charge for a musket.

There we see one, whose head within few years
Did bear a mitre, now wear bandoliers.

Jordan's Divinity and Morality in Poetry, 3. b.

BANDON.* n. s. [Fr.] Disposal; licence; full liberty for others to use, as Minshew renders it. Obsolete. See To ABANDON.

For both the wise folke and unwise
Were wholly to her bandon brought. Chaucer, Rom. R. v. 1163.

BANDO'RE.* n. s. [Gr. παυδρε.] A musical stringed instrument, resembling a lute, introduced into this country about the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign. Minshew calls it a recent invention, and describes it as consisting of three strings; which the Grecian παυδρεα also had. In the catalogue of King Charles the First's collections, one of these instruments occurs, p. 99.

BA'NDROL. n. s. [banderol, Fr.] A little flag or streamer; the little fringed silk flag that hangs on a trumpet.

BA'NDSTRING.* n. s. [from band and string.] The string or tassel appendant to the band or neckcloth, observable in old portraits.

The long hair, the loose cuffs, the large bandstrings, and other fine things, with which some of these so rigid yet very spruce and lady-like preachers think fit to gratify as their own persons, so their kind hearers and spectators.

Bp. Taylor's Artif. Handsomeness, p. 179.

BA'NDY.† n. s. [from bander, Fr. which may be from the low Lat. pandare, to make crooked.] A club turned round at bottom for striking a ball at play.

The shooting stars,
Which in an eye-bright evening seem'd to fall,
Are nothing but the balls they lose at bandy.

Brewer's Lingua, 2. 6.

To BA'NDY. v. a. [probably from bandy, the instrument with which they strike balls at play, which being crooked, is named from the term bander; as, bander un arc, to string or bend a bow.]

1. To beat to and fro, or from one to another.

They do cunningly, from one hand to another, bandy the service like a tennis ball. Spenser.

And like a ball bandy'd 'twixt pride and wit,
Rather than yield, both sides the prize will quit. Denham.

What, from the tropicks, can the earth repel?
What vigorous arm, what repercussive blow,
Bandies the mighty globe still to and fro? Blackmore.

2. To exchange; to give and take reciprocally.

Do you bandy looks with me, you rascal?
'Tis not in thee Shakspeare.

To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To bandy hasty words. Shakspeare.

3. To agitate; to toss about.

This hath been so bandied amongst us, that one can hardly miss books of this kind. Locke.

Ever since men have been united into governments, the endeavours after universal monarchy have been bandied among them. Swift.

Let not obvious and known truth, or some of the most plain and certain propositions, be bandied about in a disputation. Watts.

To BA'NDY. v. n. To contend, as at some game, in which each strives to drive the ball his own way.

No simple man that sees
This factious bandying of their favourites,
But that he doth pre-see some ill event. Shakspeare.

A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy:
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth. Shakspeare.

Could set up grandee against grandee,
To squander time away, and bandy;
Made lords and commoners lay sieges
To one another's privileges. Hudibras.

After all the bandying attempts of resolution, it is as much a question as ever. Glanville.

BA'NDYLEG. n. s. [from bander, Fr.] A crooked leg.

He tells aloud your greatest failing,
Nor makes a scruple to expose
Your bandyleg, or crooked nose. Swift.

BA'NDYLEGGED. adj. [from bandyleg.] Having crooked legs.

The Ethiopians had an one-eyed bandylegged prince; such a person would have made but an odd figure. Collier.

BANE.† n. s. [ban, Sax. a murderer, according to Dr. Johnson. But it may be referred to the Goth. bane, destruction, death.]

1. Poison.

Begone, or else let me. 'Tis bane to draw
The same air with thee. R. Jonson.

All good to me becomes
Bane; and in heav'n much worse would be my state. Milton.

They with speed,
Their course through thickest constellations held,
Spreading their bane. Milton.

Thus, am I doubly arm'd; my death and life,
My bane and antidote, are both before me;
This, in a moment, brings me to an end;
But that informs me I shall never die. Addison.

2. That which destroys; mischief; ruin.

Insolency must be repress, or it will be the bane of the Christian religion. Hooker.

I will not be afraid of death and lane,
Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane. Shakspeare.

Suffices that to me strength is my bane,
And proves the source of all my miseries. Milton.

So entertain'd those odorous sweets the fiend,
Who came their bane. Milton.

B A N

Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
The Scipios' worth, those thunderbolts of war,
The double bane of Carthage? Dryden.
False religion is, in its nature, the greatest bane and destruction to government in the world. South.

To BANISH† v. a. [from the noun.] To poison.

What if my house be troubled with a rat,
And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats
To have it ban'd? Shakespeare.

If a shepherd knew not which grass will bane, or which not, how is he fit to be a shepherd? Herbert's Country Parson, ch. 3.

BA'NEFUL. adj. [from bane and full.]

1. Poisonous.

For voyaging to learn the direful art,
To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
Observant of the gods, and sternly just,
His refus'd t' impart the baneful trust. Pope.

2. Destructive.

The silver eagle too is sent before,
Which I do hope will prove to them as baneful,
As thou conceiv'st it to the commonwealth. B. Jonson.
The nightly wolf is baneful to the fold,
Storms to the wheat, to buds the bitter cold. Dryden.

BA'NEFULNESS. n. s. [from baneful.] Poisonousness;
destructiveness.

BA'NEWORT. n. s. [from bane and wort.] A plant,
the same with deadly nightshade.

To BANG.† v. a. [Teut. bengelen; Goth. bang,
M. Goth. Luc. x. 30. banjos, strokes, blows; bang also, Iceland. To bang is a northern provincialism for beat.]

1. To beat; to thump; to cudgel: a low and familiar word.

One receiving from them some affronts, met with them handsomely, and banged them to good purpose. Howell.
He having got some iron out of the earth, put it into his servants' hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.
Formerly I was to be banged, because I was too strong, and now, because I am too weak to resist; I am to be brought down, when too rich, and oppressed, when too poor. Arbutnot.

2. To handle roughly; to treat with violence, in general.

The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts. Shakespeare.
You should accost her with jests fire-new from the mint;
you should have banged the youth into dumbness. Shakespeare.

BANG.† n. s. [from the verb.] A blow; a thump;
a stroke: a low word.

I am a bachelor.—That's to say, they are fools that marry;
you'll bear me a bang for that. Shakespeare.

Noble general,

If by our means they inherit aught but bangs,
The mercy of the main-yard light upon us. Beaum. and Fl. Doub. Marriage.

With many a stiff thwack, many a bang,
Hard crabtree and old iron rang. Hudibras.

But your store have hoarded in some bank. Denham.

There pardons and indulgences, and giving men a share in saints merits, out of the common bank and treasury of the church, which the pope has the sole custody of. South.

5. The company of persons concerned in managing a bank.

To BANK.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose with banks.

Amid the cliffs
And burning sands, that bank the shrubby vales. Thomson.

2. To lay up money in a bank.

Whether it be rightly remarked by some, that, as banking brings no treasure into the kingdom like trade, private wealth must sink as the bank riseth? Bp. Berkeley, Quercus.

BA'NK-BILL. n. s. [from bank and bill.] A note for money laid up in a bank, at the sight of which the money is paid.

Let three hundred pounds be paid her out of my ready money, or bank-bills. Swift.

BA'NK-STOCK.* n. s. [from bank and stock.] Property laid up in the bank.

The sick man cried out with a feeble voice, Pray, Doctor, how went bank-stock to-day at 'Change. Taller, No. 243.

BA'NKER.† n. s. [old Fr. banquier.] One that trafficks in money; one that keeps or manages a bank.

Whole droves of lenders croud the banker's doors, To call in money. Dryden.

By powerful charms of gold and silver led,
The Lombard bankers and the 'Change to waste. Dryden.

BA'NKRUPT. adj. [banqueroute, Fr. bancorotto, Ital.] In debt beyond the power of payment.

The king's grown bankrupt like a broken man. Shakespeare.
Sir, if you spend word for word with me,
I shall make your wit bankrupt. Shakespeare.

It is said that the money-changers of Italy had benches probably in the bourse or exchange, and that when any became insolvent his banco was rotto, his bench was broke. It was once written bankerout. Bankerout is a verb.

Dainty bits

Make rich the ribs, but bankerout the wits. Shakespeare.

BA'NKRUPT. n. s. A man in debt beyond the power of payment.

Perkin gathered together a power, neither in number nor in hardiness contemptible; but, in their fortunes, to be feared; being bankrupts, and many of them felons. Bacon.

It is with wicked men as with a bankrupt: when his creditors are loud and clamorous, and speak big, he giveth them many good words. Calamy.

In vain at court the bankrupt pleads his cause;
His thankless country leaves him to her laws. Pope.

To BA'NKRUPT.† v. a. To break; to disable one from satisfying his creditors.

He, according to his noble nature,
Will not be known to want, though he do want,
And will be bankrupted so much the sooner.

Bacon, and Fl. Laws of Candy.

We cast off the care of all future thrift, because we are already bankrupted. Hammond.

BA'NKRUPTCY. n. s. [from bankrupt.]

1. The state of a man broken, or bankrupt.
2. The act of declaring one's self bankrupt; as, he raised the clamours of his creditors by a sudden bankruptcy.

BA'NNER.† n. s. [baner, Sued. banniere, Fr. banair, Welsh.]

1. A flag; a standard; a military ensign.

Lift ye up a banner upon the high mountain. Isaiah, xiii. 2.
From France there comes a power, who already
Have secret spies in some of our best ports,
And are at point to shew their open banner. Shakespeare.
All in a moment through the gloom were seen
Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
With orient colours waving. Milton.

He said no more;
But left his sister and his queen behind,
And wav'd his royal banner in the wind. Dryden.

Fir'd with such motives, you do well to join
With Cato's foes, and follow Caesar's banners. Addison.

2. A streamer borne at the end of a lance, or elsewhere.

BANNERED.* part. adj. [from banner.] Displaying banners.

The gates wide open stood,
That with extended wings a banner'd host
Under spread ensigns marching, might pass through
With horse and chariots rank'd in loose array. Milton, P. L. iii. 385.

The banner'd bastion massy proof. Warton, Oss. xv.

BA'NNERET.† n. s. [from banner.]

1. A knight made in the field, with the ceremony of cutting off the point of his standard, and making it a banner. They are next to barons in dignity; and were anciently called by summons to parliament. Blount.

A gentleman told Henry, that Sir Richard Croftes, made banneret at Stoke, was a wise man; the king answered, he doubted not that, but marvelled how a fool could know. Camden.

2. A little banner, or streamer.

The scarfs and the bannerets about thee did manifoldly dis- suade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burden. Shakespeare, All's Well, ii. 3.

BA'NNEROL, more properly BANDEROL.† n. s. [from banderolle, Fr. Spenser writes it bannerall; and the old French is bannercolle.] A little flag or streamer.

King Oswald had a bannerol of gold and purple set over his tomb. Camden.

BA'NNIAN.† n. s.

1. A man's undress, or morning gown; such as is worn by the Bannians in the East Indies.
2. A native of India; now usually applied to a Gentoo servant employed in managing the commercial affairs of an Englishman.

The Bannians (as crafty, the proverb goes, as the devil,) by a moderate outside, and excess in superstition, make many simple men lose themselves, when by a heedless admiration of their plain dealing, or rather hypocrisy, they intangle themselves by crediting their sugred words in way of trade or compliment; baits pleasingly swallowed, when one considers their moral temperance. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 45.

Medals of Justinits and Justinianus, found in the custody of a bannyan, in the remote parts of India.

Sir T. Brown, Tracts, p. 210.

3. An Indian tree so called; the appellation of banian, i. e. sacred, having been given to the arched Indian fig-tree, as our old herbalists call it; from the various branches of which grow little sprigs downward, till they reach the ground, "take root," as Milton has observed, "and daughters grow
"About the mother tree, a pillar'd shade
"High over-arch'd, and echoing walks between."

P. L. ix. 1105.

BANNITION.* n. s. [from bannitus, Lat.] The act of expulsion.

You will take order, when he comes out of the castle, to send him out of the university too by bannition.

Abp. Laud to the Vice-Chan. at Oxford, Rem. ii. 191.

Send me up the form of a bannition. Ibid. p. 193.

BA'NNOCK.† n. s. [Irish, banna, a cake; Gael. bonnach.] A kind of oaten or pease-meal cake, mixed with water; and baked upon an iron plate over the fire; used in the northern counties, and in Scotland. In Lancashire, however, a jannock is the word for a loaf of oatmeal leavened.

BA'NQUET.† n. s. [banquet, Fr. banchetto, Ital. vanqueto, Span.] A feast; an entertainment of meat and drink.

If a fasting day come, he hath on that day a banquet to make. Hooker.

In his commendations I am fed;
It is a banquet to me.

Shakspeare.

You cannot have a perfect palace, except you have two sides; a side for the banquet, and a side for the household; the one for feasts and triumphs, and the other for dwelling. Bacon.

Shall the companions make a banquet of him? Shall they part him among the merchants? Job, xli. 6.

At that tasted fruit,
The sun, as from Thyestean banquet, turn'd
His course-intended.

Milton.

That dares prefer the toils of Hercules
To dalliance, banquets, and ignoble ease.

Dryden.

This word formerly meant an entertainment merely of sweetmeats, fruit, and cakes, like our modern deserts; and introduced at the end of dinner, Mr. Malone thinks. But the following citation from Bishop Hall, while it gives a curious picture of our ancient manners, places this attendant upon feasting as closing the epicurean labours of the day! The word was formerly written banquet; and Barret notices the "banquet after supper," Alv. 1580.

Oh! easy and pleasant way to glory! From our bed to our glass; from our glass to our board; from our dinner to our pipe; from our pipe to a visit; from a visit to a supper; from a supper to a play; from a play to a banquet; from a banquet to our bed! Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 327.

To BA'NQUET.† v. a. [old Fr. banquetter.] To treat any one with feasts.

Welcome his friends,
Visit his countrymen, and banquet them. Shakspeare.

They were banqueted by the way, and the nearer they approached, the more increased the nobility. Sir J. Maynard.

To BA'NQUET.† v. n.

1. To feast; to fare daintily.

The mind shall banquet, though the body pine:
Fat paunches make lean pates, and dainty bits
Make rich the ribs, but bankrupt the wits. Shakspeare.

So long as his innocence is his repast, he feasts and banquet upon bread and water. South.

I purpos'd to unbend the evening hours,
And banquet private in the women's bow'r. Prior.

2. To give a feast to others.

If you know
That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,
And after scandal them; or if you know
That I profess myself in banqueting
To all the rout; then hold me dangerous.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs. i. 2.

BA'NQUETER.† n. s. [old Fr. banquetteur.]

1. A feaster; one that lives deliciously.

Great banquetters doe seldom great exploits. Colgrave.

2. He that makes feasts.

BA'NQUET-HOUSE. } n. s. [from banquet and house.]

BA'NQUETING-HOUSE. } A house where banquets are kept.

In a banqueting-house, among certain pleasant trees, the table was set near to an excellent water-work. Sidney.

At the walk's end behold, how rais'd on high
A banquet-house salutes the southern sky. Dryden.

BA'NQUETING.* n. s. [from banquet.] The act of feasting.

For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries. 1 Pet. iv. 3.

How they, who wasted such infinite masses of treasure in such vain buildings, banquetings, and spectacles, could be said to be wise? Ilak. will's Apology, p. 446.

Shun all jovial entertainments, banquetings, and merry meetings, (as they are called,) if they may deserve that name, which wisdom fail to bring so sad an account after them.

South, Sermon, vi. 378.

BANQUETTE. n. s. [Fr. in fortification.] A small bank at the foot of the parapet, for the soldiers to mount upon when they fire.

BA'NSHIE, or BE'NSHIE.* n. s. A kind of Irish fairy, formerly believed to appear in the shape of a diminutive old woman, and to chaunt, in a mournful ditty, under the windows of the house, the approaching death of some one in the families of the great. The word was, not long since, common in Ireland. In Scotland the benshi, who also foretels deaths, is the "fairy's wife." Dr. Jamieson derives the word from the Ir. Gael. ben, bean, a woman, and sighe, a fairy or hobgoblin.

BA'NSTICLE.† n. s. A small fish; called also a stickle-back; pungilius. Perhaps from ban, Sax. a bone, and stick; the body of this fish being fenced with prickles, or little bones sticking in it.

To BA'NTER. v. a. [a barbarous word, without etymology, unless it be derived from badiner, Fr.] To play upon; to rally; to turn to ridicule; to ridicule.

The magistrate took it that he bantered him, and bad'd an officer take him into custody. L'Estrange.

It is no new thing for innocent simplicity to be the subject of bantering drolls. L'Estrange.

Could Alcinous' guests with-hold

From scorn or rage? Shall we, cries one, permit

His leud romances, and his bantering wit? Tate.

BA'NTER. n. s. [from the verb.] Ridicule; railery.

This humour, let it look never so silly, as it passes many times for frolic and banter, is one of the most pernicious snares in human life. L'Estrange.

Metaphysicks are so necessary to a distinct conception, solid judgement, and just reasoning on many subjects, that those who ridicule it, will be supposed to make their wit and banter a refuge and excuse for their own laziness. Watts.

BA'NTERER.† n. s. [from banter.] One that banters; a droll.

What opinion have these religious banterers of the divine power? or what have they to say for this mockery and contempt? L'Estrange.

Thoughtless atheists and illiterate drunkards call themselves freethinkers; and gamblers, banterers, biters, swearers, and twenty new-born insects more, are, in their several species, the modern men of wit. Tuller, No. 12.

BA'NTLING. n. s. [If it has any etymology, it is perhaps corrupted from the old word bairn, bairnling, a little child.] A little child: a low word.

If the object of their love

Chance by Lucina's aid to prove,

They seldom let the bantling roar,

In basket at a neighbour's door.

Prior.

BA'PTISM. n. s. [baptismus, Lat. βαπτισμός, Gr.]

1. An external ablution of the body, with a certain form of words, which operates and denotes an internal ablution or washing of the soul from original sin. Ayliffe.

Baptism is given by water, and that prescript form of words which the church of Christ doth use. Hooker.

To his great baptism flock'd,

With awe, the regions round; and with them came

From Nazareth the son of Joseph deem'd,

Unmark't, unknown.

Milton.

2. Baptism is often taken in Scripture for sufferings.

I have a baptism to be baptised with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished! St. Luke, xii. 50.

BAPTISMAL. adj. [from baptism.] Of or pertaining to baptism.

When we undertake the baptismal vow, and enter on their new life, it would be apt to discourage us. Hammond.

BA'PTIST.† n. s. [baptiste, Fr. βαπτιστης, Gr.]

B A R

1. He that administers baptism.

In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea. Matt. iii. 1.

Him the Baptist soon
Descri'd, divinely warn'd, and witness bore
As to his worthier. — Milton.

2. An abbreviation of ANABAPTIST, which see.

Thus, of the three judges on each bench, the first may be a Presbyterian; the second a free-will Baptist; the third a Churchman. Swift, on the Repeal of the Test.

BAPTISTERY.† n. s. [baptisterium, Lat.] The place where the sacrament of baptism is administered.

The baptisteries, or places of water for baptism, in those elder times, were not, as now our fonts are, within the church, but without, and often in places very remote from it.

Mede, Churches, &c. p. 42.

In several ancient Western churches, I have seen the baptistery by itself, a distance from the churches; as at Pisa and Spalato; but I never saw it in the Eastern.

Sir G. Wheeler's Acc. of Churches, p. 35.

The great church, baptistery, and leaning tower, are well worth seeing. Addison.

BAPTISTICAL.* adj. [from baptist.] Relating to baptism.

This baptistical profession, which he ignorantly laugheth at, is attested by fathers, by councils, by liturgies.

Bp. Bramhall's Schism Guarded, p. 205.

To BAPTIZE. v. a. [baptiser, Fr. from βαπτίζω, Gr.]

To christen; to administer the sacrament of baptism to one.

He to them shall leave in charge,
To teach all nations what of him they learn'd,
And his salvation; them who shall believe,
Baptizing in the profuent stream, the sign
Of washing them from guilt of sin, to life
Pure, and in mind prepar'd, if so befall,
For death, like that which the Redeemer dy'd. Milton.

Let us reflect that we are Christians; that we are called by the name of the Son of God, and baptized into an irreconcilable enmity with sin, the world, and the devil. Rogers.

BAPTIZER. n. s. [from To baptize.] One that christens; one that administers baptism.

BAR.† n. s. [barre, Fr.]

The stooping scythe-man, that doth barb the field,
Thou mak'st wink-sure; in night all creatures sleep. Marston, Malcontent.

2. To furnish horses with armour. See BARBED.

A warrior train
That like a deluge pour'd upon the plain;
On barbed steeds they rode in proud array,
Thick as the college of the bees in May. Dryden, Fables.

3. To jag arrows with hooks. See BARBED.

The twanging bows
Send showers of shafts, that on their barbed points
Alternate ruin bear. Philips.

BARBACAN. v. n. s. [barbacane, Fr. barbacana, Spán. Ital. barbacane, Sax. barbucan, barbycan. It is also written, improperly, in English, barbican. The word is originally Arabic; and Manning says it was first adopted in Europe by the Italians, then by the Normans, and from them conveyed to us.]

1. A fortification placed before the walls of a town.

The fortification of this kind, belonging to the city of London, has left its memorial in the name, still retained, of Barbican in Smithfield.

2. A fortress at the end of a bridge.

Within the barbican a porter sat,
Day and night duly keeping watch and ward:
Nor wight, nor word mote pass out of the gate,
But in good order, and with due regard. Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 25.

3. An opening in the wall through which the guns are levelled; a case-mate or hole in the parapet, to shoot out at.

BARBADOS Cherry: [malphigia, Lat.]

In the West Indies, it rises to be fifteen or sixteen feet high, where it produces great quantities of a pleasant tart fruit; propagated in gardens there, but in Europe it is a curiosity. Miller.

BARBADOS Tar. A bituminous substance, differing little from the petroleum floating on several springs in England and Scotland.

Woodward's Method of Fossils.

BARBARIAN. v. n. s. [barbarus, Lat. It seems to have signified at first only foreign or a foreigner; but, in time, implied some degree of wildness or cruelty. See BARBARICK.]

1. A man uncivilized; untaught; a savage.

Proud Greece, all nations else barbarians held,
Boasting, her learning all the world excell'd. Denham.
There were not different gods among the Greeks and barbarians. Stillingfleet.

But with descending show'rs of brimstone fir'd,
The wild barbarian in the storm expir'd. Addison.

2. A foreigner.

I would they were barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

3. A brutal monster; a man without pity: a term of reproach.

Thou fell barbarian!
What had he done! what could provoke thy madness
To assassinate so great, so brave a man! A. Phillips.

B A R

BARBARIAN. adj. Belonging to barbarians; savage.

Some felt the silent stroke of mould'ring age.

Barbarian, blindness.

Pope.

BARBARICK. † adj. [barbaricus, Lat. in a different sense; it means in Latin wrought, fretted, Dr. Johnson says. But the etymology of barbaricus has been so illustrated as to shew its affinity to our meaning of foreign, and of savage; of which latter sense Dr. Johnson has taken no notice. "Bruce has shown, that Barbarick, Barbarine, and Barberin, are names derived from Berber or Barbar, the native name of the coast of the Trogloditick, Icthyophagi, and Shepherds. It goes down the whole western coast of the Red Sea. The Egyptians hated and feared them. It was, therefore, in Egypt a term both of dread and contumely; in which sense it passed to the Greeks, and from them to the Romans," Dr. Vincent's Periplus of the Egyptian Sea, P. 1. p. 103.] Foreign; far-fetched.

The gorgeous East, with richest hand,
Showers on her kings barbarick pearl and gold. Milton, P. L.
Astrology speaks great things, and is fain to make use of appellations from Greek and barbarick systems.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 7.

The eastern front was glorious to behold,
With diamond flaming, and barbarick gold. Pope.

2. Uncivilized; savage.

Better I find ye esteem it to imitate the old and elegant humanity of Greece, than the barbarick pride of a Hunnish and Norwegian stateliness. Milton, Areopagitica.

The pure Roman language was corrupted by barbarick, or Gothick, invaders. Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BARBARISM. n. s. [barbarismus, Lat.]

1. A form of speech contrary to the purity and exact-ness of any language.

The language is as near approaching to it, as our modern barbarism will allow; which is all that can be expected from any now extant. Dryden, Juvenal, Dedication.

2. Ignorance of arts; want of learning.

I have for barbarism spoke more
Than for that angel knowledge you can say. Shakspeare.

The genius of Raphael having succeeded to the times of barbarism and ignorance, the knowledge of painting is now arrived to perfection. Dryden, Dufresnoy, Preface.

3. Brutality; savageness of manners; incivility.

Moderation ought to be had in tempering and managing the Irish, to bring them from their delight of licentious barbarism, unto the love of goodness and civility. Spenser, Ireland.

Divers great monarchs have risen from barbarism to civility, and fallen again to ruin. Davies on Ireland.

4. Cruelty; barbarity; un pitying hardness of heart:
not in use.

They must perforce have melted,
And barbarism itself have pitied him. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

BARBARITY. n. s. [from barbarous.]

1. Savageness; incivility.

2. Cruelty; inhumanity.

And they did treat him with all the rudeness, reproach, and barbarity imaginable. Clarendon.

3. Barbarism; impurity of speech.

Next Petrarch followed, and in him we see,
What rhyme improv'd in all its height, can be
At best a pleasing sound, and sweet barbarity. Dryden.

Latin expresses that in one word, which either the barbarity or narrowness of modern tongues cannot supply in more. Dryden.

Affected refinements, which ended by degrees in many barbarities, before the Goths had invaded Italy. Swift.

To BARBARIZE.* v. a. [from barbarism.] To bring back to barbarism; to render savage.

B A R

The Cross must now against the Cross be sped, (Blush, all ye heavens, at this!) and they, who are Under the King of Peace all marshalled,
Be barbarized by a mutual war. Bedimont's Psyche, xv. 49.

Detested forms, that, on the mind impress'd,
Corrupt, confound, and barbarize an age. Thomson, Lib. v. 681.

The hideous changes which have barbarized France
Burke, on the French Rev.

To BARBARIZE.* v. n. To commit a barbarism, an impurity of speech.

Besides the ill habit which they get of wretched barbarizing, against the Latin and Greek idiom, with their untutored anglicisms. Milton, of Education.

BARBAROUS. † adj. [barbare, Fr. βάρβαρος, Gr.]

1. Stranger to civility; savage; uncivilized.

What need I say more to you? What ear is so barbarous, but hath heard of Amphialus. Sidney.

The doubtful damsel dare not yet commit
Her single person to their barbarous truth. Spenser, F. Q.

Thou art a Roman; be not barbarous. Shakspeare.

He left governour,—Philip, for his country a Phrygian, and for manners more barbarous than he that set him there. 2 Macc. v. 22.

A barbarous country must be broken by war, before it be capable of government; and when subdued, if it be not well planted, it will soon return to barbarism. Davies on Ireland.

2. Ignorant; unacquainted with arts.

They who restored painting in Germaany, not having those reliques of antiquity, retained that barbarous manner. Dryden.

3. Cruel; inhuman.

By their barbarous usage, he died within a few days, to the grief of all that knew him. Clarendon.

4. Foreign.

To match this monarch, with strong Arcite came Emetrios, king of Inde, a mighty name,
On a bay courser, goodly to behold,
The trappings of his horse embos'd with barbarous gold. Dryden, Fables.

BARBAROUSLY. † adv. [from barbarous.]

1. Ignorantly; without knowledge or arts.

How barbarously we yet speak and write, your lordship knows, and I am sufficiently sensible in my own English.
Dryden, Ded. of Tr. and Cressida.

We barbarously call them blest,
While swelling coffers break their owner's rest. Stepney.

3. Cruelly; inhumanly.

But yet you barbarously murder'd him. Dryden.
She wishes it may prosper; but her mother used one of her nieces very barbarously. Spectator.

BARBAROUSNESS. n. s. [from barbarous.]

1. Incivility of manners.

Excellencies of music and poetry are grown to be little more, but the one fiddling, and the other rhyming; and are indeed very worthy of the ignorance of the friar, and the barbarousness of the Goths. Temple.

2. Impurity of language.

It is much degenerated, as touching the pureness of speech;
being overgrown with barbarousness. Brewerwood.

3. Cruelty.

The barbarousness of the trial, and the persuasives of the clergy, prevailed to antiquate it. Hale, Common Law.

BARBARY.* n. s. A Barbary horse; a BARB, which see.

They are ill built,
Pin-buttock'd, like your dainty barbaries,
And weak i' the pasterns. Beaum. and Fl. Wildgoose Chase.

BARBATED.* part. adj. [Lat. barbatus.] Jagged with points; bearded.

I cannot lay so much stress on a plate and description, given by Plot, of a dart uncommonly barbated. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 63.

To BARBECUE. v. a. A term used in the West Indies for dressing a hog whole; which, being split to the backbone, is laid flat upon a large gridiron, raised about two feet above a charcoal fire, with which it is surrounded.

B A R

Oldfield, with more than harpy throat endu'd,
Cries, Send me, gods, a whole hog barbecu'd. Pope.

BARBECUE. n. s. A hog drest whole, in the West Indian manner.

BARBED. † participial adj. [from To barb, or perhaps a corruption of bard, which see.]

1. Furnished with armour.

His glittering armour he will command to rust,
His barbed steeds to stables. Shakespeare, Richard II.

If thy sword can win him,

Or force his legions, with thy barbed horse,

But to forsake their ground. Beaumont and Fl. Prothectus.

2. Bearded; jagged with hooks or points.

Canst thou fill his [the leviathan's] skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish spears? Job, xli. 7.

No drizzling shower,

But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire.

Milton, P. L. vi. 546.

BARBEL. † n. s. [barbus, Lat. mullus barbatus, Cic. barbel, Fr.]

1. A kind of fish found in rivers, large and strong, but coarse.

The barbel is so called, by reason of the barb or wattels at his mouth, or under his chaps. Walton's Angler.

2. Knots of superfluous flesh growing up in the channels of the mouth of a horse. Furrier's Dict.

BARBER. † n. s. [Fr. barber, Ital. barbiere, Welsh, barber, from the Lat. barba.] A man who shaves the beard.

His chamber being stived with friends or suitors, he gave his legs, arms, and breasts to his servants to dress; his head and face to his barber; his eyes to his letters, and his ears to petitioners. Wotton.

Thy boist'rous looks,

No worthy match for valour to assail,

But by the barber's razor best subdu'd. Milton.

What system, Dick, has right averr'd

The cause, why woman has no beard?

In points like these we must agree;

Our barber knows as much as we. Prior.

TO BARBER. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress out.

Our courteous Anthony,

Whom ne'er the word of No woman heard speak,

Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast. Shakespeare.

BARBER-CHIRURGEON. † n. s. A man who joins the practice of surgery to the barber's trade; such as were all surgeons formerly, but now it is used only for a low practicer of surgery.

He put himself into barber-chirurgeons' hands, who, by unfit applications, rarified the tumour. Wesman, Surgery.

I could stamp

Their foreheads with those deep and publick brands,

That the whole company of barber-surgeons

Should not take off, with all their art and plaisters.

B. Jonson, Portaster, To the Reader.

BARBER-CHIRURGERY, or SURGERY. \ n. s.* He who practises the trade of a barber-surgeon.

Now he comes to the position, which I set down whole; and, like an able textman, slits it into four, that he may the better come at with his barber-surgery. Milton, Colastion.

BARBER-MONGER. n. s. A word of reproach in Shakespeare, which seems to signify a fop; a man decked out by his barber.

Draw, you rogue; for though it be night, the moon shines; I'll make a sop of the moonshine of you; you whoreson, cunningly, barber-monger, draw. Shakespeare, King Lear.

BARBERESS. \ n. s.* [Fr. barbiere.] A woman-barber. Minsheu and Cotgrave.

BARBERRY. n. s. [berberis, Lat. or oxyacanthus.] Pipperidge bush.

B A R

The species are, † The common barberry.
2. Barberry without stones. The first of these sorts is very common in England, and often planted for hedges. Miller.

Barberry is a plant that bears a fruit very useful in housewifery; that which beareth its fruit without stones is counted best. Mortimer.

BARD. † n. s. [bardd, Welch, bardh, Celt. barde, old Fr. bardus, Lat.] A poet.

There is amongst the Irish a kind of people called bards, which are to them instead of poets; whose profession is to set forth the praises or dispraises of men in their poems or rhyme; the which are had in high regard and estimation among them. Spenser on Ireland.

At this time in Ireland the bard, by common acceptance, is counted a railing rimer, and distinguished from the poet. Sir J. Ware on Spenser's Ireland.

And many bards that to the trembling chorus
Can tune their timely voices cunningly. Spenser, F. Q.

The bard who first adorn'd our native tongue,

Tun'd to his British lyre this ancient song,

Which Homer might without a blush rehearse. Dryden.

BAR'DICK. \ adj.* [from bard.] Relating to the bards or poets.

So late as the eleventh century, the practice continued, among the Welsh bards, of receiving instructions in the bardick profession from Ireland. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. i. Diss. 1.

BAR'DISH. \ adj.* [from bard.] What is written or asserted by the bards.

I found so intolerable antichronisms, incredible reports, and bardish impostures, as well from ignorance, as assumed liberty of invention, in some of our ancients.

Selden, Note prefixed to Drayton's Polyolbion.

BARD. \ n. s.* [Ital. barde, old Fr. barde.] The trapping of a horse. See BARDED.

BARDED. \ part. adj.* [old Fr. bardé, low Lat. bardare, perhaps from parare.] Dressed in a warlike manner; caparisoned. A word in several of our elder dictionaries, as the substantive is; and in our old authors.

If the barded horses ran fiercely upon them. Holinshed, Chron.

BARE. † adj. [bar, Cimbr. naked, bape, Sax. bar, Dan.]

1. Naked; without covering.

The trees are bare and naked, which use both to clothe and house the kern. Spenser on Ireland.

Yet was their manners then but bare and plain;

For th' antique world excess and pride did hate. Spenser.

5. Detected; no longer concealed.

These false pretences and varnish'd colours failing,

Bare in thy guilt, how foul thou must appear! Milton.

6. Poor; indigent; wanting plenty.

Were it for the glory of God, that the clergy should be left as bare as the apostles, when they had neither staff nor scrip; God would, I hope, endue them with the self-same affection.

Hooker's Preface.

Even from a bare treasury, my success has been contrary to that of Mr. Cowley. Dryden.

B A R

7. Mere; unaccompanied with usual recommendation.

It was a bare petition of a state
To one whom they had punish'd. Shakspeare.
Nor are men prevail'd upon by bare words, only through a defect of knowledge; but carried, with these puffs of wind, contrary to knowledge. South.

8. Threadbare; much worn.

You have an exchequer of words, and no other treasure for your followers; for it appears, by their bare liveries, that they live by your bare words. Shakspeare.

9. Not united with any thing else.

A desire to draw all things to the determination of bare and naked Scripture, hath caused much pains to be taken in abating the credit of man. Hooker.

That which offendeth us, is the great disgrace which they offer unto our custom of bare reading the word of God. Hooker.

10. Wanting clothes; slenderly supplied with clothes.

11. Sometimes it has of before the thing wanted or taken away.

Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;
For, tho' your violence should leave them bare
Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden, Jew.

Making a law to reduce interest, will not raise the price of land; it will only leave the country bare of money. Locke.

To BARE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To strip; to make bare or naked.

The turtle on the bared branch,
Laments the wound that death did launch. Spenser, Past. Nov.

There is a fabulous narration, that an herb groweth in the likeness of a lamb, and feedeth upon the grass, in such sort as it will bare the grass round about. Bacon, Natural History.

Eriphyle bare he found

Daring her breast, yet bleeding with the wound. Dryden.

He bard an ancient oak of all her boughs. Dryden.

For virtue, when I point the pen,

Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star;

Can there be wanting to defend her cause,

Light of the church, or guardians of the laws? Pope.

BARE, or BORE. The pretense of to bear. See To BEAR.

BA'REBONE. n. s. [from bare and bone.] Lean, so that the bones appear.

Here comes lean Jack, here comes barebone; how long is it ago, Jack, since thou sawest thy own knee? Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

BA'REBONED.* part. adj. [from bare and bone.] Having the bones bare.

But now that fair fresh mirror, dim and old,
Shews me a bare-bon'd death by time outworn. Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

BARFUL.† adj. See Barryful, which is the orthography of Dr. Johnson.

BARGAIN. n. s. [bargen, Welch, bargaigne, Fr.]
1. A contract or agreement concerning the sale of something.

What is marriage but a very bargain? wherein is sought alliance, or portion, or reputation, with some desire of issue; not the faithful nuptial union of man and wife. Bacon.

No more can be due to me,
Than at the bargain made was meant. Donne.

2. The thing bought or sold; a purchase; the thing purchased.

Give me but my price for the other two, and you shall even have that into the bargain. L' Etrange.

He who is at the charge of a tutor at home, may give his son a more genteel carriage, with greater learning into the bargain, than any at school can do. Locke.

3. Stipulation; interested dealing.

There was a difference between courtesies received from their master and the duke; for that the duke's might have ends of utility and bargain; whereas their master's could not. Bacon.

4. An unexpected reply; tending to obscenity.

Where sold he bargains, whipstitch? Dryden.

As to bargains, few of them seem to be excellent, because they all terminate into one single point. Swift.

No maid at court is less ashamed,
How'er for selling bargains fam'd. Swift.

5. An event; an upshot; a low-sense.

I am sorry for thy misfortune; however we must make the best of a bad bargain. Arbutnot, History of J. Bull.

6. In law.

Bargain and sale is a contract or agreement made for manours, lands, &c. also the transferring the property of them from the bargainer to the bargainee. Cowel.

TO BARGAIN.† v. n. [Fr. barguigner, old Fr. bargaignier, Ital. bargagnare, low Lat. barganniare.]
To make a contract for the sale or purchase of any thing: often with for before the thing.

Henry is able to enrich his queen;
And not to seek a queen to make him rich.
So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market men for oxen, sheep, or horse. Shakspeare.

For those that are like to be in plenty, they may be bargained for upon the ground. Bacon.

The thrifty state will bargain ere they fight. Dryden.

It is possible the great duke may bargain for the republic of Lucca, by the help of his great treasures. Addison on Italy.

BARGAINER. n. s. [from bargain.] He or she that accepts a bargain. See BARGAIN.

BARGAINER.† n. s. [Fr. barguigneur, Welsh, bargewwr.] The person who proffers, or makes a bargain. Huloet and Cotgrave.

BARGE.† n. s. old Fr. barje, barge, bargie, Dut. from barga, low Lat.]

1. A boat for pleasure.

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burnt on the water. Shakspeare.

Plac'd in the gilded barge,
Proud with the burden of so sweet a charge;
With painted oars the youths begin to sweep.
Neptune's smooth face. Waller.

2. A sea commander's boat.

It was consulted when I had taken my barge, and gone ashore, that my ship should have set sail and left me. Raleigh.

3. A boat for burden.

BARGEMAN.* n. s. [from barge and man.] The manager of a barge.

He knew that others, like sly bargemen, looked that way
When his stroke was bent another way.

Ld. Northampton, Proceed against Garnet, sign. N.
And backward yode, as bargemen wont to fare.

Spenser, F. Q. vii. vii. 35.

B A R

BARGEMASTER.* n. s. [from barge and master.] The owner of a common barge which carries goods for hire.

There is in law an implied contract with a common carrier, or bargemaster, to be answerable for the goods he carries. Blackstone.

BARGER. n. s. [from barge.] The manager of a barge.

Many wafarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of this privilege; who again, like the Campellians in the north, and the London bargers, forslow not to baigue them. Carcu, Survey of Cornwall.

BARK.† n. s. [barck, Dan. berck, Dutch, from the Teut. bergen, to cover.]

1. The rind or covering of a tree.

Trees last according to the strength and quantity of their sap and juice; being well munited by their bark against the injuries of the air. Bacon, Natural History.

Wand'ring in the dark,
Physicians for the tree have found the bark. Dryden.

2. The medicine called, by way of distinction, the Peruvian bark. It has been said, that several trees of the Cinchona kind, happening to be felled into a lake when an epidemick fever, that was very fatal, prevailed at Loxa in Peru, the woodmen accidentally drinking the water were cured; and thus the virtues of this drug were discovered.

3. A small ship. [from barca, low. Lat.]

The Duke of Parma must have flown, if he would have come into England; for he could neither get bark nor mariner to put to sea. Bacon, on the War with Spain.

It was that fatal and perfidious bark,
Built in the eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine. Milton.

Who to a woman trusts his peace of mind,
Trusts a frail bark with a tempestuous wind. Granville.

TO BARK.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To strip trees of their bark.

The severest penalties ought to be put upon barking any tree that is not felled. Temple.

These trees, after they are barked, and cut into shape, are tumbled down from the mountains into the stream. Addison.

2. To enclose; to cover, as the bark covers a tree; to incrust.

Anchorites, that barqu'd themselves up in hollow trees, and immured themselves in hollow walls. Donne's Devotions, p. 43.

The juice of cursed hebenon — doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine,
And a most instant tetter bark'd about,
Most lazy-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

TO BARK. v. n. [beorcan, Saxon.]

1. To make the noise which a dog makes when he threatens or pursues.

Sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shakspeare, Richard III.
Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears in the town?
Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

In vain the herdsman calls him back again;
The dogs stand off afar, and bark in vain. Cowley.

2. To clamour at; to pursue with reproaches.

Vile is the vengeance on the ashes cold;
And envy base, to bark at sleeping fame. Spenser, F. Q.
You dare patronage

The envious barking of your saucy tongue,
Against my lord. Shakspeare.

BARK-BARED. adj. from bark and bare.] Stripped of the bark.

Excorticated and bark-bared trees may be preserved, by now rising up a shoot from the foot, or below the stripped place cutting the body of the tree sloping off a little above the shoot, and it will heal, and be covered with bark. Mortimer.

BA'RKER. n. s. [from bark.]

1. One that barks or clamours.

What hath he done more than a base cur? barked and made a noise? had a fool or two to spit in his mouth? But they are rather enemies of my fame than me, these barkers. B. Jonson.

2. [from bark of trees.] One that is employed in stripping trees.

BA'RKY. adj. [from bark.] Consisting of bark; containing bark.

Ivy so enwrings the barky fingers of the elm. Shakespeare.

BA'RLEY. † n. s. [derived by Junius from בָּר, hordeum.] A grain, of which malt is made.

It hath a thick spike; the calyx, husk, awn, and flower, are like those of wheat or rye, but the awns are rough; the seed is swelling in the middle, and, for the most part, ends in a sharp point, to which the husks are closely united. The species are,

1. Common long-eared barley. 2. Winter or square barley, by some called big. 3. Sprat barley, or battledoor barley. All these sorts of barley are sown in the spring of the year, in a dry time. In some very dry light land, the barley is sown early in March; but in strong clayey soils it is not sown till April. The square barley or big, is chiefly cultivated in the north of England, and in Scotland; and is hardier than the other sorts. Miller.

Barley is emollient, moistening, and expectorating; barley was chosen by Hippocrates as a proper food in inflammatory distempers. Arbutnot, on Aliments.

BA'RLEYBRAKE. † n. s. A kind of rural play, Dr. Johnson says; but he says no more. At this game the trial of swiftness is the principal exhibition. From an appointed goal numbers start, whom one is to catch, after they have reached a given distance, before which he stirs not from his post. Those, whom he catches, are obliged to assist him in catching the remainder, till the game closes with the person last captured, and recommences with him, who had been first captured, as the catcher. Dr. Jamieson says that, in Scotland, it is generally played in a corn-yard, whence the Scottish expression, barla-bracks about the stacks; and that a stack is the goal from which they start.

By neighbours prais'd she went abroad thereby,
At barleybrake her sweet swift feet to try. Sidney.

BA'RLEY-BROTH. n. s. [from barley and broth.] A low word, sometimes used for strong beer.

Can sodden water,
A drench for surrein'd jades, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat? Shakespeare.

BA'RLEY-CORN. n. s. [from barley and corn.] A grain of barley; the beginning of our measure of length; the third part of an inch.

A long, long journey, choak'd with breaks and thorns,
Ill measur'd by ten thousand barley corns. Tickell.

BA'RLEY-MOW. n. s. [from barley and mow.] The place where reaped barley is stowed up.

Whenever by yon barley mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay.

BA'RLEY-SUGAR. \ n. s.* [from barley and sugar; but Mr. Malone considers it a corruption of the Fr. sucré brûlé, burnt sugar.] Sugar boiled till it be brittle, formerly with a decoction of barley. See SUGAR.

VOL. I.

BARM. n. s. [burn, Welsh; beorn, Sax.] Yeast; the ferment put into drink to make it work; and into bread, to lighten and swell it.

Are you not he
That sometimes make the drink bear no barm,
Miscad night-wanderers, laughing at their harm? Shakespeare.
Try the force of imagination, upon staying the working of beer when the barm is put into it. Bacon.

BA'RMV. adj. [from barm.] Containing barm; yeasty.

Their jovial nights in frolics and in play
They pass, to drive the tedious hours away;
And their cold stomachs with crown'd goblets cheer,
Of windy cider, and of barmy beer. Dryden.

BARN. † n. s. [beorn, Sax. from bepe, barley, and epn, the place where it is deposited, Jun.] A place or house for laying up any sort of grain, hay, or straw.

In vain the barns expect their promis'd load,
Nor barns at home, nor recks are heap'd abroad. Dryden.
I took notice of the make of barns here: having laid a frame of wood, they place, at the four corners, four blocks, in such a shape as neither mice nor vermin can creep up. Addison.

To BARN. \ v. a.* [from the noun.] To lay up in a barn. A word still used in Norfolk.

The aged man that coffers up his gold,
Is plagu'd with cramps, and gouts, and painful fits;
And useless barns the harvest of his wits. Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

BARN-DOOR. \ n. s.* The door of a barn.

While the cock, with lively din,
Scatters the rear of darkness thin;
And to the stack, or the barn door,
Stoutly struts his dames before. Milton, l' Alleg. v. 51.

BA'RNACLE. † n. s. [probably of beapn, Sax. a child, and aac, Sax. an oak.]

1. A kind of shell fish that grow upon timber that lies in the sea.

Those weeds or branches like nets were intangled and drawn along by the barnacles, which in those long voyages usually breed upon the sides of ships, and exceedingly pester and retard their way in sailing. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 393.

2. A bird like a goose, fabulously supposed to grow on trees.

It is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence, to affirm that the first men might grow upon trees, as the story goes about barnacles: or might be the lice of some vast prodigious animals, whose species is now extinct. Bentley.

And from the most refin'd of saints,
As naturally grow miscreants,
As barnacles turn Soland geese
In th' islands of the Orcaes. Butler, Hudibras.

3. An instrument made commonly of iron for the use of farriers, to hold a horse by the nose, to hinder him from struggling when an incision is made.

Farrier's Dict.

BAROMETER. n. s. [from Gr. βαρ, weight, and μετρον, measure.] A machine for measuring the weight of the atmosphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroscope, which only shews that the air is heavier at one time than another, without specifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, so called from Torricelli the inventor of it. at Florence, in 1643; it is a glass tube fill'd with mercury, hermetically sealed at one end, open and immersed in a basin of mercury; so that, as the weight of the power of prominishes, the mercury in the tube is initiated in the Aeneis; tho' and as it increases, the which would have smothered him the column of mercury suspended in the tube, being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmosphere.

The measuring the heights of mountains, and finding the elevation of places above the level of the sea hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that essential property of the air, its gravity or pressure. As the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoised by a column of air of equal weight, so whatever causes make the air heavier or lighter, the pressure of it will be thereby increased or lessened, and of consequence the mercury will rise or fall. Harris.

Gravity is another property of air, whereby it counterpoises a column of mercury from twenty-seven inches and one half to thirty and one half, the gravity of the atmosphere varying one tenth, which are its utmost limits; so that the exact specific gravity of the air can be determined when the barometer stands at thirty inches, with a moderate heat of the weather. Arbuthnot on Air.

BAROMETRICAL. adj. [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.*

He is very accurate in making barometrical and thermometrical instruments. Derham, Physico-Theology.

BARON.† n. s. [The etymology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, signified a brave warrior, or a brutal man; and, from the first of these significations, Menage derives baron, as a term of military dignity. Others suppose it originally to signify only a man; in which sense baron or varon, is still used by the Spaniards; and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uses baron and femme, husband and wife. This application of baron for husband is common also in old French, V. Cotgrave. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gaulish word, signifying commander; others from Hebrew and Celtic words of the same import. Some think it a contraction of par homme, or peer, which seems least probable. Vir is the most probable; whence, in the dialect of Languedoc, bar, a man; baro, a woman. See Dict. Languedocien par M. L'Abbé des Sauvages. The change of v into b was common in elder times.]

1. A degree of nobility next to a viscount. It may be probably thought, that antiently, in England, all those were called barons, that had such signiories as we now call count barons. And it is said, that, after the conquest, all such came to the parliament, and sat as nobles in the upper house. But when, by experience, it appeared, that the parliament was too much crouded with such multitudes, it became a custom, that none should come, but such as the king, for their extraordinary wisdom or quality; thought good to call by writ; which writ ran hac vice tantum. After that, men, seeing that this state of nobility was but casual, and depending merely on the prince's pleasure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male: and these were called barons by letters patent, or by creation; whose posterity are now those barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create more at his pleasure. It is nevertheless thought, that there are

BARONS by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, that they may be discerned by their names by writ being those, that to the Ld. Northve their own surnames annexed; And backward yode, by letters patent, are named by the barons which were first by writ, may now justly also be called barons by prescription; for that they have continued barons in, themselves and their ancestors, beyond the memory of man. There are also barons by tenure, as the bishops of the land, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, have always had place in the upper house of parliament, and are called lords spiritual.

2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king: of these the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his assistants, between the king and his subjects, in causes of justice, belonging to the exchequer.

3. There are also barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the seven towns, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rye, Rumnney, Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower house of parliament. Cowel.

They that bear
The cloth of state above, are four barons
Of the cinque ports. Shakspeare.

4. Baron is used for the husband in relation to his wife. Cowel.

5. A baron of beef is when the two sirloins are not cut asunder, but joined together by the end of the backbone. Dict.

BARONAGE. n. s. [from baron.]

1. The body of barons and peers.

His charters of the liberties of England, and of the forest were hardly, and with difficulty, gained by his baronage at Staines, A. D. 1215. Hale.

2. The dignity of a baron.

3. The land which gives title to a baron.

BARONESS. n. s. [barouessa, Ital. baronessa, Lat.] A baron's lady.

BARONET.† n. s. [of baron and et, diminutive termination.] The lowest degree of honour that is hereditary; it is below a baron and above a knight; and has the precedency of all other knights, except the knights of the garter. It was first founded by king James I. A. D. 1611. Cowel. But it appears by the following passage, that the term was in use before, though in another sense. Dr. Johnson should have added, that it was the designation of a knight bannet in our old chronicles, "Capti sunt et in custodia detenti barones et baronetti 22." Walsingham sub ann. 1321. V. Du Cange. See also Cragii Jus Feudale, Gloss. "Baronettus, BANNERITUS nominatur parrus baro."

King Edward III. being greatly bearded and crossed by the lords of the clergy, — was advised to direct out his writs to certain gentlemen of the best ability and trust, entitling them therein barons to serve and sit as barons in the next parliament. By which means he had so many barons in his parliament, as were able to weigh down the clergy and their friends; the which barons, they say, were not afterwards lords, but only baronets, as sundry of them do yet retain the name. Spenser on Ireland.

BARONIAL.* adj. [from baronia, Lat.] Relating to the person or place, a baron or barony.

The savage pomp and the capricious heroism of the baronial manners were replete with incident, adventure, and enterprise. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 462.

If he had exempted these lands from the policy to which he subjected other baronial possessions, it would have exceedingly diminished the strength of his kingdom. Lyttelton, Hist. Hen. II. Introd.

B A R

Delivering captives ignominiously detained in the baronial castles. Watson, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. Diss. 1.

BA'RON. † n. s. [baronne, Fr. beoþing, Sax.] That honour or lordship that gives title to a baron. Such are not only the fees of temporal barons, but of bishops also. Cowel.

Every parish should be forced to keep a pettit schoolmaster, adjoining unto the parish church, to be the more in view, which should bring up their children in the first elements of letters; and that in every county or barony, they should keepe another able schoolemaster, which should instruct them in grammar and the principles of sciences. Spenser on Ireland.

If my young lord, your son, have not the day,
Upon mine honour, for a silken point
I'll give my barony. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. p. 2.

BA'ROSCOPE. n. s. [βαροσκόπος, and σκοπεῖν.] An instrument to shew the weight of the atmosphere. See BAROMETER.

If there was always a calm, the equilibrium could only be changed by the contents; where the winds are not variable, the alterations of the baroscope are very small. Arbutnot.

BA'RRACAN. n. s. [bouvacan, or barracan, Fr.] A strong thick kind of camelot.

BA'RRACK. n. s. [barracca, Span.]

1. Little cabbins made by the Spanish fishermen on the sea shore; or little lodges for soldiers in a camp.
2. It is generally taken among us for buildings to lodge soldiers.

BA'RRACK-MASTER.* n. s. He who has the superintendence of soldiers' lodgings.

The subject of the girl's letter was, that a young lady of good fortune was courted by an Irishman, who pretended to be barrack-master-general of Ireland. Swift, Lett. ccccx.

BA'RRATOR. † n. s. [from barat, old Fr. from which is still retained barateur, a cheat. Originally perhaps from the Icel. and Goth. baratta, whence the Italian baratta used by Dante, a fight, a battle.] A wrangler, and encourager of law suits.

I am such a person, whom ye know have bene a common barrator and theefe by a long space of yeares.

Sir T. Elyot's Governour, fol. 133. b.
Will it not reflect as much on thy character, Nic, to turn barrator in thy old days, a stirrer up of quarrels amongst thy neighbours? Arbutnot, History of J. Bull.

BA'RRATRY. n. s. [from barrater.] The practice or crime of a barrator; foul practice in law.

'Tis arrant barratry, that bears
Point blank an action 'gainst our laws, Hudibras.

BA'RREL. † n. s. [baril, Welsh, barcil, old Fr.]

1. A round wooden vessel to be stopped close.

It hath been observed by one of the ancients, that an empty barrel knocked upon with the finger, giveth a diapason to the sound of the like barrel full. Bacon.

Trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fears to broach. Dryden.

2. A particular measure in liquids. A barrel of wine is thirty-one gallons and a half; of ale, thirty-two gallons; of beer, thirty-six gallons, and of beer vinegar, thirty-four gallons.

3. [In dry measure.] A barrel of Essex butter contains one hundred and six pounds; of Suffolk butter, two hundred and fifty-six. A barrel of herrings should contain thirty-two gallons wine measure, holding usually a thousand herrings.

Several colleges, instead of limiting their rents to a certain sum, prevailed with their tenants to pay the price of so many barrels of corn, as the market went. Swift.

4. Any thing hollow; as, the barrel of a gun; that part which holds the shot.

Take the barrel of a long gun perfectly bored, set it upright with the breech upon the ground, and take a bullet exactly fit for it; then if you suck at the mouth of the barrel ever so gently, the bullet will come up so forcibly, that it will hazard the striking out your teeth. Digby.

5. A cylinder; frequently that cylinder about which any thing is wound.

Your string and bow must be accommodated to your drill; if too weak, it will not carry about the barrel. Moxon.

6. Barrel of the ear, is a cavity behind the tympanum, covered with a fine membrane. Dict.

To BA'RREL. † v. a. [from the noun.] To put any thing in a barrel for preservation.

I would have their beef beforehand barrelled, which may be used as is needed. Spenser on Ireland.

Barrel up earth, and sow some seed in it, and put it in the bottom of a pond. Bacon.

That perverse man, that barrelled himself in a tub.

Donne's Devotions, p. 43.

BA'RREL-BELLIED. adj. [from barrel and belly.] Having a large belly.

Dauntless at empty noises; lofty neck'd,
Sharp headed, barrel-belly'd, broadly back'd. Dryden.

BA'RREN. † adj. [baire, Sax. naked; properly applied to trees or ground unfruitful, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Horne Tooke contends that it is the past participle of the verb bar, and therefore converts barren into barred, i. e. stopped, shut, from which there can be no fruit or issue. I pass from this assertion to the old Fr. baraigne, which is precisely correspondent to our own word, meaning sterile, unfruitful; written also brahaigne, brehagne, and brehenne. V. Roquefort, Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. in V. baraigne, and Cotgrave in V. brehaigne. Wicliffe writes the word bareyn.]

1. Without the quality of producing its kind; not prolific; applied to animals.

They hail'd him father to a line of kings.
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
No son of mine succeeding.

Shakspeare.

There shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle. Deuteronomy, vii. 14.

2. Unfruitful; not fertile; sterile.

The situation of this city is pleasant, but the water is naught, and the ground barren. 2 Kings, ii. 19.

Telemachus is far from exalting the nature of his country; he confesses it to be barren. Pope.

3. Not copious; scanty.

Some schemes will appear barren of hints and matter, but prove to be fruitful. Swift.

4. Unmeaning; uninventive; dull.

There be of them that will make themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too. Shakspeare.

BA'RRENLY. † adv. [from barren.] Unfruitfully.

Hudoc, and Sherwood.

BA'RRENESS. n. s. [from barren.]

1. Want of offspring; want of the power of procreation.

I pray'd for children, and thought barrenness
In wedlock a reproach.

Milton.

No more he mention'd then of violence
Against ourselves; and wilful barrenness,
That cuts us off from hope.

Milton.

2. Unfruitfulness; sterility; infertility.

Within the self-same hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value, through the diversity of their fertility or barrenness. Bacon.

3. Want of invention; want of the power of producing any thing new.

The adventures of Ulysses are imitated in the Æneis; tho' the accidents are not the same, which would have argued him of a total barrenness of invention. Dryden.

4. Want of matter; scantiness.

The importunity of our adversaries hath constrained us longer to dwell than the barrenness of so poor a cause could have seemed either to require or to admit. Hooker.

5. [In theology.] Aridity; want of emotion or sensibility.

The greatest saints sometimes are fervent, and sometimes feel a barrenness of devotion. Bp. Taylor.

BA'RRENSPIRITED.* part. adj. [from barren and spirit.] Of a poor temper or mean spirit.

A barren-spirited fellow. Shakespeare, Jul. Cesar.

BA'RREN WORT. n. s. [epimedium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BA'RRFUL. adj. [from bar and fulk] Full of obstructions.

A barful strife!

Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. Shakespeare.

BARRICA'DE. n. s. [barricade, Fr.]

1. A fortification made in haste, of trees, earth, waggon, or any thing else, to keep off an attack.

2. Any stop; bar; obstruction.

There must be such a barricade, as would greatly annoy, or absolutely stop, the currents of the atmosphere. Derham.

To BARRICA'DE. v. a. [barricader, Fr.]

1. To stop up a passage.

Now all the pavement sounds with trampling feet,

And the mixt hurry barricades the street,

Entangled here, the waggon's lengthen'd team. Gay.

2. To hinder by stoppage.

A new volcano continually discharging that matter, which being till then barricaded up, and imprisoned in the bowels of the earth, was the occasion of very great and frequent calamities. Woodward.

BARRICA'DO. n. s. [barricada, Span.] A fortification; a bar; any thing fixed to hinder entrance.

The access was by a neck of land, between the sea on one part, and the harbour water, or inner sea on the other; fortified clean over with a strong rampier and barricado. Bacon.

To BARRICA'DO. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to bar; to stop up.

Fast we found, fast shut

The dismal gates, and barricado'd strong! Milton.

He had not time to barricado the doors; so that the enemy entered. Clarendon.

The truth of causes we find so obliterated, that it seems almost barricadoed from any intellectual approach. Harvey.

BA'RRIER.* n. s. [barriere, Fr.] It is sometimes pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, but it is placed more properly on the first.

1. A barricade; an entrenchment.

Safe in the love of heav'n an ocean flows

Around our realm, a barrier from the foes. Pope.

2. A fortification, or strong place, as on the frontiers of a country.

The queen is guarantee of the Dutch, having possession of the barrier, and the revenues thereof, before a peace. Swift.

3. A stop; an obstruction.

If you value yourself as a man of learning, you are building a most impassable barrier against improvement. Watts.

4. A bar to mark the limits of any place; the rails or lists, within which jousts and tournaments were performed. Hence a wrestler, in our old dictionaries, is called a player at barriers.

*For jousts, and tourneys, and barriers, the glories of them are chiefly in the chariots, wherein the challengers make their entries. Bacon.

Prisoners to the pillar bound,

At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,
Be freed, or arm'd anew. Dryden.

5. A boundary; a limit.

B A R

But wave what's to Cadmus may belong,
And fix, O muse, the barrier of thy song.
At Occlipus.

Pope, Statius.

How instinct varies in the groveling swine,
Compar'd, half reasoning elephant! with thine:
'Twixt that and reason, what a nice barrier!

For ever separate, yet for ever near.

Pope.

BA'RRING-OUT.* n. s. [from bar.] Exclusion of a person from a place, a boyish sport at Christmas.

Not school-boys, at a barring-out,
Rais'd ever such incessant rout.

Swift, Journal of a Modern fine Lady.

BA'RRISTER.* n. s. [from bar.] A person qualified to plead causes, called an advocate or licentiate in other countries and courts. Outer barristers are pleaders without the bar, to distinguish them from inner barristers; such are the benchers, or those who have been readers, the council of the king, queen, and princes, who are admitted to plead within the bar. A counsellor at law.

Blount and Chambers.

Whom time——

Hath made a lawyer—— he throws,

Like nets, or limetwigs, wheresoe'er he goes,

His title' of barrister on every wench,

And woos in language of the Pleas and Bench.

Donne's Satires, Poems, p. 123.

My lord, if he be not thwarted, will talk more than twenty barristers.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quirote, i. iv. 20.

BA'RRON.* n. s. [bepe, Sax. supposed by Skinner to come from bear, Dr. Johnson says. But it is from the old Fr. barrot, barreau; and that from the low Lat. barrotum.] Any kind of carriage moved by the hand, as a hand-barrow; a frame of boards, with handles at each end, carried between two men, a wheel-barrow; that which one man pushes forward by raising it upon one wheel.

Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and thrown into the Thames? Shakespeare.

No barrow's wheel

Shall mark thy stocking with a miry trace. Gay.

BA'RRON.* n. s. [bepe, Sax.] A hog; whence barrow grease, or hog's lard.

I say "gentle," though this barrow grunt at the word.

Milton, Colasterion.

BARROW, whether in the beginning or end of names of places, signifies a grove; from beappe, which the Saxons used in the same sense. Gibson.

BARROW.* is likewise used in Cornwall for a hillock, under which, in old times, bodies have been buried, Dr. Johnson says. But Borlase, in his Hist. of Cornwall, says they are called barrows, and more properly, being derived from byrn, to hide or bury. Barrow, in our northern dialect, is used for the side of a rocky hill, or a large heap of stones; this may be from beopg, an heap, a mound. However, the sepulchral barrow is not written according to Borlase's Cornish orthography.

Near Woodyate's lane the Roman road penetrates the center of a barrow, one of a numerous grouse.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 66.

To BA'RTER. v. n. [barrater, Fr. to trick in traffick; from barat, craft, fraud.] To traffick by exchanging one commodity for another, in opposition to purchasing with money.

As if they scorn'd to trade and barter,

'By giving or by taking quarter.

Hudibras.

A man has not every thing growing upon his soil, and therefore is willing to barter with his neighbour. Collier.

B A S

1. To give any thing in exchange for something else.
For him was I exchanged and ransomed.
But with a baser man of arms by far,
Once, in contempt, they would have barter done. Shakespeare.
Then as thou wilt dispose the rest,
To those who, at the market rate,
Can barter honour for estate. Prior.

I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.

2. Sometimes it is used with the particle away before the thing given.

If they will barter away their time, methinks they should at least have some ease in exchange. Decay of Piety.

He also bartered away plumbs that would have rotted in a week, for nuts that would last good for his eating a whole year.
Locke.

BA'RTER. n. s. [from the verb.] The act or practice of trafficking by exchange of commodities; sometimes the thing given in exchange.

From England they may be furnished with such things as they may want, and, in exchange or barter, send other things, with which they may abound. Bacon.

He who corrupteth English with foreign words, is as wise as ladies that change plate for china; for which, the laudable traffic of old clothes is much the fairest barter. Fellon.

BA'RTERER. † n. s. [from barter.] He that trafficks by exchange of commodities.

What this disparaging barterer—in all the affluence of self-important opulence calls a garret, was one of the best and pleasantest rooms in a very commodious house.

Wakefield, Memoirs, p. 257.

BA'RTERY. n. s. [from barter.] Exchange of commodities.

It is a received opinion, that, in most ancient ages, there was only bartery or exchange of commodities amongst most nations.

Camden, Rem.

BARTHOLOMEW-TIDE.* n. s. The term near St. Bartholomew's day.

Like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes. Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

BA'RTAM. n. s. A plant; the same with pellitory.

BA'RTON. † n. s. [Sax. bepe-tun, an area.] Blount describes this word as meaning the demesne lands of a manor; the manor-house itself; and sometimes the outhouses. Most of our old lexicographers explain it as an enclosed place, or inner yard, wherein poultry is kept, or husbandry used.
V. Huloet, Minsheu, and Cotgrave. Blount's is the provincialism of the west of England; the latter is still used in other places.

BASA'LT.* n. s. [from basaltes.] Artificial or black porcelain, a composition having nearly the same properties with the natural basalt; invented by Messrs. Wedgwood and Bentley, and applied to various purposes in their manufactures. See BA-SALTES. Chambers.

BASA'LTES.* n. s. [Either from basal, iron; or from βασιλις, to examine diligently; according to Chambers. But where are basal and βασιλις to be found? βασιλις, in the sense given, is certainly Greek; and βασιλις, is the lapis Lydius of the ancients.] A kind of stone, of the hardness and colour of iron, which is found in perpendicular blocks. Some of the ancients called it also lapis Lydius.

This is the most northern basaltes I am acquainted with.

Pennant.

BASA'LTICK.* adj. Of basaltic.

We had in view a fine series of genuine basaltick columns.

Pennant.

BASE. † adj. [bas, Fr. basso, Ital. baso, Span.
bassus, low Latin; Gr. βᾶσις.]

1. Mean; vile; worthless; of things.

The harvest white plumb is a base plumb, and the white date plumb are no very good plumbs. Bacon.

Pyreicus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things, as earthen pitchers, a scullery; whereupon he was surnamed
Rupogaphus. Peacham.

2. Of mean spirit; disingenuous; illiberal; un-generous; low; without dignity of sentiment: of persons.

Since the perfections are such in the party I love, as the feeling of them cannot come unto any unnooble heart; shall that heart, lifted up to such a height, be counted base? Sidney.

It is base in his adversaries thus to dwell upon the excesses of a passion. Atterbury.

3. Of low station; of mean account; without dignity of rank; without honour.

If the lords and chief men degenerate, what shall be hoped of the peasants and base people? Spenser on Ireland.

If that rebellion

Came like itself, in base and abject routs,
You reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here. Shakespeare.

It could not else be, I should prove so base,
To sue and be denied such common grace. Shakespeare.

And I will yet be more vile than this, and will be base in mine own sight. 2 Sam. vi. 22.

Insurrections of base people are commonly more furious in their beginnings. Bacon.

He whose mind

Is virtuous, is alone of noble kind;
Though poor in fortune, of celestial race,
And he commits the crime who calls him base. Dryden.

4. Base-born; born out of wedlock, and by consequence of no honourable birth; illegitimate.

Why bastard? wherefore base?

When my dimensions are as well compact
As honest madam's issue. Shakespeare.

This young lord lost his life with his father in the field, and with them a base son. Camden's Remains.

5. Applied to metals: without value. It is used in this sense of all metal except gold and silver.

A guinea is pure gold, if it has nothing but gold in it, without any alloy or base metal. Watts.

6. Applied to sounds: deep; grave. It is more frequently written bass, though the comparative baser seems to require base.

In pipes, the lower the note holes be, and the further from the mouth of the pipe, the more base sound they yield. Bacon.

7. Low; in position or place.

Hir nose bas, [base,] hir brows high,
Hir eyes small and deep sett. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 1.

[The] gulfe of deepe Avernus hole;

By that same hole an entraunce, dark and base,

With smoake and sulphur hiding all the place,

Descends to hell. Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 31.

BASE-BORN. † adj. [from base and born.]

1. Born out of wedlock.

But see thy base-born child, thy babe of shame,
Who, left by thee, upon our parish came. Gay.

Neither doth holy imply no bastard? for some holy men have been base-born. Foolley's Dippers Dipt, (1645,) p. 51.

2. Simply, of low parentage.

A base-born shepherd.

Sir R. Fanshawe, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 105.

3. Vile; spurious: applied to things.

The world descends into such base-born evils,
That forty angels can make fourscore devils. Tourneur's Revenger's Tragedy.

It is justly expected, that they should bring forth a base-born issue of divinity. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

B A S

BASE-COURT. n. s. [bas cour, Fr.] Lower court; not the chief court that leads to the house; the back-yard; the farm-yard.

My lord, in the base-court he doth attend,
To speak with you. Shakespeare.

BASE-MINDED. adj. Mean-spirited; worthless.

It signifieth, as it seemeth, no more than abject, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Camden, Rem.

BASE-MINDEDNESS. * n. s. [from base and mind.] A meanness of spirit.

A timorous base-mindedness and abjectness.

Sir T. Sandys, State of Religion.

BASE-VIOL. n. s. [usually written bass-viol.] An instrument which is used in concerts for the base sound.

At the first grin he cast every human feature out of his countenance; at the second, he became the head of a base-viol. Addison.

BASE. † n. s. [bas, Fr. basis, Lat.]

1. The bottom of any thing: commonly used for the lower part of a building, or column.

What if it tempt thee tow'rd the flood, my lord?

Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,

That beetles o'er his base into the sea. Shakespeare.

A man should study other things, not to covet, not to fear, not to repent him; to make his base such, as no tempest shall shake him. B. Jonson, Discov.

Firm Dorick pillars found your solid base,
The fair Corinthian crowns the higher space,
And all below is strength, and all above is grace. Dryden.

Columns of polish'd marble firmly set
On golden bases are his legs and feet. Prior.

2. The pedestal of a statue.

Men of weak abilities in great place, are like little statues set on great bases, made the less by their advancement. Bacon.

Mercury was patron of flocks, and the ancients placed a ram at the base of his images. Broome.

3. That part of any ornament which hangs down, as housings.

Phalastus was all in white, having his bases and caparison embroidered. Sidney.

4. The broad part of any body; as, the bottom of a cone.

5. Stockings; armour for the legs, [bas, Fr. chausse.]

She made him to be dight

In woman's weedles, that is to manhood shame,

And put before his lap an apron white.

Instead of curiots and bases fit for fight. Spenser, F. Q. v. v. 20.

Nor shall it e'er be said that wight,

With gauntlet blue and bases white,

And round blunt truncheon by his side,

So great a man at arms defied. Butler, Hudibras.

6. The place from which racers or tilters run; the bottom of the field; the carcer, the starting post.

He said; to their appointed base they went;

With beating heart th' expecting sign receive,

And starting all at once, the barrier leave. Dryden.

7. The string that gives a base sound; the part assigned to the bass voice or instrument, in a musical performance.

The trembling streams which wont in channels clear,

To rumble gently downe with murmur soft,

And were by them right tunefull taught to beare

A base's part among their consorts oft.

Spenser, Tears of the Muses.

At thy well sharpen'd thumb, from shore to shore,

The trebles quak for fear, the bases roar. Dryden.

8. An old rustick play, written by Skinner, bays; and in some counties called prison bars; in which, some are pursuers, and others are prisoners, one party being opposed to another in the trial of swiftness. It is yet in use.

At good-wink, barley-brake, at tick, or prison-base.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. xxx.

B A S

They after both, and boldly bas him base,
And each did strive the other to outdoe. Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 5.
Beauties do run at base, and kindly take
Each other prisoners for sweet beauty's sake.

Davies, Willes Pilgrimage, l. 3.

He with two striplings (hads more like to run

The country base, than to commit such slaughter)

Made good the passage. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

9. An old word for a small cannon.

Our men acknowledge but fifty-three great brass pieces, which were mounted, four brass cannon, six brass demi-cannon, sixteen cannon-pedroes of brass, three of iron, ten brass bases.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 110.

To BASE. † v. a. [baisser, Fr. See To ABASE.] To enbase; to make less valuable by admixture of meaner metals; figuratively, to degrade.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals, which we cannot base: as, whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height. Bacon.

Hast thou e'er heard of subject under sun,

That plac'd and bas'd his sovereigns so oft

By interchange, now low, and then aloft? Mir. for Mag. p. 373.

BASELESS. * adj. [from base and less.] Without foundation.

The baseless fabrick of this vision. Shakespeare, Tempest.

BASELY. adv. [from base.]

1. In a base manner; meanly; dishonourably.

The king is not himself, but basely led,

By flatterers. Shakespeare.

A lieutenant basely gave it up, as soon as Essex in his passage demanded it. Clarendon.

With broken vows his fame he will not stain,

With conquest basely bought, and with inglorious gain.

Dryden.

2. In bastardy.

These two Mitylene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Knolles.

BASEMENT. * n. s. [In architecture.] A continued base, extended a considerable length; as around a house, a room, or other piece of building. Fr. sou-basement. Chambers.

BASENESS. n. s. [from base.]

1. Meanness; vileness; badness.

Such is the power of that sweet passion,

That it all sordid baseness doth expel. Spenser.

Your soul's above the baseness of distrust;

Nothing but love could make you so unjust. Dryden.

When a man's folly must be spread open before the angels, and all his baseness ript up before those pure spirits, this will be a double hell. South.

2. Vileness of metal.

We alledged the fraudulent obtaining his patent, the baseness of his metal, and the prodigious sum to be coined. Swift.

3. Bastardy; illegitimacy of birth.

Why brand they us

With base? with baseness? bastardy? Shakespeare.

4. Deepness of sound.

The just and measur'd proportion of the air percussed towards the baseness or trebleness of tones, is one of the greatest secrets in the contemplation of sounds. Bacon.

BASENET. * n. s. [old Fr. bacinet, old Eng. basnyk.]

An helmet or headpiece.

And, that of him she mote assured stand,

He sent to her his basenet as a faithful band.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 31.

BASESTRING. * n. s. [from base and string.] The lowest note.

I have sounded the very base-string of mortality.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

To BASH. † v. n. [probably from base, Dr. Johnson says. But it is to be traced, perhaps, to the Sax. beſceaban, from ſcead, a shade; ſceaban, to overwhelm, to sink, to confound. See also To ABASH.

To be ashamed; to be confounded with shame.

They bash not to dash the wives of other men.
Bale, on the Revel. sign. C. iii. b.
His countenance was bold, and bashed not
For Gayon's looks, but scornful eye-glance at him shot.

Spenser, F. Q.

BASHA'W. n. s. [sometimes written bassa.] A title of honour and command among the Turks; the viceroy of a province; the general of an army.

The Turks made an expedition into Persia; and because of the straits of the mountains, the bashaw consulted which way they should get in.

Bacon.

BA'SHFUL. † adj. [This word, with all those of the same race, are of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. Skinner imagines them derived from base, or mean; Minshew from verbaesgn, Dut. to strike with astonishment; Junius from εξοσι, which he finds in Hesychius to signify shame. The conjecture of Minshew seems most probable, Dr. Johnson adds. But see To BASIL.]

1. Modest; shamefaced.

I never tempted her with word too large;
But, as a brother to his sister shew'd
Bashful sincerity, and comely love.

Shakspeare.

2. Sheepish; viciously modest.

He looked with an almost bashful kind of modesty, as if he feared the eyes of man.

Sidney.

Hence, bashful cunning!

And prompt me plain and holy innocence.

Shakspeare.

Our author, anxious for his fame to-night,

And bashful in his first attempt to write,
Lies cautiously obscure.

Addison.

3. Exciting shame.

A woman yet must blush when bashful is the case,
Though truth bid tell the tale and story as it fell.

Mir. for Mag. p. 59.

BA'SHFULLY. † adv. [from bashful.] Timorously; modestly.

Sherwood.

BA'SHFULNESS. n. s. [from bashful.]

1. Modesty, as shewn in outward appearance.

Philoclea a little mused how to cut the thread even, with eyes, cheeks, and lips, whereof each sang their part, to make up the harmony of bashfulness.

Sidney.

Such looks, such bashfulness might well adorn

The cheeks of youths that are more nobly born.

Dryden.

2. Vicious or rustick shame.

For fear had bequeathed his room to his kinsman bashfulness, to teach him good manners.

Sidney.

There are others, who have not altogether so much of this foolish bashfulness, and who ask every one's opinion.

Dryden.

BA'SIL. † n. s. [ocymum, Lat.] The name of a plant.
Sweet basil, rare for smell.

Drayton, Polyol. S. 15.

BA'SIL. n. s. The angle to which the edge of a joiner's tool is ground away. See To BASIL.

BA'SIL. † n. s. The skin of a sheep tanned. This is I believe more properly written basen, Dr. Johnson says. It is so; being the Fr. bazane. See BAWSIN.

To BA'SIL. v. a. To grind the edge of a tool to an angle.
These chisels are not ground to such a basil as the joiners chisels on one of the sides, but are basiled away on both the flat sides; so that the edge lies between both the sides in the middle of the tool.

Moxon.

BASILICA. n. s. [Gr. βασιλική.] The middle vein of the arm, so called, by way of pre-eminence. It is likewise attributed to many medicines for the same reason.

Quincy.

BASILICAL. † } adj. [from basilica. See BASILICA.]

BASILICK. } Belonging to the basilick vein.

These aneurisms, following always upon bleeding the basilick vein, must be aneurisms of the humeral artery.

Sharp.

It was formerly written basilican; and Howell, soon after the murder of King Charles the First, thus quibbles on the word.

I will attend with patience how England will thrive, now that she is let blood in the basilican vein. Howell, Lett. vii. 24.

BASILICK. n. s. [basilique, Fr. βασιλική.] A large hall, having two ranges of pillars, and two isles or wings with galleries over them. These basilicks were first made for the palaces of princes, and afterwards converted into courts of justice, and lastly into churches; whence a basilick is generally taken for a magnificent church, as the basilick of St. Peter at Rome.

BASILICON. n. s. [βασιλικόν.] An ointment, called also tetrapharmacon.

Quincy.

I made incision into the cavity, and put a pledget of basilicon over it.

Wichman.

BA'SILISK. n. s. [basiliscus, Lat. from Gr. βασιλισκος, of βασιλεως, a king.]

1. A kind of serpent called also a cockatrice, which is said to drive away all others by his hissing, and to kill by looking.

Make me not sighted like the basilisk;

I've look'd on thousands who have sped the better

By my regard, but kill'd none so.

Shakspeare.

The basilisk was a serpent not above three palms long, and differed from other serpents by advancing his head and some white marks or coronary spots upon the crown.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A species of cannon or ordnance.

We practice to make swifter motions than any you have; and to make them stronger and more violent than yours are; exceeding your greatest cannons and basilisks.

Bacon.

BA'SIN. n. s. [basin, Fr. bacile, bacino, Ital. It is often written bason, but not according to etymology.]

1. A small vessel to hold water for washing, or other uses.

Let one attend him with a silver basin,

Full of rosewater, and bestrewed with flowers.

Shakspeare.

We have little wells for infusions, where the waters take the virtue quicker and better, than in vessels and basins.

Bacon.

We behold a piece of silver in a basin, when water is put upon it, which we could not discover before, as under the verge thereof.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A small pond.

On one side of the walk you see this hollow basin, with its several little plantations lying conveniently under the eye of the beholder.

Spectator.

3. A part of the sea inclosed in rocks, with a narrow entrance.

The jutting land two ample bays divides;

The spacious basins arching rocks inclose,

A sure defence from every storm that blows.

Pope.

4. Any hollow place capacious of liquids.

If this rotation does the seas affect,

The rapid motion rather would eject

The stores, the low, capacious caves contain,

And from its ample basin cast the main.

Blackmore.

5. A dock for repairing and building ships.

6. In anatomy, a round cavity situated between the anterior ventricles of the brain.

7. A concave piece of metal, by which glass-grinders form their convex glasses.

8. A round shell or case of iron placed over a furnace in which hatters mould the matter of a hat into form.

9. Basins of a Balance, the same with the scales; one to hold the weight, the other the thing to be weighed.

BA'SINED.* adj. [from basin.] Inclosed in a small hollow place like as a basin.

Thy basin'd rivers, and imprison'd seas.

Young, Night Thought 9.

BA'SIS. n. s. [basis, Lat.]

1. The foundation of any thing, as of a column or a building.

It must follow, that paradise, being raised to this height, must have the compass of the whole earth for a basis and foundation.

Raleigh.

Ascend my chariot, guide the rapid wheels

That shake heav'n's basis.

Milton.

In altar wise a stately pile they rear;

The basis broad below, and top advanc'd in air.

Dryden.

2. The lowest of the three principle parts of a column, which are the basis, shaft, and capital.

Observing an English inscription upon the basis, we read it over several times.

Addison.

3. That on which any thing is raised.

Such seems thy gentle height, made only proud

To be the basis of that pompous load,

That which a nobler weight no mountain bears.

Denham.

4. The pedestal.

How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey's basis lies along

No worthier than the dust?

Shakspeare.

5. The groundwork or first principle of any thing.

Build me thy fortune upon the basis of valour.

Shakspeare.

The friendships of the world are oft

Confederacies in vice, or leagues of pleasure;

Ours has severest virtue for its basis.

Addison.

To BASK. v. a. [backern, Dut. Skinner.] To warm by laying out in the heat: used almost always of animals.

Then lies him down the lubbar fiend,

And stretch'd out all the chimney's length,

Basks at the fire his hairy strength.

Milton.

He was basking himself in the gleam of the sun.

F. E. Strange.

'Tis all thy business, business how to shun,

To bask thy naked body in the sun.

Dryden.

To BASK. v. n. To lie in the warmth.

About him, and above, and round the wood,

The birds that haunt the borders of his flood;

That bath'd within, or bask'd upon his side,

To tuneful songs their narrow throats apply'd.

Dryden.

Unlock'd, in covers let her freely run,

To range thy courts, and bask before the sun.

Tickell.

Some in the fields of purest æther play,

And bask and whiten in the blaze of day.

Pope.

BA'SKET. † n. s. [basged, Welsh; bascauda, Lat. Barbara de pictis venit bascauda Britannis. Martial.

Probably from bass; of which, vessels, were often made. See BASS.] A vessel made of twigs, rushes, or splinters, or some other slender bodies interwoven.

Here is a basket; he may creep in, and throw foul linen upon him, as if going to bucking.

Shakspeare.

Thus while I sung, my sorrows I deceiv'd,

And bending osiers into baskets weav'd.

Dryden.

Poor Peg was forc'd to go hawking and peddling; now and then carrying a basket of fish to the market.

Arbutnot.

BA'SKET-HILT. n. s. [from basket and hilt.] A hilt of a weapon so made as to contain the whole hand, and defend it from being wounded.

His puissant sword unto his side,

Near his undaunted heart, was ty'd:

With basket-hilt, that would hold broth,

And serve for fight and dinner both.

Hudibras.

There beef they often in their murrions stew'd,

And in their basket-hilts their beverage brew'd.

King.

BA'SKET-HILTED.* adj. A weapon having a basket-hilt.

Quin—declared it was not safe to sit down to a turtle-feast in one of the city-halls, without a basket-hilted knife and fork.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, 3. 253. n.

BA'SKET-WOMAN. n. s. [from basket and woman.] A woman that plies at markets with a basket, ready to carry home any thing that is bought.

BA'SQUISH.* adj. [from the Fr. Basque, a Biscaynn.] Relating to the language of the natives of Biscay.

In what purity and incommixture the language of that people stood, which were castally discovered in the heart of Spain, between the mountains of Castile, no longer ago than in the time of Duke D'Alva, we have not met with a good account any farther than that their words were Basquish or Cantabrian.

Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 136.

Laying hold on his lance; he said in bad Spanish, and wore Basquish. Get thee away, knight, in an ill hour.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, B. i. l. 8.

BASS. † n. s. [supposed by Junius to be derived, like basket, from some British word signifying a rush; but perhaps more properly written bass, from the French bosse, Dr. Johnson says. Dr. Jamieson has been informed, that bass properly signifies bast, (Teut. bast, bark,) or the bark of lime-tree, of which packing mats are made. But I differ from this account, inasmuch as our mats for packing furniture are certainly made of rushes; and our gardeners also call the soft sedge or rush, with which they bind plants, bass; which is the meaning of the word in the citation from Mortimer, though erroneously assigned by Dr. Johnson to a church mat.] A mat used in churches.

Having woollen yarn, bass mat, or such like, to bind them withal.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

BASS.* n. s. In Cumberland, a river-fish of the perch kind; in Hampshire, a sea-perch.

Excellent pike, and perch, here [at Keswick] called bass.

Gray, Letter to Dr. Warton.

To BASS. v. n. To sound in a deep tone.

The thunder

That deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounc'd

The name of Prosper: it did bass my trespass.

Shakspeare.

BASS. adj. [See BASE.] In musick, grave; deep.

BASS-RELIEF. † n. s. [from bas, and relief, raised work, Fr.] Sculpture, the figures of which do not stand out from the ground in their full proportion. Felibien distinguishes three kinds of bass-relief: in the first, the front figures appear almost with the full relief; in the second, they stand out no more than one half; and, in the third, much less, as in coins.

Great imbossed silver tables tell you, in bass-relief, his victories at sea.

Gray, Letter to West.

The bas-relieves at the back of the grand altar, representing passages in the life and actions of our Saviour, are wonderful samples of sculpture.

Memoirs of R. Cumberland, ii. 154.

BASS-VIOL. See BASE-VIOL.

On the sweep of the arch lies one of the Muses, playing on a bass-viol.

Dryden.

BA'SSA. † n. s. See BASHAW.

By the flight of Cicala and the bassa of Trepizond, the Persians kept the field.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 287.

BA'SSET. † n. s. [basset, Fr.] A game at cards, invented at Venice.

Gamesters would no more blaspheme; and lady Dabcheek's basset bank would be broke.

Dennis.

Another is for setting up an assembly for basset, where none shall be admitted to punt that have not taken the oaths.

Addison, Freehold, No. 2.

One O'Neal, a Roman Catholick lady, in St. James's street, had a ball and a basset on that day.

Atterbury, to Bp. Trelawney, Lett. 122.

BASSO RELIEVO. † [Ital.] See BASS-RELIEF.

The splendid icing of an immense historick plumb-cake, was embossed with a delicious basso-relievo of the destruction of Troy.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 492.

BASSO'N. } n. s. [basson, Fr.] A musical instrument of the wind kind, blown with a reed, and furnished with eleven holes, which are stopped like other large flutes; its diameter at bottom is nine inches, and it serves for the bass in concert of hautboys, &c. Trevoux.

BA'SSOCK. n. s. The same with bass.

BA'STARD. † n. s. [bastard, Welsh, of low birth; bastarde, Fr.]

1. Bastard, according to the civil and canon law, is a person born of a woman out of wedlock, or not married; so that, according to order of law, his father is not known. Ayliffe.

Him to the Lydian king Lycimnia bare,
And sent her boasted bastard to the war. Dryden.

2. Any thing spurious or false.

Words

But rooted in your tongue; bastards and syllables
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth. Shakspeare.

3. A kind of sweet wine. Coles, in his Dictionary, calls it raisin wine, 1677.

Score a pint of bastard. —
Then your brown bastard is your only drink. Shakspeare.

I was drunk with bastard,
Whose nature is to form things like itself,
Heavily and monstrous. Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

4. [In naval language.] The large sail of a galley, which will make way with a slack wind.

BA'STARD-DITTANY.* n. s. See DITTANY.

BA'STARD. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Begotten out of wedlock; illegitimate.

Pence is a very apoplexy, lethargy, insensible, a getter of more bastard children than war's a destroyer of men. Shakspeare.

2. Spurious; not genuine; supposititious; false; adulterate. In this sense, any thing which bears some relation or resemblance to another, is called spurious or bastard. —

You may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter. That were a kind of bastard hope indeed. Shakspeare.

Men who, under the disguise of publick good, pursue their own designs of power, and such bastard honours as attend them. Temple.

BA'STARD Cedar Tree. [called guazuma in the West Indies.]

To BA'STARD. v. n. [from the noun.] To convict of being a bastard; to stigmatize with bastardy.

She lived to see her brother beheaded, and her two sons deposed from the crown, bastarded in their blood, and cruelly murdered. Bacon.

BA'STARDISM.* n. s. [old Fr. bastardise.] The state or condition of a bastard. Cotgrave.

To BA'STARDIZE. † v. a. [from bastardise.] The old Fr. has also the verb abastardir.]

1. To convict of being a bastard.

The Lord never sufferth the ground articles and points of true religion to be abolished in his church, though they be in divers sorts, both within and without, disguised and bastardized. Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 142.

The Apostle bastardizeth those that suffer not. Feltham's Resolves, ii. 57.

2. To beget a bastard.

I should have been what I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Shakspeare.

BA'STARDLY.* adj. [from bastard.] Spurious; illegitimate.

A furtive simulation, and a bastardly kind of adoption. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 96.

So became he [Lot] the father of an accursed bastardly brood. Gataker, Spiritual Watch, p. 54.

BA'STARDLY. adv. [from bastard.] In the manner of a bastard; spuriously.

Good seed degenerates, and oft obeys
The soil's disease, and into cockle strays;
Let the mind's thoughts but be transplanted so
Into the body, and bastardly they grow. Donne.

BA'STARDY. n. s. [from bastard.] An unlawful state of birth, which disables the bastard, both according to the laws of God and man, from succeeding to an inheritance. Ayliffe.

Once she slandered me with bastardy;
But whether I be true begot, or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head. Shakspeare.

In respect of the evil consequents, the wife's adultery is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family.
No more of bastardy in heirs of crowns. Pope.

To BASTE. † v. a. participle pass. basted, or basten. [bastonner, Fr. Bazata, in the Armorick dialect, signifies to strike with a stick; from which perhaps baston a stick, and all its derivatives, or collaterals, may be deduced, Dr. Johnson says. But the derivation of baste is northern. Iceland. brysta, and bausta, to strike: Sued. bas, to beat. See Widergren, Su. Dict.]

1. To beat with a stick.

Quoth she, I grant it is in vain
For one that's basted to feel pain;
Because the pangs his bones endure,
Contribute nothing to the cure. Hudibras.

2. To drip butter, or any thing else, upon meat as it turns upon the spit; to moisten it; used also figuratively.

Sir, I think the meat wants what I have, basting.

The fat of roasted mutton falling on the birds, will serve to baste them, and so save time and butter. Swift.

You desire now to be basted with words well steeped in vinegar and salt; but I will be more charitable unto you, and leave bad speeches to black mouths.

Hayward, Answer to Dolman, K. iij.

3. To sew slightly; [baster, Fr. to stitch.]

The body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, and the guards are but slightly basted on neither. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

BA'STILE.* n. s. [Fr. bastille, low Lat. bastia.] A very old English substantive also, and it is curious that Dr. Johnson should have omitted it. "Bastyll of a castle," Prompt. Parv. 1514. Cotgrave interprets bastille, "a fortresse or castle furnished with towers and ditches;" and adds that "in Paris, la Bastille is as our Tower, the chief prison of the kingdom." The fortification of a castle; the castle itself.

Thus fortune fares her children to confound,
Which on her wheel their bastiles bravely beeld.

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 167.

Near which there stands

A bastile, built to imprison hands. Hudibras, ii. 1150.

BA'STIMENT, or BASTIME'NTO.* n. s. [old Fr. bastiment, a building.] A rampart.

Then the bastimentos never
Had our ford dishonour seen,
Nor the sea the sad reception
Of this gallant troop had seen. Glover, Flower's Ghost, st. 7.

BASTINA'DE. } n. s. bastonnade, Fr.

1. The act of beating with a cudgel; the blow given with a cudgel.

But this courtesy was worse than a bastinado to Zelmane;
so with rife eyes she bade him defend himself. Sidney.
And all those harsh and rugged sounds
Of bastinados, cuts and wounds. Hudibras.

2. It is sometimes taken for a Turkish punishment of beating an offender on the soles of his feet.

To BASTINA'DE. } r. a. [from the noun; bastonner,
To BASTINA'DO. } Fr.] To beat; to treat with the bastinado.

Here he words, Horace, able to bastinado a man's ears.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, A. v. S. 3.

Nick seized the longer end of the cudgel, and with it began to bastinado old Lewis, who had slunk into a corner, waiting the event of a squabble. Arbuthnot.

BA'STING. * n. s. [from baste.] The act of beating with a stick.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse.
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a-working. Swift.
I am not apt upon a wound,
Or trivial basting, to despond. Hudibras, iii. 596.

BA'STION. n. s. [bastion, Fr.] A huge mass of earth, usually faced with sods, sometimes with brick, rarely with stone, standing out from a rampart, of which it is a principal part, and was anciently called a bulwark. Harris.

Toward: but how? ay there's the question;
Fierce the assault, unarm'd the bastion. Prior.

BAT. } n. s. [bat, Sax. This word seems to have given rise to a great number of words in many languages: as, battre, Fr. to beat; baton, battle, beat, and others. It probably signified a weapon that did execution by its weight, in opposition to a sharp edge; whence whirlbat and brickbat.] A heavy stick or club, Dr. Johnson says; but the citation from Spenser agrees with the provincial usage of the word in Sussex, where a walking-stick is called a bat. The bat is also now a common word for what was once the stick in driving back the ball at the game of cricket.

The while he spake, lo, Judas, oon of the twelve, came, and with him a greet company with swordis and battis.

A handsome bat he held
On which he leaned, as one far in eld. Spenser, F. Q.
They were fried in arm chairs, and their bones broken with bats. Hakewill.

BAT. } n. s. [vespertilio, the etymology unknown, according to Dr. Johnson. Under the substantive back, I have shewn that the bat was so called by our ancestors. Dr. Jamieson informs us, that back and backie-bird is its name in Scotland. Its old denomination of rearmouse might occasion this name perhaps; though Dr. Jamieson omits not the Su. Goth. backa, and Dan. bakke. But of the change into bat I have yet to seek the reason.] An animal having the body of a mouse and the wings of a bat, but with feathers, but with a sort of skin sket-hilted. It lays no eggs, but brings alive, and suckles them. It never grows tame, feeds upon flies, insects, and fatty substances, such as candles, oil, and cheese; and appears only in the summer evenings, when the weather is fine. Calmet.

When owls do cry,
On a bat's back do I fly. Shakespeare.

But then grew reason dark; that fair star no more
Could the fair forms of good and truth discern;
Bats they became who eagles were before;

And this they got by their design to learn. Davies.
Some animals are placed in the middle betwixt two kinds, as bats, which have something of birds and beasts. Locke.

Where swallows in the winter season keep,
And how the drowsy bat and dormouse sleep. Gay.

BA'TOWLER. * n. s. [from bat and fowl.] One who delights in bat-fowling.

The birds of passage would in a dark night, immediately make for a light-house, and destroy themselves by flying with violence against it, as is well known to batfowlers.

Barrington's Essays, Ess. 4.

BA'TFOWLING. n. s. [from bat and fowl.] A particular manner of birdcatching in the night time, while they are at roost upon perches, trees, or hedges. They light torches or straw, and then beat the bushes; upon which the birds flying to the flames, are caught either with nets, or otherwise.

You would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.—We should so, and then go a bat-fowling. Shakespeare.

Bodies lighted at night by fire, must have a brighter lustre than by day; as sacking of cities, bat-fowling. Peachment.

BA'TABLE. } adj. [Fr. batable.] Disputable.

Batable ground seems to be the ground heretofore in question, whether it belonged to England or Scotland, lying between both kingdoms. Corwell.

BATCH. n. s. [from bake.]

1. The quantity of bread baked at a time.
The joiner puts the boards into ovens after the batch is drawn, or lays them in a warm stable. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Any quantity of any thing made at once, so as to have the same qualities.

Except he were of the same meal and batch. B. Jonson.

BA'TCHELOR. See BACHELOR.

BATE. } n. s. [perhaps contracted from debate, Dr. Johnson says; but it is the Sax. bate, contention.] Strife; contention; as, a make bate; which is the only example noticed by Dr. Johnson.

I thought to rule, but to obey to none;
And therefore fell I with my king at bate. Mir. for Magistrates, p. 547.

He breeds no bate. Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

BATE-BREEDING. * part. adj. [from bate and breed.] Breeding strife.

This sour informer, this bate-breeding spy.
Shakespeare, Ven. and Adonis.

To BATE. v. a. [contracted from abate.]

1. To lessen any thing; to retrench.
Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key,
With bated breath, and whispering humbleness,
Say this? Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

Nor envious at the sight will I forbear
My plenteous bowl, nor bate my plenteous cheer. Dryden.

2. To sink the price.
When the landholder's rent falls, he must either bate the labourer's wages, or not employ, or not pay him. Locke.

3. To lessen a demand.
Bate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

4. To cut off; to take away.
Bate but the last, and 'tis what I would say. Dryden, Sp. Friar.

To BATE. v. n.

1. To grow less.

Bardolph, am not I fallen away vastly? Shakespeare, Henry IV.
Do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my about me like an old lady's loose gown. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

2. To remit; with of before the thing.

Abate thy speed, and I will bate of mine. Dryden.

To BATE, as a hawk. * See To BAIT. But bate, from its derivation, is the right orthography.

BATE seems to have been once the preterite of bite, as Shakespeare uses biting faulchion; unless, in the following lines, it may be rather deduced from beat.

Yet there the steel staid not, but inly bate
Deep in his flesh, and open'd wide a red flood gate. Spenser.

BA'TEFUL. adj. [from bate and fall.] Contentious.

He knew her haunt, and haunted in the same,
And taught his sheep her sheep in food to thwart;
Which soon as it did bateful question frame,
He might on knees confess his guilty part. Sidney.

BA'TELESS. * adj. [from bate and less.] Not to be abated or subdued.

.. Haply that name of Chaste unhapp'ly set
This bateless edge on his keen appetite.
Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

BA'TEMENT. n. s. [from abatement.] Diminution; a term only used among artificers.

To abate, is to waste a piece of stuff; instead of asking how much was cut off, carpenters ask what batement that piece of stuff had. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

BA'TFUL. * adj. See To BATTEL. This word is of frequent occurrence in Drayton's Polyolbion, and means fruitful. Obsolete.

The batful pastures fenc'd, and most with quickset mound.
Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 3.
The batful meads on Severn's either side.
Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 14.

BATH. n. s. [bað, Sax.]

1. A bath is either hot or cold, either of art or nature.
Artificial baths have been in great esteem with the ancients, especially in complaints to be relieved by revulsion, as inveterate headaches, by opening the pores of the feet, and also in cutaneous cases. But the modern practice has greatest recourse to the natural baths; most of which abound with a mineral sulphur, as appears from their turning silver and copper blackish. The cold baths are the most convenient springs, or reservoirs, of cold water to wash in, which the ancients had in great esteem;
and the present age can produce abundance of noble cures performed by them. Quincy.

Why may not the cold bath, into which they plunged themselves, have had some share in their cure? Addison, Spect.

2. A state in which great outward heat is applied to the body, for the mitigation of pain, or any other purpose.

In the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames!
Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

Sleep, the birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. In chymistry, it generally signifies a vessel of water, in which another is placed that requires a softer heat than the naked fire. A sand heat is sometime called balneum siccum, or cinereum. [See BALNEUM.]

We see that the water of things distilled in water, which they call the bath, differeth not much from the water of things distilled by fire. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. A sort of Hebrew measure, containing the tenth part of an homer, or seven gallons and four pints, as a measure of liquid; and three pecks and three pints, as a measure of things dry. Calmer.

Ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah. Leviticus, v. 10.

To BATHE. v. d. [baðan, Sax.]

1. To wash, as in a bath.

Others, on silver lakes and rivers, bathed.
Their downy breast. Milton, P. L.
Chancing to bathe himself in the river Cydnus, through the excessive coldness of these waters, he fell sick, near unto death, for three days. South.

2. To supple or soften by the outward application of warm liquours.

Bathe them and keep their bodies soluble the while by dylters, and lenitive boluses. Wiscman, Surgery.
I'll bathe your wounds in tears for my offence. Dryden.

3. To wash any thing.

Phœnician Dido stood,
Fresh from her wound, her bosom bath'd in blood. Dryden.
Mars could in mutual blood the centaurs bathe,
And Jove himself give way to Cithia's wrath. Dryden.

To BATHE. v. n. To be in the water, or in any resemblance of a bath.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
I cannot tell. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick ribbed ice. Shakespeare.

The gallants dancing by the river side,
They bathe in summer, and in winter slide, * Waller.
But bathe, and, in imperial robes array'd,
Pay due devotions. Pope, Odys.

BA'THING. * n. s. [from bath.] The act of bathing.
Their bathings and anointings before their feasts.

BA'THIOS. * n. s. [Gr.] The art of sinking in poetry; the profound. Ironically spoken, in contradistinction to the sublime.

The taste of the bathos is implanted by nature itself in the soul of man; till, perverted by custom or example, he is taught, or rather compelled, to relish the sublime.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib. xpi. Sat. § 2.

BA'TING, or ABA'TING. prep. [from bate, or abate.]
This word, though a participle in itself, seems often used as a preposition. [Except.

The king, your brother, could not choose an advocate,
Whom I would sooner hear on any subject,
Bating that only one, his love, than you. Rowe.

If we consider children, we have little reason to think, that they bring many ideas with them, bating, perhaps, some faint ideas of hunger and thirst. Locke.

BA'TLET. †. n. s. [from bat, Dr. Johnson says. It is, perhaps, the abbreviation of the Span. battadore.
See BATTLEDOOR. In Lancashire the ballet is called a batril.] A square piece of wood, with a handle, used in beating linen when taken out of the buck.

I remember the kissing of her ballet, and the cow's dugs that her pretty chapt hands had milked. Shakespeare.

BATOON. †. n. s. [baston, or baton, Fr. formerly spelt
baston, and now most commonly baton.]

1. A staff or club.

We came close to the shore, and offered to land; but straightways we saw divers of the people with bastons in their hands, as it were, forbidding us to land. Bacon, New Atlantis.

That does not make a man the worse,
Although his shoulders with baton
Be claw'd and cudgell'd to some tune. Hudibras.

2. A truncheon or marshal's staff; a badge of military honour. Of this Dr. Johnson gives no example, but it is both an old English word, and has very recently been also happily exemplified.

Get me a baton; 'tis twenty times more courtlike, and less trouble.—And yet you want a sword.

Bacon, and R. Bacon Brothers.

I send this dispatch by my Aide-de-Camp, Captain Freemantle, whom I beg leave to recommend to your Lordship's protection: he will have the honour of laying at the feet of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent the colours of the 4th battalion of the 100th regiment, and Marshal Jourdan's baton, of a marshal of France, taken by the 87th regiment.

Lord Wellington, Gaz. Extr. July 3. 1813.

3. [In heraldry.] It is generally used, in the coat of arms, to denote illegitimate descent.

BA'TTABLE.* adj. See *To BATTEL.** Capable of cultivation.

Masinissa made many inward parts of Barbary and Numidia, before his time incult and horrid, fruitful and batstable.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

BA'TTAILANT.* n. s. [from the old Fr. batailleir, whence bataillers, combatants. Lacombe and Roquefort.] A combatant. Obsolete.

He thought—that those battailants, that fought so eagerly in the room, had slain him.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, B. 1. P. 3. ch. 3.

BA'TTAILOUS. adj. [from bataille, Fr.] Having the appearance of a battle; warlike; with a military appearance.

He started up, and did himself prepare

In sun-bright arms and battailous array.

Fairfax.

The French came foremost battailous and bold.

Fairfax.

A fiery region, stretch'd

In battailous aspect, and nearer view

Bristled with upright beaks innumerable

Of rigid spears and helmets throng'd.

Milton.

BATTA'LIA.† n. s. [battaglia, Ital. old Fr. bataille, division, corps de troupes.]

1. The order of battle.

The heavens 'gainst Siseria fought, the stars

Mov'd in battalia to those wars. Sandys, Divine Songs, p. 8.

Both armies being drawn out in battalia, that of the king's, trusting to their numbers, began the charge with great fury, but without any order.

Swift, Reign of King Henry I.

Next morning the king put his army into battalia. Clarendon.

2. The main body of an army in array.

Why, our battalia trebles that account.

Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

In three battalias does the king dispose

His strength, which all in ready order stand

And to each other's rescue near at hand.

May's Reign of K. Edw. III.

BATTA'LION. n. s. [bataillon, Fr.]

1. A division of an army; a troop; a body of forces.

It is now confined to the infantry, and the number is uncertain, but generally from five to eight hundred men. Some regiments consist of one battalion, and others are divided into two, three, or more.

When sorrows come, they come not single spies,

But in battalions.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

In this battalion there were two officers, called Therites and Pandarus.

Taller.

The pierc'd battalions disunited fall,

In heaps on heaps: one fate o'erwhelms them all.

Pope.

2. An army. This sense is not now in use.

Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.

—Why, our battalion trebles that account.

Shakspeare.

To BA'TTEL, or BA'TTIL.* v. a. [It may be from the Sax. batan, to bait. But Mr. Stevens says, that bat is an ancient English word for increase. Perhaps it is from the Goth. ga-batnan, to adventage. Hence batful, which see.] To render fertile.

Whose batling pastures fatten all my flocks.

Greene's Fr. Bacon.

Ashes are a marvellous improvement to battle [batte] barren land, by reason of the fixed salt which they contain.

Reynolds's

To BA'TTEL.* v. n.

1. To grow fat, or get flesh, as Sherwood defines this old verb.

The best advizement was, of bad, to let her

Sleep out her fill without encomberment;

For sleep, they said, would make her battill better.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 38.

2. To stand indebted in the college-books, at Oxford, for what is expended at the buttery in the necessities of eating and drinking. At Cambridge, size is used in a similar sense. Hence in the former university there is a student named a batteler or battler; in the latter, a sizer. See the substantive BATTEL.

BA'TTEL, or BA'TTLE.* adj. [from the verb.] Fruitful; fertile.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in over battle grounds, the fertile disposition whereof is good; yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth forth abundantly, through too much rankness, things less profitable; whereby that, which principally it should yield, being either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment, faileth.

Hooker, v. 3

BA'TTEL.* n. s. [from Sax. tælan or tellan, to count or reckon; having the prefix be.] The account of the expences of a student in any college in Oxford.

Bring my kinsman's battels with you, and you shall have money to discharge them. Letters, (Cherry to Hearne,) i. 119.

BA'TTELLER, or BA'TTLER.* n. s. [from battel.] A student at Oxford.

Though in the meanest condition of those that were wholly maintained [in the University of Oxford] by their parents, a battler, or semi-commoner, he was admitted to the conversation and friendship of the gentlemen-commoners.

Life of Bp. Kennett, p. 4.

To BA'TTEN.† v. a. [a word of doubtful etymology, Dr Johnson says. But see To BATTEL. And here the Goth ga-batnan, to profit, is more obvious.]

1. To fatten, or make fat; to feed plenteously.

We drove afield

Battening our flock with the fresh dews of night.

Milton.

2. To fertilize.

The meadows here, with battening ooze enrich'd,

Give spirit to the grass; three cubits high

The jointed herbage shoots.

Philips.

To BA'TTEN. v. n. To grow fat; to live in indulgence.

Follow your function, go and batten on cold bits.

Shakspeare.

Burnish'd and battening on their food, to show

The diligence of careful herds below.

Dryden.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,

Indulge his sloth, and batten on his sleep.

Dryden.

As at full length the pamper'd monarch lay,

Battening in ease, and slumbering life away.

Garth.

Two mice, full blithe and amicable,

Batten beside erle Robert's table.

Prior.

While paddling ducks the standing lake desire,

Or battening hogs roll in the sinking mire.

Gay, Pastorals.

BA'TTEN. n. s. A word used only by workmen.

A batten is a scantling of wood, two, three or four inches broad, seldom above one thick, and the length unlimited.

Moron.

To BATTER. † v. a. [battre, to beat, Fr. from the Lat. battere, Barret's Alvearie in V.]

To beat; to beat down; to shatter; frequently used of walls thrown down by artillery, or of the violence of engines of war.

To appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort. Ezekiel, xxi. 22.

These naughty words of hers
Have batter'd me like roaring cannon shot,
And made me almost yield upon my knees. Shakespeare.

Britannia there, the fort in vain
Had batter'd been with golden rain:
Thunder itself had fail'd to pass. Waller.

Be then, the naval stores, the nation's care,
New ships to build, and batter'd to repair. Dryden.

2. To wear with beating.

Crowds to the castle mounted up the street,
Battering the pavement with their coursers feet. Dryden.

If you have a silver saucepan for the kitchen use, let me advise you to batter it well; this will shew constant good house-keeping. Swift, Directions to the Cook.

3. Applied to persons; to wear out with service.

The batter'd veteran strumpets here.
Pretend at least to bring a modest car. Southern.

I am a poor old battered fellow, and I would willingly end my days in peace. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

As the same dame, experienc'd in her trade,
By names of toasts retails each batter'd jade. Pope.

To BATTER. v. n. A word used only by workmen.

The side of a wall, or any timber, that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter. Moxon.

BATTER. n. s. [from To batter.] A mixture of several ingredients beaten together with some liquor; so called from its being so much beaten.

One would have all things little, hence has try'd
Turkey poult fresh from th' egg in batter fry'd. King.

BATTERER. † n. s. [from batter.] He that batters.

Nor are these masters such batterers, or demolishers, of stately and elegant buildings.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 185.

BATTERING-RAM. * n. s. An ancient military engine.

See To BATTER, v. a. And RAM.

BATTERY. n. s. [from batter, or batterie, Fr.]

1. The act of battering.

Strong wars they make, and cruel battery bend,
'Gainst fort of reason, it to overthrow. Spenser, F. Q.

Earthly minds, like mud walls, resist the strongest batteries. Locke.

2. The instruments with which a town is battered, placed in order for action; a line of cannon.

Where is best place to make our batt'ry next?—
—I think at the north gate. Shakespeare, Henry VI.

It plants this reasoning and that argument, this consequence and that distinction, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way and passage into the obstinate inclosed truth. South.

See, and reverc th' artillery of heav'n,
Drawn by the gale, or by the tempest driven:
A dreadful fire the floating batt'ries make,
O'erturn the mountain, and the forest shake. Blackmore.

3. The frame, or raised work, upon which cannons are mounted.

4. [In law.] A violent striking of any man. In an action against a striker, one may be found guilty of the assault, yet acquitted of the battery. There may therefore be assault without battery; but battery always implies an assault. Chambers.

Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action and battery? Shakespeare.

Sir, quoth the lawyer, not to flatter ye,
You have as good and fair a battery,
As heart can wish, and need not shame
The proudest man alive to claim. Hudibras.

BATTISH. † adj. [from bat.] Resembling a bat.

To be out late in a battish humour. Gentleman Instructed.
She clasp'd his limbs, by impious labour tir'd,
With battish limbs. Vernon, Ovid Met. B. 8.

BATTLE. n. s. [bataille, Fr.]

1. A fight an encounter between opposite armies.

We generally say a battle of many, and a combat of two.

The English army that divided was
Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one;
And means to give you battle presently. Shakespeare.

The battle done, and they within our power,
She'll never see his pardon. Shakespeare.

The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. Eccles. ix. 11.

So they joined battle, and the heathen being discomfited fled into the plain. Macbeth, iv. 14.

2. A body of forces, or division of an army.

The king divided his army into three battles; whereof the vanguard only, with wings, came to fight. Bacon.

3. The main body, as distinct from the van and rear.

Angus led the avant-guard, himself followed with the battle a good distance behind, and after came the arrier. Hayward.

4. We say to join battle; to give battle.

To BATTLE. † v. n. [battailer, Fr.] To join battle; to contend in fight.

They have also a famous new worke, called Joh. Eckins' postyll, which battelleth for the holy father's primacye hard.

Bale's Yet a Course at the Romish Foxe, fol. 57.

'Tis ours by craft and by surprize to gain:

'Tis yours to meet in arms and battle in the plain. Prior.

We received accounts of ladies battling it on both sides. Addison.

I own, he hates an action base,
His virtues batt'ling with his place. Swift.

BATTLE-ARRAY. n. s. [See BATTLE and ARRAY.]

Array, or order of battle.

Two parties of fine women, placed in the opposite side boxes, seemed drawn up in battle-array one against another. Addison.

BATTLE-AXE. n. s. A weapon used anciently, probably the same with a bill.

Certain tinnors, as they were working, found spear heads, battle-axes, and swords of copper, wrapped in linen clouts. Carew.

BATTLEDOOR. † n. s. [so called from door, taken for a flat board, and battle, or striking, Dr. Johnson says. But it may be from the Span. batador, a washing beetle, with which laundresses beat their linen.] An instrument with a handle and a flat board, used in play to strike a ball, or shuttlecock.

Play-things, which are above their skill, as tops, gigs, battle-doors, and the like, which are to be used with labour, should indeed be procured them. Locke.

BATTLEMENT. n. s. [generally supposed to be formed from battle, as the parts from whence a building is defended against assailants; perhaps only corrupted from batiment, Fr.] A wall raised round the top of a building, with embrasures, or interstices, to look through, to annoy an enemy.

And fixed his head upon our battlements. Shakespeare, Macb.

Thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thy house, if any man fall from thence. Deut. xxii. 8.

Through this we pass
Up to the highest battlement, from whence
The Trojans threw their darts. Denham.

Their standard planted on the battlement,
Despair and death among the soldiers sent. Dryden.

No, I shan't envy him, who'er he be,
That stands upon the battlements of state;
I'd rather be secure than great.
The mighty mallet does resounding blows,
Till the proud battlements her towers inclose.

Notre.

Gay.

BATTLEMENTED.* part. adj. [from battlement.]
Secured by battlements.

So broad [the wall of Babylon] that six chariots could well drive together at the top, and so battlemented that they could not fall. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 228.

BA'TTLING.* n. s. [from battle.] Conflict; encounter; battle.

The livid Fury spread —

She blaz'd in omens, swell'd the groaning winds
With wild surmises, battlings, sounds of war.

Thomson, Liberty, p. 4.

BATTO'LOGIST.* n. s. [from battology, Fr. battalogue, "auteur ennuyeux et insipide," Lacombe.] One who repeats the same thing in speaking or writing.
Should a truly dull battologist, that is of Ausonius's character, quam pauca, quam diu loquuntur Attici? that an hour by the glass speaketh nothing; should such a one, I say, and a deserving eminent preacher, change sermons; people would not only come thicker, but return satisfied.

Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 209.

To BATTO'LOGIZE.* v. a. [from battology.] To repeat needlessly the same thing.

After the eastern mode, they wagged their bodies, howing their heads, and battologizing the names Allough whoddaw and Mahumet very often. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 191.

After they have battologized Lla y-lala, or Hilula, i. e. praises, they iterate another [prayer]. Ibid, p. 324.

BATTOLOGY.* n. s. [Fr. battologie, from the Gr.
Βαττολογία which means "to do as Battus did, and which is described by Suidas in these words Βαττολογία
ἢ Πολυλογία, battology is multiplying of words, &c.
ἀπὸ Βαττε, κ. τ. λ. taken from one Battus, who made long hymns, consisting of many lines, full of tauto-logies." Hammond on S. Matt. vi. 7.] This is an old English substantive, which Bullokar defines the "often repeating one and the same thing."

That heathenish battology of multiplying words.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

BA'TTY. adj. [from bat.] Belonging to a bat.

Till o'er their brows death counterfeiting sleep,
With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep. Shakspeare.

BA'VAROY.† n. s. [probably from a Bavarian fashion of dress, Bavarois, Fr.] A kind of cloak, or surtout.

Let the loop'd bavaroy the fop embrace,
Or his deep cloke be spatter'd o'er with lace. Gay.

BAUBE.E.† n. s. A word used in Scotland, and the northern counties, for a halfpenny. This coin, bearing the head of James the Sixth, king of Scotland, when young, has been supposed by some to have been therefore called baubee, as exhibiting the figure of a baby. But Dr. Jamieson says, this is a great mistake; the name, as well as the coin, being known before that prince's reign. Mr. Pinkerton derives it from the Fr. bas-billon. "The billon coin worth six pennies Scottish, and called bas-piece, from the first questionable shape in which it appeared, being of what the French called bas-billon, or the worst kind of billon, was now [in the reign of James VI.] struck in copper, and termed by the Scottish pronunciation, baubee."
Essay on Medals, vol. 2. p. 109.

Though in the drawers of my japan bureau,

To lady Gripeall I the Cæsars show,

'Tis equal to her ladyship or me

A copper Otho, or a Scotch baubee. Bramston's Man of Taste.

BA'UBLE. See BAUBLE.

BA'VIN.† n. s. [of uncertain derivation, Dr. Johnson says. Some have referred to it the Fr. fevin, (a word which I find nowhere, from feu, fire. Bavin or faggot is rendered by the Fr. foiace, and fontes are the smallest sort of bavins. V. Coigrave.
Bavin, Dr. Johnson has elsewhere observed, means brushwood, which, fired, burns fiercely, but is soon out. In Florio's Ital. Dict. (1591) it is clearly a little faggot: "There is no fire: — make a little blaze with a bavin." In the Kentish dialect, bavin is a brush, a faggot.] A stick like those bound up in faggots; a piece of waste wood.

He rambled up and down

With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakspeare, Henry IV.

For moulded to the life in clouts,

Th' have pick'd from dunghills thereabouts,

He's mounted on a hazel bavin,

A cropp'd malignant baker gave him.

Hudibras.

The truncheons make billet, bavin, and coals. Mortimer.

To BAULK. See BALK.

BA'WBLE.† n. s. [Baubellum, in barbarous Latin, signified a jewel, or any thing valuable, but not necessary. Omnia baubella sua dedit Othoni, Hoveden. Probably from beau, Fr. Such is Dr.
Johnson's etymology. The word may also be traced to the old Fr. baubêlo, babiole, a plaything. Ital. babbolo. Bauble is now mostly used, and rightly, according to the derivation. It was formerly written babel, so late indeed as by Bp.
Bramhall.] A gew-gaw; a trifling piece of finery;
a thing of more show than use; a trifle. It is in general, whether applied to persons or things, a term of contempt, Dr. Johnson says. This, I may add, was doubtless occasioned by the word being, in ancient times, commonly coupled with a licensed jester, a fool; the bauble being a little truncheon, with a head carved on it, which such an one usually carried in his hand, as the mock ensign of his office; in which sense the sour protector of England, Oliver Cromwell, absurdly called the speaker's mace, as Blackstone also has observed, a "fool's bauble," when he forcibly turned out the rump-parliament, and bade the soldiers take away this object of his absurd acrimony.

The kynges foole

Sate by the fire upon a stoole,

As he that with his babel plaide, Gower, Conf. Am. h. 7.

She haunts me in every place. I was on the sea bank with some Venetians, and thither comes the bauble, and falls me thus about my neck. Shakspeare, Othello.

It is a paltry cap,

A custard coffin, a bauble, a silken pie. Shakspeare.

If, in our contest, we do not interchange useful notions, we shall traffick toys and baubles. Government of the Tongue.

This shall be writ to fright the fry away,
Who draw their little baubles, when they play. Dryden.

Here is a contradiction deserves a bell and a babel.

Bp. Bramhall, Schism guarded, (1658) p. 373.

A lady's watch needs neither figures nor wheels;

'Tis enough that 'tis loaded with baubles and scals. Prior,

Our author then, to please you in your way,

Presents you now a bauble of a play,

In glingling rhyme.

Granville.

A prince, the moment he is crown'd,

Inherits every virtue round,

As emblems of the sovereign power;

Like other baubles of the Tower.

Swift.

BA'WBLING. adj. [from babble.] Trifling; contemptible: a word not now in use.

A babbling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprizable;
With which such scuffling grapple did he make
With the most noble bottom of our fleet.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

BA'WCOCK. n. s. [perhaps from beau, or baude, and cock.] A familiar word, which seems to signify the same as fine fellow.

Why, how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, chuck?

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

BAWD. † n. s. [baude, old Fr. Dr. Johnson says. But here the Welsh baw, dirt, barwai dirty, whence barwddyn, a base or dirty fellow, is derived, must not be omitted. Chaucer and our elder writers use bawdy and bawd in the sense of filthy, naughty. Hence the application to the infamous character which our word denotes. See To BAWD, and BAWDY.] A procurer, or procuress; one that introduces men and women to each other, for the promotion of debauchery.

He [Pandarus] is named Troilus' bawd;

Of that name he is sure,

Whiles the world shall dure.

Skelton's Poems, p. 235.

If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds.

Shakespeare.

This commodity,

This bawd, this broker, this all changing word,

Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid.

Shakespeare.

Our author calls colouring lena sororis, the bawd of her sister design; she dresses her up, she paints her, she procures for the design, and makes lovers for her.

Dryden.

To BAWD.* v. a. [from bawd.] To foul; to dirty.

Her shoone smered with tallow

Gresed upon dyrt,

That baudeth her skyr.

Skelton's Poems, p. 126.

To BAWD. v. n. [from the noun.] To procure; to provide gallants with strumpets.

Leucippe is agent for the king's lust, and bawds, at the same time, for the whole court.

Spectator, No. 266.

And in four months a batter'd harridan;

Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,

To bawd for others, and go shares with punk.

Swift.

BA'WBORN.* part. adj. [from bawd and born.]

Descended of a bawd.

Bawd is he, doubtless; and of antiquity too; bawd-born.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

BA'WDILY. adv. [from bawdy.] Obscenely.

BA'WDINESS. † n. s. [from bawd; and defined by our old lexicographers, though unnoticed by Dr. Johnson, "greasiness, or filthiness, of apparel or body." V. Barret's Alv. and Bullokar's Expos. of Hard Words.] We now use it only in the sense of obscenity or lewdness.

BA'WDRIK. n. s. [See BALDRICK.] A belt.

Fresh garlands too, the virgins temples crown'd;

The youths gilt swords wore at their thighs, with silver bawdricks bound.

Chapman's Iliad.

BA'WDRY. † n. s. [contracted from bawdery, the practice of a bawd; Dr. Johnson says; but it was formerly written and pronounced with three syllables.

1. A wicked practice of procuring and bringing whores and rogues together.

Ayliffe.

Cheating and bawdry go together in the world. L'Estrange.

Obscenity; unchaste language.

Rhymed in rules of stewish ribaldry,

Teaching experimental bawdry.

Bp. Hall's Satires, i. 9.

Prythee say on; he's for a jig or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I have no salt: no bawdry doth mean:

For witty, in his language, is obscene.

Ben Jonson.

It is almost certain that barefaced bawdry is the poorest pretence to wit imaginable.

Dryden.

BAWDY.* adj. [from bawd.]

1. Filthy; dirty; agreeably to its derivation.

Bawd.

His overest sloppee it is not worth a mite

As in effect to him, so mote I go;

It is all bawdy, and to-tore also.

Why is thy lord so stutish, I thee preye,

And is of power better cloth to buye?

Chaucer, Chan. Ycoman's Prol.

And in a tawny tabard, of twelve winter age,

All torn and bawdy.

Vision of Piers Plowman.

2. Obscene; unchaste: generally applied to language.

The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets,

Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,

And will not hear't.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Only they,

That come to hear a merry bawdy play,

Will be deceiv'd.

Shakespeare.

Not one poor bawdy jest shall dare appear;

For now the batter'd veteran strumpets here

Pretend at least to bring a modest ear.

Souther.

BA'WDY-HOUSE. n. s. A house where traffick is made by wickedness and debauchery.

Has the pope lately shut up the bawdy-houses, or does he continue to lay a tax upon sin?

Dennis.

To BAWL. † v. n. [balo, Lat. according to Dr. Johnson. It has probably been adopted by us from the old Fr. baula, to cry for help. Similar also is the Icelandick bacla, baula, and the Germ. bellen, to roar.]

1. To hoot; to cry with great vehemence, whether for joy or pain. A word always used in contempt.

They bawled for freedom in their senseless mood,

And still revolt, when truth would set them free.

Milton.

To cry the cause up heretofore,

And bawled the bishops out of door.

Hudibras.

Through the thick shades th' eternal scribbler bawls,

And shakes the statues on their pedestals.

Dryden.

From his lov'd home no lure him can draw;

The senate's mad decrees he never saw;

Nor heard at bawling bars corrupted law.

Dryden.

Loud menaces were heard, and foul disgrace

And bawling infamy, in language base,

Till sense was lost in sound, and silence fled the place.

Dryden, Fables.

So on the tuneful Margarita's tongue

The list'ning nymphs, and ravish'd heroes hung;

But cits and fops the heav'n-born musick blame,

And bawled, and hiss, and damn her into fame.

Smith.

I have a face of orderly elderly people, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am only giddy and would sleep.

Swift.

2. To cry as a froward child.

A little child was bawling, and a woman chiding it.

L'Estrange.

If they were never suffered to have what they cried for, they would never, with bawling and peevishness, contend for mastery.

Locke.

My husband took him in, a dirty boy; it was the business of the servants to attend him, the rogue did bawl and make such a noise.

Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

To BAWL. v. a. To proclaim as a crier.

It grieved me, when I saw labours which had cost so much, bawled about by common hawkers.

Swift.

BAWN.* n. s. In Ireland, a bawn is said to be a place near the house, inclosed with mud or stone-walls, to keep the cattle from being stolen in the night. See the note on Swift's poem "whether Hamilton's bawn should be turned into a barrack or a malt-house." But originally, it seems to be an inclosure of a different kind; a fortification.

B A Y

These round hills, and square bawns, which you see so strongly trenched and throwne up, were (they say) at first ordained for the same purpose, that people might assemble themselves therein, and therefore aunciently they were called folk-motes. Warr is a place of people, to meete, or talke of any thing that concerned any difference betweene parties and towneships. Spenser on Ireland.

BA'WREL. n. s. A kind of hawk.

BA'WSIN. † n. s. In old English, a badger. In the passage of Drayton, which I cite for the illustration of this word, the late Bishop Percy preferred the interpretation of bazane, Fr. meaning sheep's leather, dressed and coloured red. But there can be no occasion to alter the meaning of badger's skin; which certainly was in use for apparel, as appears in our translation of the Bible, Ezek. xvi. 10. "I clothed thee also with broidered work, and shod thee with badger's-skin." Dict.

His mittens were of bawzen's skinne.

Drayton's Dowsabell, (1593,) st. 10.

Why scorn you me?

Because I am a herdsman, and feed swine! —

I am a lord of other geer! this fine

Smooth bawson's cub, the young gliee of a gray.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

BAY. † adj. [badius, Lat. baye, bai, rouge-brun, old Fr. baio, Ital.] A bay horse is what is inclining to a chesnut; and this colour is various, either a light bay or a dark bay, according as it is less or more deep. There are also coloured horses, that are called dappled bays. All bay horses are commonly called brown by the common people. "All bay horses have black manes, which distinguish them from the sorrel, that have red or white manes. There are light bays and gilded bays, which are somewhat of a yellowish colour. The chesnut bay is that which comes nearest to the colour of the chesnut." Farrier's Dict.

My lord, you gave good words the other day of a bay courser I rode on. 'Tis yours because you liked it.

Shakspeare.

Poor Tom! proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting horse over four inch'd bridges.

Shakspeare.

His colour'd grey,

For beauty dappled, or the brightest bay.

Dryden.

BAY. † n. s. [baye, Dutch, according to Dr. Johnson; but it is rather from the Sax. bȳzan, to bend; a bay being incurvated, as it were, like a bow.]

1. An opening into the land, where the water is shut in on all sides, except at the entrance.

A reverend Syracusan merchant,

Who put unluckily into this bay.

Shakspeare.

We have also some works in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore for some works, wherein is required the air and vapour of the sea.

Bacon.

Hail, sacred solitude! from this calm bay

I view the world's tempestuous sea.

Roscommon.

Here in a royal bed the waters sleep,

When tir'd at sea, within this bay they creep.

Dryden.

Some of you have bay.

Dryden.

2. A pen or pond-head raised to keep in store of water for driving a mill.

BAY. n. s. [abboy, Fr. signifies the last extremity; as, Innocence est aux abbois, Boileau: Innocence is in the most distress. It is taken from abboy, the barking of a dog at hand, and thence signifies the condition of a stag when the hounds were almost upon him.]

B A Y

1. The state of any thing surrounded by enemies, and obliged to face them by an impossibility of escape.

This ship for fifteen hours, sat like a stag among hounds at the bay, and was sieged and fought with, in turn, by fifteen great ships. Bacon, War with Spain.

Fair liberty, pursu'd and meant a prey.

To lawless power, here turn'd, and stood at bay.

Denham.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;

Embolden'd by despair, he stood at bay;

Resolv'd on death, he dissipates his fears,

And bounds aloft against the pointed spears.

Dryden.

2. Some writers, perhaps mistaking the meaning, have used bay as referred to the assailant, for distance beyond which no approach could be made.

All, fir'd with noble emulation, strive;

And, with a storm of darts, to distance drive

The Trojan chief; who held at bay, from far

On his Vulcanian orb, sustain'd the war.

Dryden.

We have now, for ten years together, turned the whole force and expence of the war, where the enemy was best able to hold us at a bay.

Swift.

BAY. † n. s. [Germ. bau.]

1. In architecture, a term used to signify the magnitude of a building; as if a barn consists of a floor and two heads, where they lay corn, they call it a barn of two bays. These bays are from fourteen to twenty feet long, and floors, from ten to twelve broad, and usually twenty feet long, which is the breadth of the barn. Builder's Dict.

If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent the fairest house in it after threepence a bay. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

There may be kept one thousand bushels in each bay, there being sixteen bays, each eighteen feet long, about seventeen wide, or three hundred square feet in each bay. Mortimer.

2. In building also, used to signify any kind of opening in walls; as a door, window, or even chimney.

Chambers.

BAY Tree. † [laurus, Lat.] The tree, as is generally thought, which is translated laurel, and of which honorary garlands were anciently made.

I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree.

Psalms xxxvii. 35.

Like thunder 'gainst the bay,

Whose lightning may enclose but never stay

Upon his charmed branches.

Fletcher, Faith. Shepherdess.

BAY. † n. s.

1. A poetical name for an honorary crown or garland, bestowed as a prize for any kind of victory or excellence.

I — play'd to please myself, on rustick reed,

Nor sought for bay, the learned shepherd's meed.

Browne, Brit. Poet. l. 1.

Beneath his reign shall Eusden wear the bays.

Pope.

2. Figuratively, learning itself.

Strife arose betwixt them, whether they

Her beauty should extol, or she admire their bay.

Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 15.

To BAY. v. n. [abboyer, Fr.]

1. To bark as a dog at a thief, or at the game which he pursues.

And all the while she stood upon the ground,

The wakeful dogs did never cease to bay.

Spenser, F. Q.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;

The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid;

She rent the heaven with loud laments, imploring aid.

Dryden, Fab.

BAY

To encompass about; to shut in. [from bay, an inclosed place.]
And bay about the stake, the stake, Shakespeare.
I was with I bay with barking; to bark at.
Wl the bay once,
With house of Sparta. bay'd the bear

If he should do so, Shakespeare.
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welch
Baying him at the heels.
He hath set forth the book again, with all the authorities at large in the margin, in the author's own words, and hath answered all those that bayed at it.

Bp. Bedell, Letters, &c. p. 387.

Bay Salt. † [Bay salt, according to Butler in his Eng. Grammar of 1633, derives its name from Bayonne in France.] Salt made of sea water, which receives its consistence from the heat of the sun, and is so called from its brown colour. By letting the sea water into square pits or basons, its surface being struck and agitated by the rays of the sun, it thickens at first imperceptibly, and becomes covered over with a slight crust, which hardening by the continuance of the heat, is wholly converted into salt. The water in this condition is scalding hot, and the crystallization is perfected in eight, ten, or at most fifteen days. Chambers.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give sound, which we call crackling, puffing, spitting, &c. as in bay salt and bay leaves cast into fire. Bacon.

Bay Window. † A window jutting outward, and therefore forming a kind of bay or hollow in the room; or from its resemblance to a bay or opening into the land, which is generally of a circular form.
Such windows are, in our old dictionaries, translated into the Latin cave fenestrae.

It hath bay windows transparent as barricadoes. Shakespeare.

Bay Yarn. A denomination sometimes used promiscuously with woollen yarn. Chambers.

BA'YARD. † n. s. [from the old Fr. bayart, bayarde;
"whence we term a bay horse, a bayard."
Cotgrave.]

1. A bay horse in general; and in particular a noted blind horse in the old romances, whence perhaps the proverbial expression, "as bold as blind Bayard."

Who so bold as blind bayard? Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 382.
Never was there any bayard more bold in his leap, than this suggerer hath been lavish in his asseveration.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, p. 76.

This he presumes to do, being a bayard, who never had the soul to know what conversing means, but as his provender and the familiarity of the kitchen schooled his conceptions.

Milton, Colasterion.

Man that gapes or gazes earnestly at a thing; a staring beholder; an unmannerly beholder. [Fr. bayard,
Cotgrave.]

How now, what mates, what bayards have we here?

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

BAY'ARDLY. * adj. [from bayard.] Blind; stupid.

A blind credulity, a bayardly confidence, or an imperious insolence. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 143.

True and manly religion is no cold and comfortless thing; it is not a luke-warm notionalty; not a formal and bayardly round of duties; but is lively, vigorous, and sparkling.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference, P. 3.

BAYONET. † n. s. [bayonette, Fr.] Voltaire says that this instrument came from Bayonne, and he ascribes the invention of it to the "demon de la guerre"
Henriade, c. 8.] A short sword or dagger fixed at

VOL. I.

the end of a musket, by which the foot hold off the barrel. This was not its former use or fashion; for Cotgrave describes it as "a kind of small flat packet dagger, furnished with knives; or a great knife to hang at the girdle, like a dagger."

One of the black spots is long and slender, and resembles dagger of bayonet. Woodward.

To BAYONET. * v. a. [from the noun.] To drive forward as with the point of the bayonet.

You send troops to subre and bayonet us into submission.

Burke.

BAZAR. * n. s. [Persian buzzar, the market; now written bazar, in the commercial language of the East Indies.] A constant market; a kind of covered market-place.

This noble city [Cashan] is in compass not less than York or Norwich, about four thousand families being accounted in her.
The houses are fairly built—the buzzar is spacious and uniform, furnished with silks, damasks, and carpets of silks.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. (ed. 1797.) p. 223.

BAYZE. See BAIZE.

BDELLIUM. n. s. [βδέλλον: βδρלה.] An aroma-tick gum brought from the Levant, used as a medicine, and a perfume. Bdellium is mentioned both by the ancient naturalists and in Scripture; but it is doubtful whether any of these be the same with the modern kind. Chambers.

This bdeillum is a tree of the bigness of an olive, whereof Arabia hath great plenty, which yieldeth a certain gum, sweet to smell to, but bitter in taste, called also bdeillum. The Hebrews take the loadstone for bdeillum. Rulegh.

To BE. v. n. [This word is so remarkably irregular, that it is necessary to set down many of its terminations.

Present. I am, thou art, he is, we are, &c.

eam, eam, if, apion, Sax.

Preter. I was, thou wast or wert, he was, we were, &c.

The conjunctive mood.

I be, thou beest, he be, we be, &c.

beo, biȝ, beo, beon, Sax.]

1. To have some certain state, condition, quality, or accident; as, the man is wise.

Seventy senators died

By their prescriptions, Cicero being one. Shakespeare.

He hath to-night been in unusual pleasure. Shakespeare.

Be what thou hop'st to be, or what thou art, Shakespeare.

Resign to death, it is not worth enjoying. Shakespeare.

Be but about

To say she is a goodly lady, and

The justice of your hearts will add thereto, Shakespeare.

'Tis pity she is not honest, honourable. Shakespeare.

Let them shew the former things what they be, that we may consider them. Isaiah, xli. 22.

Therefore be sure,

Thou, when the bridegroom with his feastful friends

Passes to bliss at the mid hour of night,

Hast gain'd thy entrance, virgin wise and pure.

It is not easy to discern what such men would be at.

Stilling fleet.

To say a man has a clear idea of quantity, without knowing how great it is, is to say, he has the clear idea of the number of the sands, who knows not how many they be. Locke.

2. It is the auxiliary verb by which the verb passive is formed.

The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees

Is left this vault to brag of. Shakespeare.

3. To exist; to have existence.

The times have been,

That when the brains were out the man would die. Shakespeare.

Here cease, ye powers, and let your vengeance end,

Troy is no more, and can no more offend. Dryden.

To be contents his natural desire;
He asks no angel's wing, nor seraph's fire.
4. To have something by appointment or rule.
If all political power be derived only from Adam, and be to descend only to his successive heirs, by the ordinance of God, and divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government. Locke.
5. Læt BE. Do not meddle with; leave untouched.
Let be, said he, my prey. Dryden.
BE.* Used, in our old language, for the preposition by, and also for the participle been.
BE.* Much used in composition; as, bespeak, *be*fall, become; which is agreeable to the Saxon manner, be, as well as for, as, and to, being often prefixed to Saxon words, especially verbs and participles of the past time.
BE-ALL.* n. s. [from be and all.] All that is to be done.

If the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
With his surcease, success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here.

Shakspeare, Macb. i. 7.

BEACH.* n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. Serenius gives the Goth. backar, signifying the same as beach.] The shore; particularly that part that is dashed by the waves; the strand.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice.

Deep to the rocks of hell, the gather'd beach
They fastened, and the mole immense wrought on,
Over the foaming deep.

Milton, P. L.

They find the washed amber further out upon the beaches and shores, where it has been longer exposed.

Woodward.

BEACHED. adj. [from beach.] Exposed to the waves.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover.

Shakspeare.

BEACHY. adj. [from beach.] Having beaches.

The beachy girdle of the ocean
Too wide for Neptune's hips.

Shakspeare.

BEACON. n. s. [beacen, Sax. from bean, a signal, and beanian, whence beckon, to make a signal.]

1. Something raised on an eminence, to be fired on the approach of an enemy, to alarm the country.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;

As two broad beacons set in open fields,
Send forth their flames.

Spenser, F. Q.

Modest doubt is called
The beacon of the wise.

Shakspeare.

The king seemed to account of Perkin as a May-game; yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts, and erecting more where they stood too thin.

Bacon.

No flaming beacons cast their blaze afar,
The dreadful signal of invasive war.

Gay.

2. Marks erected, or lights made in the night, to direct navigators in their courses, and warn them from rocks, shallows, and sand-banks.

BEACONAGE.* n. s. Money paid for the maintaining of beacons.

Minshew.

A suit for beaconage of a beacon standing on a rock in the sea may be brought in the court of admiralty.

Blackstone.

BEACONED.* adj. [from beacon.] Having a beacon.

O'er the broad downs, a novel race,
The lambs with faltering pace,
With eager bleatings fill

The beacon that skirts the beacon'd hill.

T. Warton, Ode

BEAD.* n. s. [bebe, prayer, Saxon, from the Goth. bidan.]

1. Small globes or balls of glass or pearl, or other substance, strung upon a thread, and used by the Romanists to count their prayers; from whence the phrase to tell beads, or to be at one's beads, is to be at prayer, Dr. Johnson says: but the old expression, which also continued long in use, was to bid their beads. And the primary meaning of bead, i. e. prayer, is noted in our oldest dictionaries, without any references to the balls of glass.

Beware therefore, and bid thy beads,
And do nothing in holy church,
But that thou might by reason worche. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 3.
Saying over a number of beads not understood or minded on.

Injunctions to the Clergy, (1541.)

That aged dame, the lady of the place,
Who all this while was busy at her beads.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thy voice I seem in every hymn to hear,
With every bead I drop too soft a tear.

Pope.

2. Little balls worn about the neck for ornament.

With scarfs and fans, and double charge of bravery,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all such knavery.

Shakspeare.

3. Any globular bodies.

Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow.

Shakspeare.

Several yellow lumps of amber, almost like beads, with one side flat, had fastened themselves to the bottom.

Boyle.

BEAD Tree. [Azedarach.] A plant.

BEADLE.* n. s. [bydel, bædel, Sax. a messenger; badel, old Fr. bedel, Sp. bedela, Basque; bedelle, Dutch. Often written bedel.]

1. A messenger or servitor belonging to a court, or public body. In the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge they are academical officers, and are distinguished as esquire and yeomen beadles.

If the university would bring in some bachelors of Art to be yeomen-bedels, which are well grounded, and towardly to serve that press as composers:—they, which thrived well and did good service, might after be preferred to be esquire-bedels; and so that press would ever train up able men for itself.

Abp. Laud, Hist. of his Chan. at Ox. p. 132.

He procured an addition of 20*l.* per annum to each of the inferior beadles; he restored the practice of the vice-chancellor's court; and added several other improvements in the academical economy.

Warton, Life of Bathurst, p. 89.

2. A petty officer in parishes, whose business it is to punish petty offenders.

A dog's obey'd in office.
Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand;
Why dost thou lash that whore?

Shakspeare.

They ought to be taken care of in this condition, either by the beadle or the magistrate.

Speator.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back.

Prior.

BEADLESHIP.* n. s. [from beadle.] The office of a beadle.

There was convocation for the election of his successor in the beadleship.

A. Wood, Ath. Ox. Fast. ii. 272.

BEADROLL.* n. s. [from bead and roll.] A catalogue of those who are to be mentioned at prayers; a list, simply.

The king, for the better credit of his espials abroad, did use to have them cursed by name amongst the beadroll of the king's enemies.

Baron, Henry VII.

So, in the high descent of that South-Saxon king,
We, in the bead-roll here of our religious, bring Wise Ethelwald.

Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 11.

He left me out of the bead-roll of some rining paper-blotters that he called poets.

Harington, Br. View of the Church, p. 168.

Through what fairy land, would the man deduce this perpetual beadroll of uncontradicted episcopacy?

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

BE'ADSMAN. n. s. [from bead and man.] A man employed in praying generally in praying for another.

An old hospital,
In which seven beadsmen had vowed all
Their life to service of heaven's king. Spenser, F. Q.

In thy danger
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer;
For I will be thy beadsmān, Valentine. Shakspeare.

BE'ADSWOMAN. n. s. [from bead and woman.] A woman who prays for, or thanks, another.

'Twas such a bounty
And honour due to your beadswoman,
I know not how to owe it, but to thank you.
B. Jonson, Sad Shep. ii. 6.

BE'AGLE. n. s. [bigle, Fr.] A small hound with which hares are hunted.

The rest were various huntings.
The graceful goddess was array'd in green;
About her feet were little beagles seen,
That watch'd with upward eyes the motions of their queen.
Dryden, Fables.

To plains with well-bred beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare. Pope.

BEAK. n. s. [bec, Fr. pig, Welsh; beg, Bret. beik, beck, Dutch.]

1. The bill or horny mouth of a bird.
His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloys his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

He saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing. Milton, P. R.

The magpye, lighting on the stock,
Stood chattering with incessant din,
And with her beak gave many a knock. Swift.

2. A piece of brass like a beak, fixed at the end of the ancient galleys, with which they pierced their enemies. It can now be used only for the fore-part of a ship.

With boiling pitch another, near at hand,
From friendly Sweden brought, the seams instops;
Which well laid o'er, the salt sea waves withstand,
And shakes them from the rising beak in drops. Dryden.

3. A beak is a little shoe, at the toe about an inch long, turned up and fastened in upon the fore-part of the hoof. Farrier's Dict.

4. Any thing ending in a point like a beak; as the spout of a cup; a prominence of land.
Cuddenbeak, from a well advanced promontory, which entitled it beak, taketh a prospect of the river.
Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

BE'AKED. adj. [Fr. becqué. A term also in heraldry.] Having a beak; having the form of a beak.

And question'd every gust of rugged winds,
That blows from off each beaked promontory. Milton.

BE'AKER. n. s. [Dr. Johnson derives this word from ak, and defines it, "a cup with a spout in the form of a bird's beak." Both his etymology and definition are incorrect. Our word is the Germ. becher, a cup; Ital. bicchiere; low Lat. baccharium, fancifully derived from Bacchus. V. Du Cange. Bicker, in the Northumb. dialect, is a quart vessel, about two inches and a half deep, made with small staves or hoops.] A vessel for drink; a flagon.

And into pikes and musqueteers,
Stamp beakers, cups and porringers. Butler, Hudibras.

With dulcet beverage this the beaker crown'd,
Fair in the midst, with gilded cups around. Pope, Odyssey.

BEAL. n. s. [bolga, Goth. bolla, Ital.] A whelk or pimple.

B E A

To BEAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To ripen; to gather matter, or come to a head, as a sore does. Shakspeare.

BEAM. n. s. [bagme, Goth. beam, Sax. a tree.]

1. The main piece of timber that supports the house.

A beam is the largest piece of wood in a building, which always lies cross the building, or the walls, serving to support the principal rafters of the roof, and into which the feet of the principal rafters are framed. No building has less than two beams, one at each head. Into these, the girders of the garret floor are also framed; and if the building be of timber, the fazel-tenons of the posts are framed. The proportions of beams in or near London, are fixed by act of parliament. A beam fifteen feet long, must be seven inches on one side its square, and five on the other; if it be sixteen feet long, one side must be eight inches, the other six; and so proportionable to their lengths. Builder's Dict.

The building of living creatures is like the building of a timber house; the walls and other parts have columns and beams, but the roof is tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon.

He heav'd, with more than human force, to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team,
And rais'd from thence he reach'd the neighb'ring beam. Dryden.

2. Any large and long piece of timber: a beam must have more length than thickness, by which it is distinguished from a block.

But Lycus, swifter,
Springs to the walls and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden, Æneid.

3. That part of a balance, at the ends of which the scales are suspended.

Poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. Shakspeare.

If the length of the sides in the balance, and the weights at the ends be both equal, the beam will be in horizontal situation: but if either the weights alone be equal, or the distances alone, the beam will accordingly decline. Wilkins.

4. The horn of a stag.

And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenge, and his clashing beam. Denham.

5. The pole of a chariot; that piece of wood which runs between the horses.

Juturna heard, and seiz'd with mortal fear,
Forc'd from the beam her brother's charioteer. Dryden.

6. Among weavers, a cylindrical piece of wood belonging to the loom, on which the web is gradually rolled as it is wove.

The staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam. 1 Sam. xvii. 7.

7. BEAM of an Anchor. The straight part or shank of an anchor, to which the hooks are fastened.

8. BEAM Compasses. A wooden or brass instrument, with sliding sockets, to carry several shifting points, in order to draw circles with very long radii; and useful in large projections, for drawing the furniture on wall dials. Harris.

9. [runnebeam, Sax. a ray of the sun.] The ray of light emitted from some luminous body, or received by the eye. Thus in the old Prompt. Parv. we have "candell-beme."

Pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might downstretch
Below the beam of sight. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

Pleasing, yet cold, like Cynthia's silver beam. Dryden.
As heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour. Pope.

B E A

To BEAM.† v. n. [Sax. beamian.] To emit rays or beams.

Each emanation of his fires

That beams on earth; each virtue he inspires. Pope.

BEAM Tree. A species of wild service.

BEAMLESS.* adj. [from beam and less.] Yielding no ray of light.

No sun to cheer us, but a bloody globe,
That rolls above, a bald and beamless fire.

Dryden and Lee, Ædipus.

The ghastly form,
The lip pale-quivering, and the beamless eye.

Thomson, Summer, v. 1045.

BEAMY.† adj. [from beam.]

1. Radiant; shining; emitting beams.

Who is there that cannot trace Thee now in thy beamy walk through the mid-st of thy sanctuary, amidst those golden candlesticks, which have long suffered a dimness amongst us through the violence of those that had seized them.

Milton, Animado. on the Remonstr. Defence.

Each of w<sup>h</sup>ose eyes, like a bright beamy shield,
Conquers, without blows, the contentions.

Beam. and Fl. Martial Mail.

Ope, aged Atlas, open then thy lap,
And from thy beamy bosom strike a light. B. Jonson, Masques.

All-seeing sun!

Hide, hide in shameful night, thy beamy head. Smith.

2. Having the weight or massiness of a beam.

His double-biting axe, and beamy spear;
Each asking a giantlike force to rear. Dryden, Fables.

3. Having horns or antlers.

Rouze from their desert dens the bristled rage
Of boars, and beamy stags in toils engage. Dryden, Virgil.

BEAN.† n. s. [Sax. bean.]

The species are, 1. The common garden bean.

2. The horse bean. There are several varieties of the garden beans, differing either in colour or size.
The principal sorts which are cultivated in England,
are the Mazagan, the small Lisbon, the Spanish,
the Tokay, the Sandwich, and Windsor beans.
The Mazagan bean is brought from a settlement of the Portuguese on the coast of Africa, of the same name; and is by far the best sort to plant for an early crop. Miller.

His allowance of oats and beans for his horse was greater than his journey required. Swift.

BEAN Caper. [fabago.] A plant.

BEAN Tressel. An herb.

BEANFED.* part. adj. [from bean and feed.] Fed with beans.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likeness of a silly foal. Shakspeare, Mids. N. D.

To BEAR. v. a. pret. I bore, or bare; part. pass.
bore, or born, or borne. [beopan, bepan, Sax. bairan, Gothick. It is sounded as bare, as the are in care and ware.]

[This is a word used with such latitude, that it is not easily explained.

We say to bear a burden, to bear sorrow or reproach, to bear a name, to bear a grudge, to bear fruit, or to bear children. The word bear is used in very different senses. Watts.

2. To carry as a burden.

They bear him upon the shoulder; they carry him, and set him in his place. Isaiah, xlv. 7.

And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bore burdens. 1 Kings, v. 15.

An eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, bearoth them on her wings. Deuteronomy, xxxii. 12.

B E A

We see some, who, we think, have borne less of the burden, rewarded above themselves. Decay of Piety.

3. To convey or carry.

My message to the ghost of Priam bore;
Tell him a new Achilles sent thee there. Dryden, Æneid.

A guest like him, a Trojan guest before,
In shew of friendship, sought the Spartan shore,
And ravish'd Helen from her husband bore. Garth.

4. To carry as a mark of authority.

I do commit into your hand
Th' unstained sword that you have us'd to bear. Shakspeare.

5. To carry as a mark of distinction.

He may not bear so fair and so noble an image of the divine glory, as the universe in its full system. Hale.

His pious brother, sure the best
Who ever bore that name. Dryden.

The sad spectators stiffen'd with their fears,
She stes, and sudden every limb she smears;
Then each of savage beasts the figure bears. Garth.

His supreme spirit of mind will bear its best resemblance, when it represents the supreme infinite. Cheque.

So we say, to bear arms in a coat.

6. To carry as in show.

Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue; look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under't. Shakspeare.

7. To carry as in trust.

He was a thief, and had the bag; and bare what was put therein. John.

8. To support; to keep from falling: frequently with up.

Under colour of rooting out popery, the most effectual means to bear up the state of religion may be removed, and so a way be made either for paganism, or for barbarism to enter. Hooker.

And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars, upon which the house stood, and on which it was borne up. Judges.

A religious hope does not only bear up the mind under her sufferings, but makes her rejoice in them. Addison.

Some power invisible supports his soul,
And bears it up in all its wonted greatness. Addison.

9. To keep afloat; to keep from sinking; sometimes with up.

The waters encased, and bore up the ark, and it was lifted up above the earth. Genesis.

10. To support with proportionate strength.

Animals that use a great deal of labour and exercise, have their solid parts more elastic and strong; they can bear, and ought to have stronger food. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

11. To carry in the mind, as love, hate.

How did the open multitude reveal
The wond'rous love they bear him under hand! Daniel.

They bare great faith and obedience to the kings. Bacon.

Darah, the eldest, bears a generous mind,
But to implacable revenge inclin'd. Dryden.

The coward bore the man immortal spite.
As for this gentleman, who is fond of her, she beareth him an invincible hatred. Swift.

That inviolable love I bear to the land of my nativity, prevail'd upon me to engage in so bold an attempt. Swift.

12. To endure, as pain, without sinking.

It was not an enemy that reproached me, then I could have borne it. Psalms.

13. To suffer; to undergo, as punishment or misfortune.

I have borne chastisements, I will not offend any more. Job.
That which was torn of beasts, I brought not unto thee, I bare the loss of it; of my hand didst thou require it. Genesis.

14. To permit; to suffer without resentment.

To reject all orders of the church which men have established, is to think worse of the laws of men in this respect, than either the judgement of wise men alloweth, or the law of God itself will bear. Hooker.

Not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
Thy lawless wand'ring walks in upper air. Dryden.

15. To be capable of; to admit.

Being the son of one earl of Pembroke, and younger brother to another, who liberally supplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father could bear. Clarendon.

Give his thought either the same turn, if our tongue will bear it, or, if not, vary but the dress. Dryden.

Do not charge your coins with more uses than they can bear. It is the method of such as love any science, to discover all others in it. Addison on Medals.

Had he not been eager to find mistakes, he would not have strained my works to such a sense as they will not bear. Atterbury.

In all criminal cases, the most favourable interpretation should be put upon words that they possibly can bear. Swift.

16. To produce, as fruit.

There be some plants that bear no flower, and yet bear fruit: there be some that bear flowers, and no fruit: there be some that bear neither flowers nor fruit. Bacon.

They wing'd their flight aloft; then stooping low, Perch'd on the double tree that bears the golden bough. Dryden.

Say, shepherd, say, in what glad soil appears
A wond'rous tree that sacred monarchs bears. Pope.

17. To bring forth, as a child.

The queen that bore thee,
— Oftener upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakspeare.

Ye know that my wife bare two sons.
What could the muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The muse herself, for her enchanting son?
The same Eneas, whom fair Venus bore
To fam'd Anchises on th' Idean shore. Milton.

To fam'd Anchises on th' Idean shore. Dryden.

18. To give birth to; to be the native place of.

Here dwelt the man divine whom Samos bore,
But now self-banish'd from his native shore. Dryden.

19. To possess, as power or honour.

When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison, Cato.

20. To gain; to win: commonly with away.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace. Shakspeare.

Because the Greek and Latin have ever borne away the prerogative from all other tongues, they shall serve as touchstones to make our trials by. Candem.

Some think to bear it by speaking a great word, and being peremptory; and go on, and take by admittance that which they cannot make good. Bacon.

21. To maintain; to keep up.

He finds the pleasure and credit of bearing a part in the conversation, and of hearing his reasons approved. Locke.

22. To support any thing good or bad.

I was carried on to observe, how they did bear their fortunes, and how they did employ their times. Bacon.

23. To exhibit.

Ye Trojan flames, your testimony bear,
What I perform'd and what I suffer'd there. Dryden.

24. To be answerable for.

If I bring him not unto thee, let me bear the blame. Genesis.
O more than madmen! you yourselves shall bear
The guilt of blood and sacrilegious war. Dryden.

25. To supply.

What have you under your arm? Somewhat that will bear your charges in your pilgrimage? Dryden.

26. To be the object of. This is unusual.

I'll be your father and your brother too;
Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares. Shakspeare.

27. To behave; to act in any character.

Some good instruction give,
How I may bear me here. Shakspeare.
Hath he borne himself penitent in prison? Shakspeare.

28. To hold; to restrain: with off.

Do you suppose the state of this realm to be now so feeble, that it cannot bear off a greater blow than this? Hayward.

29. To impel; to urge; to push: with some particle noting the direction of the impulse; as, down, on, back, forward.

The residue were so disordered as they could not conveniently fight or fly, and not only jostled and bore down one another, but, in their confused tumbling back, brake a part of the avant guard. Sir J. Hayward.

Contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
And bears down all before him. Shakspeare.

Their broken oars, and floating planks, withstand
Their passage, while they labour to the land;
And ebbing tides bear back upon th' uncertain sand. Dryden.

Now with a noiseless gentle course
It keeps within the middle bed;
Anon it lifts aloft the head,
And bears down all before it with impetuous force. Dryden.

Truth is borne down, attestations neglected, the testimony of sober persons despised. Swift.

The hopes of enjoying the abbey lands would soon bear down all considerations, and be an effectual incitement to their perversion. Swift.

30. To conduct; to manage.

My hope is
So to bear through, and out, the consulship,
As spite shall ne'er wound you, though it may me. B. Jonson.

31. To press.

Cæsar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus. Shakspeare.
Though he bear me hard,
I yet must do him right. B. Jonson.
These men bear hard upon the suspected party, pursue her close through all her windings. Addison.

32. To incite; to animate.

But confidence then bore thee on; secure
Either to meet no danger, or to find Mutter of glorious trial. Milton.

33. To bear a body. A colour is said to bear a body in painting, when it is capable of being ground so fine, and mixing with the oil so entirely, as to seem only a very thick oil of the same colour.

34. To bear date. To carry the mark of the time when any thing was written.

35. To bear a price. To have a certain value.

36. To bear in hand. To amuse with false pretences; to deceive.

Your daughter, whom she bore in hand to love
With such integrity she did confess,
Was as a scorpion to her sight. Shakspeare.

His sickness, age, and impotence,
Was falsely borne in hand. Shakspeare.

He repaired to Bruges, desiring of the states of Bruges, to enter peaceably into their town, with a retinue fit for his estate; and bearing them in hand, that he was to communicate with them of matters of great importance, for their good. Bacon.

It is no wonder, that some would bear the world in hand, that the apostle's design and meaning is for presbytery, though his words are for episcopacy. South.

37. To bear off. To carry away.

I will respect thee as a father, if Thou bear'st my life off hence. Creech.

The sun views half the earth on either way,
And there brings on, and there bears off the day. Cato.

Give but the word, we'll snatch this damsel up,
And bear her off. Cato.

My soul grows desperate
I'll bear her off. A. Philips.

38. To bear out. To support; to maintain; to defend.

I hope your warrant will bear out the deed. Shakspeare.
I can once or twice a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man. Shakspeare.

Changes are never without danger, unless the prince be able to bear out his actions by power. Sir J. Hayward.

Quoth Sidrophel I do not doubt
To find friends that will bear me out. Hudibras.

Company only can bear a man out in an ill thing. South.
I doubted whether that occasion could bear me out in the confidence of giving your ladyship any farther trouble. Temple.

To BEAR. v. n.

1. To suffer pain.

Stranger, cease thy care;
Wise is the soul; but man is born to bear:
Jove weighs affairs of earth in dubious scales,
And the good suffers while the bad prevails.
They bore as heroes, but they felt as man.

Pope.
Pope.

2. To be patient.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past, 'tis done;
Perish this impious, this detested son!

Dryden.

3. To be fruitful or prolific.

A fruit tree hath been blown up almost by the roots, and set up again, and the next year bear exceedingly. Bacon.
Betwixt two seasons comes th' auspicious air,
This age to blossom, and the next to bear. Dryden.
Melons on beds of ice are taught to bear,
And, strangers to the sun, yet ripen here. Glanville.

4. To take effect; to succeed.

Having pawned a full suit of cloaths, for a sum of money, which, my operator assured me, was the last he should want to bring all our matters to bear. Guardian.

5. To act in any character.

Instruct me
How I may formally in person bear,
Like a true friar.

Shakspeare.

6. To tend; to be directed to any point: with a particle to determine the meaning; as, up, away,
onward.

The oily drops swimming on the spirit of wine, moved restlessly to and fro, sometimes bearing up to one another, as if all were to unite into one body, and then falling off, and continuing to shift places. Boyle.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to fly:
With such alacrity they bore away.

Dryden.

Whose navy like a stiff-stretched cord did shew,
Till he bore in, and bent them into flight.

Dryden.

On this the hero fix'd an oak in sight,
The mark to guide the mariners aright:

To bear with this, the seamen stretch their oars,
Then round the rock they steer and seek the former shores.

Dryden.

In a convex mirror, we view the figures of all other things, which bear out with more life or strength than nature itself. Dryden.

7. To act as an impellent, opponent, or as a reciprocal power; generally with the particles upon or against.

We were encounter'd, by a mighty rock,
Which being violently bore upon,
Our helpless ship was splitted in the midst.

Shakspeare.

Upon the tops of mountains, the air which bears against the restagnant quicksilver, is less pressed. Boyle.

The sides bearing one against the other, they could not lie so close at the bottoms. Burnet.

As a lion bounding in his way,
And bearing augmented bears against his prey,
His is a seize.

Dryden.

not easily explained operations to be performed by the teeth, require strength in the instruments which move the in very different senses and most upon the muscles of the Wilkins.

2. To carry as a burden.

They bear him upon the violently and rapidly upon some him in his place. Broome.

And Solomon had three, did bear upon those within, who gardens. Hayward.

As an eagle stirreth up,
And death abroad her wings, wings. respect to other places; as, this
of the promontory.

10. To bear up. To stand firm without falling; not to sink; not to faint or fail.

So long as nature
Will bear up with this exercise, long

I daily vow to use it.

Shakspeare.

Persons in distress may speak of themselves with dignity; it shews a greatness of soul, that they bear up against the storms of fortune. Broome.

The consciousness of integrity, the sense of a life spent in doing good, will enable a man to bear up under any change of circumstances. Atterbury.

When our commanders and soldiers were raw and unexpe-rienced, we lost battles and towns; yet we bore up then, as the French do now; nor was there any thing decisive in their successes. Swift.

11. To bear with. To endure an unpleasant thing.

They are content to bear with my absence and folly. Sidney.

Though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men; yet they lie dead, that tell you, you have good faces. Shakspeare.

Look you lay home to him;
Tell him his pranks have been broad to bear with. Shakspeare.
Bear with me then, if lawful what I ask. Milton.

BEAR.† n. s. beja, Saxon, bacr, Germ.]

1. A rough savage animal.

Some have falsely reported, that bears bring their young into the world shapeless, and that their dams lick them into form. The dams go no longer than thirty days, and generally produce five young ones. In the winter, they lie hid and asleep, the male forty days, and the female four months; and so soundly for the first fourteen days, that blows will not wake them. In the sleepy season, they are said to have no nourishment but from licking their feet. This animal has naturally an hideous look, but when enraged it is terrible; and, as rough and stupid as it seems to be, it is capable of discipline; it leaps, dances, and plays a thousand little tricks at the sound of a trumpet. They abound in Poland. In the remote northern countries the species is white. Calmet.

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,

Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me. —

— Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the beardward in their chains. Shakspeare.

Thou'dst shun a bear;

But if thy flight lay tow'rd the raging sea,

Thou'dst meet the bear in the mouth. Shakspeare.

2. The name of two constellations, called the greater or lesser bear; in the tail of the lesser bear, is the pole-star.

E'en then when Troy was by the Greeks o'erthrown,

The bear oppos'd to bright Orion shone. Creech.

3. A word, still in use, to denote a certain description of stock-jobbers.

He who sells that, of which he is not possessed, is proverbially said to sell the skin before he has caught the bear.
It was the practice of stock-jobbers, in the year 1720, to enter into a contract for transferring South Sea stock at a future time for a certain price; but he who contracted to sell, had frequently no stock to transfer; nor did he who bought, intend to receive any in consequence of his bargain: the seller was therefore called a bear, in allusion to the proverb; and the buyer a bull, perhaps only as a similar distinction. The contract was merely a wager, to be determined by the rise or fall of stock; if it rose, the seller paid the difference to the buyer, proportioned to the sum determined by the same computation to the seller. Dr. Warton on Pope.

BEAR-BAITING.* n. s. [from bear and bait.] The sport of baiting bears with dogs. See To BAIT.

He haunts, wakes, fairs, and bear-baitings.

Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

B E A

Let's have bear-baiting; ye shall see me play
The rarest for a single dog. Beaumont, Fl. Mad Lover.
He [lord Downe] entertained the king [James I.] with the fashionable and courtly diversions of hawking and bear- baiting. Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 438.

They spent their time (1215) in tournaments and bear- baitings, and other diversions suited to the fierce rusticity of their manners. Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. iii. 8.

1. The hair that grows on the lips and chin.

Ere on thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man. Prior.

2. Beard is used for the face; as, to do any thing to a man's beard, is to do it in defiance, or to his face.

Rail'd at their covenant, and jeer'd
Their rev'rend persons to my beard. Hudibras.

3. Beard is used to mark age or virility; as, he has a long beard, means he is old.

This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spared at suit of his grey beard. Shakespeare.

Some thin remains of chastity appear'd,
Ev'n under Jove, but Jove without a beard. Dryden.

Would it not be insufferable for a professor to have his authority, of forty years standing, confirmed by general tradition, and a reverend beard overturned by an upstart novelist? Locke.

4. Sharp prickles growing upon the ears of corn.

The ploughman lost his sweat, and the green corn
Hath rotted ere its youth attained a beard. Shakespeare.

A certain farmer complained that the beards of his corn cut the reapers and threshers fingers. L'Estrange.

5. A barb on an arrow.

6. The beard or chuck of a horse, is that part which bears the curb of the bridle. Farrier's Dict.

To BEARD. v. a. [from beard.]

1. To take or pluck by the beard, in contempt or anger.

No man so potent beards upon the ground,
But I will beard him. Shakespeare.

B E A

2. To oppose to the face; to set at open defiance:
adopted, according to Mr. Steevens, from romance;
in the old language of which it signified, to cut off
the beard.

He, whosoever he should swerve from duty, may be able to beard him. Spenser.

I have been bearded by boys. More.

The design of utterly extirpating monarchy and episcopacy, the presbyterians alone begun, continued, and would have ended, if they had not been bearded by that new party, with whom they could not agree about dividing the spoil. Swift.

BE'ARDED. adj. [from beard.]

1. Having a beard.

Think every bearded fellow that's but yok'd,
May draw with you. Shakespeare.

Old prophecies foretell our fall at hand,
When bearded men in floating castles land. Dryden.

2. Having sharp prickles, as corn.

As when a field
Of Ceres ripe for harvest, waving bends
Her bearded grove of ears, which way the wind, Sways them. Milton.

The fierce virago
Flew o'er the field, nor hurt the bearded grain. Dryden.

3. Barbed or jagged.

Thou shouldst have pull'd the secret from my breast,
Torn out the bearded steel to give me rest. Dryden.

BE'ARDLESS. adj. [Sax. beapnleas.]

1. Without a beard.

There are some coins of Cunobelin, king of Essex and Middlesex, with a beardless image, inscribed Cunobekn. Camden.

2. Youthful.

And, as young striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.

BE'ARER. n. s. [from To bear.]

A carrier of any thing, who conveys any thing from one place or person to another.

He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shriving time allowed. Shakespeare.

Forgive the bearer of unhappy news;

Your alter'd father openly pursues
Your ruin. Dryden.

No gentleman sends a servant with a message, without endeavouring to put it into terms brought down to the capacity of the bearer. Swift.

One employed in carrying burthens.

And he set threescore and ten thousand of them to be bearers of burthens. 2 Chronicles.

3. One who wears any thing.

O majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety. Shakespeare.

4. One who carries the body to the grave.

Nay, quoth he, on his swooning bed outstretch'd,
If I may n't carry, sure I'll ne'er be fetch'd,
But vow, though the cross doctors all stood bearers,
For one carrier put down, to make six bearers.

The King's body being by the bearers set down near the place of burial. Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I.

between the ends of a piece of timber, to shorten its bearing; or to prevent its bearing with the whole weight at the ends only.

7. [In heraldry.] A supporter.

B E A

BE'ARHERD. n. s. [from bear and herd; as, shepherd, from sheep.] A man that tends bears.

He that is more than a youth, is not for me; and he that is less than a man, I am not for him; therefore I will even take silence in earnest of the bearherd, and lead his apes into hell.

Shakspeare.

BE'ARING. † n. s. [from bear.]

1. The site or place of any thing with respect to something else.

But of this frame, the bearing and the ties,

The strong connections, nice dependencies,

* Gradations just, has thy pervading soul

Look'd through? or can a part contain the whole? Pope.

2. Gesture; mien; behaviour.

That is Claudio; I know him by his bearing. Shakspeare.

3. [In architecture.] Bearing of a piece of timber, with carpenters, is the space either between the two fixt extremes thereof, or between the one extreme and a post or wall, trimmed up between the ends to shorten its bearing. Builder's Dict.

4. [In heraldry.] That which is borne in a coat of arms.

He is very learned in pedigree; and will abate something in the ceremony of his approaches to a man, if he is in any doubt about the bearing of his coat of arms. Tatler, No. 204.

5. [In navigation.] The situation of any distant object, estimated from some part of the ship, according to her position. Chambers.

BE'ARING-CLOTH. \ n. s.* [from bear and cloth.] The cloth or mantle with which a child is covered, when carried to church to be baptized.

Thy scarlet robes, as a child's bearing-cloth

I'll use, to carry thee out of this place.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

Here's a sight for thee; look thee, a bearing-cloth for a squire's child!

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

BE'ARISH. \ adj.* [from bear.] Having the quality of a bear.

In our own language we seem to allude to this degeneracy of human nature, when we call men, by way of reproach, sheepish, bearish, &c. Harris's Three Treatises, Notes, p. 344.

BE'ARLIKE. \ adj.* [from bear and like.] Resembling a bear; in the manner of a bear.

They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,

But, bearlike, I must fight the course. Shakspeare, Macb. v. 7.

BEARN. \ n. s.* [Goth barn, from bairan; Sax beapn, bapn; Iceland. barn; Germ. barn. It is pronounced barn in our northern counties, and sometimes so spelt, as also bairn. Some write it barns, as if for borns, i. e. things born; others, bearns, as the regular participle of the verb bear.] A child.

What have we here? mercy on us, a bearn, a very pretty bearn. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

I think I shall never have the blessing of God, till I have issue of my body; for, they say, bearns are blessings.

Shakspeare, All's well that ends well.

BE'ARWARD. n. s. [from bear and ward.] A keeper of bears.

We'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

The bear is led after one manner, the multitude after another; the bearward leads but one brute, and the mountebank leads a thousand. L'Estrange.

BEAST. n. s. [beste Fr. bestia, Lat.]

1. An animal, distinguished from birds, insects, fishes, and man.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin,

While the beast liv'd, was kill'd with hunting him. Shakspeare.

Beasts of chase are the buck, the doe, the fox, the martern, and the roe. Beasts of the forest are the hart, the hind, the hare, the boar, and the wolf. Beasts of warren are the hare and coney. Cowel.

B E A

2. An irrational animal, opposed to man; as man and beast.

I dare do all that may become a man;

Who dares do more, is none. —

What beast was't then

That made you break this enterprise to me? Shakspeare, Macb.

Medea's charms were there, Cicean feasts,

With bowls that turn'd enamour'd youths to beasts. Devin.

3. A brutal savage man; a man acting in any manner unworthy of a reasonable creature.

To BEAST. v. a. A term at cards.

BE'ASTINGS. See BEESTINGS.

BE'ASTLIKE. \ adj.* [from beast and like.] Resembling a beast.

A paradise of that nature, [Mahomet's,] abounding with all beastlike brothelries. Mountagu, App. to Cies. p. 152.

Her life was beastlike, and devoid of pity;

And, being so, shall have like want of pity. Titus Andron. v. 3.

BE'ASTLINESS. † n. s. [from beastly.] Brutality; practice of any kind contrary to the rules of humanity.

They held this land, and with their filthiness

Polluted this, same gentle soil long time;

That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,

And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime. Spenser, F. Q.

Were not this provision [matrimony] carefully made, the world would be quite overrun with beastliness and horrible confusion. Bp. Hall, Cas. of Cons. iv. 3.

Rank foundation of luxuriousness

Has tainted him with such gross beastliness.

Marston's Scourge of Vill. ii. 7.

BE'ASTLY. adj. [from beast.]

1. Brutal; contrary to the nature and dignity of man.

It is used commonly as a term of reproach.

Wouldst thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, or remain a beast with beasts? — Ay — a beastly ambition.

Shakspeare.

You beastly knave, know you no reverence?

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

With lewd, prophane, and beastly phrase,

To catch the world's loose laughter or vain gaze. B. Jonson.

It is charged upon the gentlemen of the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess, hath been lately, from their example, restored among us. Swift.

2. Having the nature or form of beasts.

Beastly divinities and droves of gods.

Prior.

BE'ASTLY. \ adv.* [from beast.] In the manner of a beast.

Every man will I beset that lyveth beastly.

Morality of Every Man.

To BEAT. † v. a. pret. beat; part. pass. beat, or beaten. [baltre, Fr. beutan, Sax.]

1. To strike; to knock; to lay blows upon.

So fight I, not as one that beateth the air.

1 Corinthians.

He rav'd with all the madness of despair;

He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair

Dryden.

2. To punish with stripes or blows.

They've chose a consul that will from them take

Their liberties; make them of no more voice

Than dogs, that are often beat for barking.

Shakspeare.

Mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Shakspeare.

There is but one fault for which children should be beaten; and that is obstinacy or rebellion.

Locke.

3. To strike an instrument of musick.

Bid them come forth and hear,

Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,

Till it cry, sleep to death.

Shakspeare.

4. To bruise; to bruise; to spread; to comminute by blows.

The people gathered manna, and beat it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and baked it.

Numbers.

B E A

They did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires, to work it. Exodus.

They save the laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axletree of the main wheel of their corn mills longer than ordinary, and placing of pins in them, to raise large hammers like those used for paper and fulling mills, with which they beat most of their hemp. Mortimer.

Nestor furnished the gold, and he beat it into leaves, so that he had occasion to use his anvil and hammer. Broome.

5. To strike bushes or ground, or make a motion to rouse game.

It is strange how long some men will lie in wait to speak, and how many other matters they will beat over to come near it. Bacon.

When from the cave thou risest with the day
To beat the woods, and rouse the bounding prey. Prior.

Together let us beat this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yield. Pope.

6. To thresh; to drive the corn out of the husk.
She gleaned in the field, and beat out that she had gleaned. Ruth, ii. 17.

7. To mix things by long and frequent agitation.
By long beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it into white curds. Boyle.

8. To batter with engines of war.
And he beat down the tower of Penuel, and slew the men of the city. Judges, viii. 17.

9. To dash as water, or brush as wind.
Beyond this flood a frozen continent
Lies dark and wild; beat with perpetual storms
Of whirlwind and dire hail. Milton.
With tempests beat, and to the winds a scorn. Roscommon.
While winds and storms his lofty forehead beat,
The common fate of all that's high or great. Denham.
As when a lion in the midnight hours,
Beat by rude blasts, and wet with wintry show'rs,
Descends terrific from the mountain's brow. Pope.

10. To tread a path.
While I this unexampled task essay,
Pass awful gulfs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore.

11. To make a path by marking it with tracks.
He that will know the truth of things, must leave the common and beaten track. Locke.

12. To conquer; to subdue; to vanquish.
If Hercules and Lichas play at dice,
Which is the better man? The greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page. Shakspeare.
You souls of geese,
That bear the shapes of men, how have you run
From slaves that apes would beat? Shakspeare.

Five times, Marcins,
I have fought with thee, so often hast thou beat me. Shakspeare.
I have discern'd the foe securely lie,
Too proud to fear a beaten enemy. Dryden.
The common people of Lucca are firmly persuaded, that one Lucquese can beat five Florentines. Addison.
Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, joining his ships to those of the Syracusans, beat the Carthaginians at sea. Arbutnot.

13. To harass; to over-labour.
It is no point of wisdom for a man to beat his brains, and spend his spirits about things impossible. Hakewill.
And as in prisons mean rogues beat
Hemp, for the service of the great;
So Whacum beat his dirty brains
To advance his master's fame and gains. Iludibras.
Why any one should waste his time, and beat his head about the Latin grammar, who does not intend to be a critick. Locke.

14. To lay, or press, as standing corn by hard weather.
Her own shall bless her;
Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn,
And hang their heads with sorrow. Shakspeare.

15. To depress; to crush by repeated opposition:
usually with the particle down.

VOL. I.

B E A

Albeit a pardon was proclaimed, touching any speech tending to treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with that severity, or with this lenity be abated. Hayward.

Our warriors propagating the French language, at the same time they are beating down their power. Addison.

Such an unlook'd for storm of ills falls on me,
It beats down all my strength. Addison.

16. To drive by violence; with a particle.
Twice have I sally'd, and was twice beat back. Dryden.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and, as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone
That beat out life. Milton, P. L. xi. 46.

He that proceeds upon other principles in his inquiry, does at least post himself in a party, which he will not quit, till he be beaten out. Locke.

He cannot beat it out of his head, but that it was a cardinal who picked his pocket. Addison.

As a swarm of flies in vintage time,
About the wine-press where sweet must is pour'd,
Beat off, returns as oft with humming sound. Milton, P. R. iv. 17.

The younger part of mankind might be beat off from the belief of the most important points even of natural religion, by the impudent jests of a profane wit. Watts.

17. To move with fluttering agitation.
Thrice have I beat the wing, and rid with night
About the world. Dryden.

18. To beat down. To endeavour by treaty to lessen the price demanded.

Surveys rich moveables with curious eye,
Beats down the price, and threatens still to buy. Dryden.

She persuaded him to trust the renegado with the money he had brought over for their ransom; as not questioning but he would beat down the terms of it. Addison.

19. To beat down. To sink or lessen the value.
Usury beats down the price of land; for the employment of money is chiefly either merchandizing or purchasing; and usury way-lays both. Bacon.

20. To beat up. To attack suddenly; to alarm.
They lay in that quiet posture, without making the least impression upon the enemy, by beating up his quarters, which might easily have been done. Clarendon.

Will fancies he should never have been the man he is, had not he knocked down constables, and beat up a lewd woman's quarters, when he was a young fellow. Addison.

21. To beat the hoof. To walk; to go on foot.

22. To beat into. To repeat often. This is now rather a vulgarism, but was not so formerly. "To beat into men's minds with often repetition: inculcare animis."
Barret.

To BEAT. v. n.

1. To move in a pulsatory manner.
"I would gladly understand the formation of a soul, and see it beat the first conscious pulse." Collier.

2. To dash as a flood or storm.
Publick envy seemeth to beat chiefly upon ministers. Bacon.
Your brow, which does no fear of thunder know,
Sees rowling tempests vainly beat below. Dryden.
One sees many hollow spaces worn in the bottoms of the rocks, as they are more or less able to resist the impressions of the water that beats against them. Addison.

3. To knock at a door.
The men of the city beset the house round about, and beat at the door, and spake to the master of the house. Judges, xix. 22.

4. To move with frequent repetitions of the same act or stroke.

No pulse shall keep
His natural progress, but surcease to beat. Shakspeare.

My temperate pulse does regularly beat;
Feel, and be satisfy'd. Dryden.

A man's heart beats, and the blood circulates, which it is not in his power, by any thought or volition, to stop. Locke.

5. To throb; to be in agitation, as a sore swelling.
A turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind. Shakspeare.

U U

6. To fluctuate; to be in agitation.

The tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there.

Shakespeare.

7. To try different ways; to search: with about.

I am always beating about in my thoughts for something that may turn to the benefit of my dear countrymen.

Addison.

To find an honest man, I beat about,

And love him, court him, praise him in or out.

Pope.

8. To act upon with violence.

The sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die.

Jonah, iv. 8.

9. To speak frequently; to repeat; to enforce by repetition: with upon.

We are drawn on into a larger speech, by reason of their so great earnestness, who beat more and more upon these last alleged words.

Hooker.

How frequently and fervently doth the scripture beat upon this cause?

Hakewill.

10. To beat up; as, to beat up for soldiers. The word up seems redundant, but enforces the sense, the technical term being to raise soldiers.

BEAT. part. passive. [from the verb.]

Like a rich vessel beat by storms to shore,

'Twere madness should I venture out once more.

Dryden.

BEAT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Stroke.

2. Manner of striking.

Albeit the base and treble strings of a viol be turned to an unison; yet the former will still make a bigger sound than the latter, as making a broader beat upon the air.

Grew.

He with a careless beat,

Struck out the mute creation at a heat.

Dryden.

3. Manner of being struck; as, the beat of the pulse, or a drum.

4. [In hunting or fowling.] The round taken, when people beat up for game.

BE'ATEN.† particip. adj. [Sax. beaten.] Tracked.

What makes you, sir, so late abroad,
Without a guide, and this no beaten road?

Dryden.

BE'ATER.† n. s. [Sax. beatepe, Fr. bateur.]

1. An instrument with which any thing is comminuted or mingled.

Beat all your mortar with a beater three or four times over, before you use it; for thereby you incorporate the sand and lime well together.

Mason.

• A person much given to blows.

The best schoolmaster of our time, was the greatest beater.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

• [In hunting or fowling.] He that beats for game.

All the heroical glory he aspires to, is to be reputed a most potent and victorious beater of deer, and beater up of parks.

Butler's Characters.

TO BEATH.* n. a. [Sax. beðian, baðian, to steep, dip, or bathe. In Suffolk and Norfolk, beathing or bathing wood by the fire, means straitening unseasoned wood by heat; and this is much the same as Spenser's meaning in the example.] To bathe or warm in fire, so as to harden.

And in his hand a tall young oake he bore,
Whose knottie snags were sharp'ned all afore,
And beath'd in fire for steele to be in steel.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 7.

BEAT'IFICAL.} adj. [beatificus, low Lat. from beatus,

BEAT'IFICK.} happy.] That which has the power of making happy, or completing fruition; blissful.

It is used only of heavenly fruition after death.

Admiring more

The riches of heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than angels' divine or holy else, enjoy'd

In vision beatifick.

Milton, P. L.

It is also their felicity to have no faith; for, enjoying the beatifical vision in the fruition of the object of faith, they have received the full evacuation of it.

Brown, Vulg. Errours.

We may contemplate upon the greatness and strangeness of the beatifick vision; how a created eye should be so fortified, as to bear all those glories that stream from the fountain of uncreated light.

South.

BEAT'IFICALLY. adv. [from beatifical.] In such a manner as to complete happiness.

Beatifically to behold the face of God in the fulness of wisdom, righteousness and peace, is blessedness no way incident unto the creatures beneath man.

Hakewill.

BEAT'IFICA'TION. n. s. [from beatifick.] A term in the Romish church, distinguished from canonization. Beatification is an acknowledgement made by the Pope, that the person beatified is in heaven, and therefore may be revered as blessed; but is not a concession of the honours due to saints, which are conferred by canonization.

TO BEA'TIFY.† v. a. [beatifico, Lat. beatifer, Fr. Cotgrave.]

1. To make happy; to bless with the completion of celestial enjoyment.

The use of spiritual conference is unimaginable and unspeakable, especially if free and unrestrained, bearing an image of that conversation which is among angels and beatified saints.

Hammond.

We shall know him to be the fullest good, the nearest to us, and the most certain; and, consequently, the most beatifying of all others.

Brown.

I wish I had the wings of an angel, to have beaten into paradise, and to have beheld the forms of those beatified spirits, from which I might have copied my archangel.

Dryden.

2. To settle the character of any person by a publick acknowledgement that he is received in heaven, though he is not invested with the dignity of a saint.

Over against this church stands an hospital, erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified, though never sainted.

Addison.

BE'ATING.† n. s. [from beat, and Fr. batement.] Correction; punishment by blows.

Playwright, convict of publick wrongs to men,
Takes private beatings, and begins again.

B. Jonson.

Do you come hither with your bottled valour,
Your windy froth, to limit out my beatings?

Braun, and Fl. King and No King.

BEA'TITUDE.† n. s. [beatitudo, Lat. beatitudo, Fr.]

1. Blessedness; felicity; happiness: commonly used of the joys of heaven.

The end of that government, and of all man's aims, is agreed to be beatitudo, that is, his being completely well.

Digby.

This is the image and little representation of heaven; it is beatitudo in picture.

Taylor.

He set out the felicity of his heaven, by the delights of sense; slightly passing over the accomplishment of the soul, and the beatitudo of that part which earth and visibilities too weakly affect.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A declaration of blessedness made by our Saviour to particular virtues.

BEAU. n. s. [beau, Fr. It is sounded like bo, and has often the French plural beaux, sounded as boes.] A man of dress; a man whose great care is to deck his person.

What will not beaux attempt to please the fair?

Dryden.

The water nymphs are too unkind

To Vill'roy's; are the laud nymphs so?

And fly they all, at once combin'd

To shame a general, and a beau?

Prior.

You will become the delight of nine ladies in ten, and the envy of ninety-nine beaux in a hundred.

Swift.

B E A

BEAU-MONDE.* n. s. [Fr.] The gay world; the fashionable part of the world.

She courted the beau-monde to night,
L'assemblée her supreme delight. Prior.
His whole dress and appearance exactly resembled that of our modern beau-monde. Student, i. 301.

BE'AV-ER.† n. s. [bievre, Fr. beyep, beopen, Sax. fiber, Lat.]

1. An animal, otherwise named the castor, amphibious, and remarkable for his art in building his habitation; of which many wonderful accounts are delivered by travellers. His skin is very valuable on account of the fur.

The beaver being hunted, biteth off his stones, knowing that for them only his life is sought. Hakewill.

They placed this invention upon the beaver, for the sagacity and wisdom of that animal; indeed from its artifice in building. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A hat of the best kind; so called from being made of the fur of beaver.

You see a smart rhetorician turning his hat, moulding it into different cocks, examining the lining and the button during his periphrase: a deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of a nation. Addison.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares. Gay.

3. The part of a helmet that covers the lower part of the face, as distinguished from the visor. [baviere, Fr.]

His dreadful hideous head
Close couched on the beaver, seem'd to throw,
From flaming mouth, bright sparkles fiery red. Spenser.

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps. Shakspeare.
He was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the staff going in at his beaver. Bacon.

BE'AV-ERED. adj. [from beaver.] Covered with a beaver; wearing a beaver.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears,
Dropping with infant's blood, and mother's tears. Pope.

BEAU'ISH. adj. [from beau.] Befitting a beau; foppish.

BEAU'TEOUS. adj. [from beauty.] Fair elegant in form; pleasing to the sight; beautiful. This word is chiefly poetical.

I can, Petrucio, help thee to a wife,
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous. Shakspeare.
Alas! not hoping to subdue,
I only to the flight aspir'd;
To keep the beauteous foe in view,
Was all the glory I desir'd. Prior.

BEAU'TEOUSLY. adv. [from beauteous.] In a beauteous manner; in a manner pleasing to the sight; beautifully.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed. Taylor.

BEAU'TEOUSNESS. n. s. [from beauteous.] The state or quality of being beauteous; beauty.

From less virtue, and less beauteousness,
The gentiles fram'd them gods and goddesses. Donne, Poems, p. 84.

BEAU'TIFIER.* n. s. [from beautify.] That which beautifies or embellishes.

Semiramis, the founder of Babylon, according to Justin and Strabo; but the enlarger only and beautifier of it, according to Herodotus. Costard, Astron. of the Ancients, P. ii. p. 102.

BEAU'TIFUL. adj. [from beauty and full.] Fair; having the qualities that constitute beauty.

He stole away and took by strong hand all the beautiful women in his time. Rulegh.

B E A

The most important part of painting, is to know what is most beautiful in nature, and most proper for that art; that which is the most beautiful, is the most noble subject: so, in poetry, tragedy is more beautiful than comedy, because the persons are greater whom the poet instructs, and consequently the instructions of more benefit to mankind. Dryden.

Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds,
And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULLY. adv. [from beautiful.] In a beautiful manner.

No longer shall the boddice aptly lac'd,
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,
That air and harmony of shape express,
Fine by degrees, and beautifully less. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULNESS.† n. s. [from beautiful.] The quality of being beautiful; beauty; excellence of form. The innate loveliness and beautifulness of virtue.

Hallywell, Saving of Souls, p. 115.
To BEAU'TIFY.† v. a. [obsolete Fr. beautifier.] To adorn; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to add beauty to.

Never was sorrow more sweetly set forth, their faces seeming rather to beautify their sorrow, than their sorrow to cloud the beauty of their faces. Hayward.

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs and return,
Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke? Shakspeare.

These were not created to beautify the earth alone, but for the use of man and beast. Raleigh.

How all conspire to grace
Th' extended earth, and beautify her face. Blackmore.

There is charity and justice; and the one serves to heighten and beautify the other. Atterbury.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. n. To grow beautiful; to advance in beauty.

It must be a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him, by greater degrees of resemblance. Addison.

BEAU'TIFYING.* n. s. [from beautify.] The method or act of rendering beautiful.

All that either soberly please themselves, or civilly appear less displeasing to others, by the help of any artificial beautifyings. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 67.

BEAU'TILESS.* adj. [from beauty and less.] Without beauty.

The only unamiable, undesirable, formless, beautiless reprobate in the mass. Hammond, Sermons.

BEAUTY. n. s. [brauté, Fr.]

1. That assemblage of graces, or proportion of parts, which pleases the eye.

Beauty consists of a certain composition of colour and figure, causing delight in the beholder. Locke.

Your beauty was the cause of that effect,
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep.—

If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakspeare.

Beauty is best in a body that hath rather dignity of presence than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study for the most part rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express. Bacon.

Of the beauty of the eye I shall say little, leaving that to poets and orators: that it is a very pleasant and lovely object to behold, if we consider the figure, colours, splendour of it, is the least I can say. Ray.

He view'd their twining branches with delight,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight. Pope.

2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament.

The ancient pieces are beautiful, because they resemble the beauties of nature; and nature will ever be beautiful, which resembles those beauties of antiquity. Dryden.

Wherever you place a patch, you destroy a beauty. Addison.

Any thing more eminently excellent than the rest of that with which it is united.

. A nod of command.

This gave me an occasion of looking backward on some beauties of my author in his former books. Dryden.

With incredible pains have I endeavoured to copy the several beauties of the ancient and modern historians. Arbutnot.

4. A beautiful person.

Remember that Pellean conquerour,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd and slightly overpass'd. Milton.

What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?

Can he, who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryden.

TO BEAU'TY. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn; to beautify; to embellish: not in use.

The harlot's cheek, beautied with plast'ring art,
Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
Than is my deed to your most painted word. Shakspeare.

BEAU'TY-SPOT. n. s. [from beauty and spot.] A spot placed to direct the eye to something else, or to heighten some beauty; a foil; a patch.

The filthiness of swine makes them the beauty-spot of the animal creation. Grew.

BEAU'TY-WANING. * adj. [from beauty and wane.] Declining in beauty.

A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye.

Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

TO BEBLE'ED. * v. a. [from be and bleed; one of our oldest verbs.] To make bloody; to stain with blood.

The open war, with wounds all bebled.

Chaucer, Ku. Tale, 2004.

The feast —

All was torned into bloud;

The dishe forthwith, the cyppe and all,

Bebled they weren over all. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

TO BEBLO'OD, or BEBLO'ODY. * v. a. [from be and blood; and Teut. bebloeden.] The latter is noticed by Sherwood under bloudie; and is defined, "to imbue with blood; to make bloody."

You will not admit, I trow, that he was so beblooded with the blood of your sacrament-god. Sheldon, Mir. of Antich. p. 90.

TO BEBLO'T. * v. a. [from be and blot; Germ. bebluten.] To stain. Obsolete.

Touching thy letter, thou art wise enough,

I wot thou n'lt it deignelic he endite,

As make it with the argumentis tough,

Ne scriven-like, or craftily it write,

Beblotte it with thy tearis eke a lite.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. ii. 1027.

BEBLU'BBERED. * part. adj. [from be and blubber.] Swoln with weeping.

A very beautiful lady did call him from a certain window, her eyes all beblubbered with tears.

Sheldon, Tr. of D. Quixote, i. iii. 13.

BECAF'I'CO. n. s. [becafigo, Span.] A bird like a nightingale, feeding on figs and grapes; a fig-pecker. Pineda.

The robin-redbreast, till of late, had rest,

And children sacred held a martin's nest;

Till becaficos sold so devilish dear,

To one that was, or would have been, a peer. Pope.

TO BECA'LM. † v. a. [from calm.]

1. To still the elements.

The moon shone clear on the becalmed flood. Dryden.

2. To keep a ship from motion.

Like a ship at hull and becalmed.

Hammond's Sermons, p. 655.

A man becalmed at sea, out of sight of land, in a fair day, may look on the sun, or sea, or ship, a whole hour, and perceive no motion. Locke.

3. To quiet the mind.

Soft whispering airs, and the lark's matin song,

Then woe to music, and becalm the mind

Perplext with irksome thoughts.

Philips.

Banish his sorrows, and becalm his soul

With easy dreams.

Addison.

Perhaps prosperity becalm'd his breast;

Perhaps the wind just shifted from the east. Pope.

4. To becalm and to calm differ in this, that to calm is to stop motion, and to becalm is to with-hold from motion.

BECA'LMING. * n. s. [from becalm.] A calm at sea.

Other unlucky accidents oft-times happen in these seas, as when (especially in becalmings) men swim in the bearing ocean. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 6.

Thou art a merchant; what tellest thou me of crosse winds, of Michaelmas flaws, of ill weathers, of tedious becalmings, of piratical hazards. Seasonable Sermon, p. 30.

BECA'ME. The preterite of become; which see.

BECA'USE. † conjunct. [from by and cause.] Formerly written bicause, and by cause. It formerly also expressed the motive or end; but is not now so used, viz. "It is the case of some to contrive false periods, because they may seem men of despatch." Bacon. We now use that for this old sense. See Lowth's Grammar.]

1. For this reason that; on this account that; for this cause that. It makes the first part of an illative proposition either expressly or by implication, and is answered by therefore; as, I fled, because I was afraid; which is the same with, because I was afraid, therefore I fled.

How great soever the sins of any person are, Christ died for him, because he died for all; and he died for those sins, because he died for all sins; only he must reform. Hammond.

Men do not so generally agree in the sense of these as of the other, because the interests, and lusts, and passions of men, are more concerned in the one than the other. Tillotson.

2. It has, in some sort, the force of a preposition; but, because it is compounded of a noun, has of after it.

Infancy demands aliment, such as lengthens fibres without breaking, because of the state of accretion. Arbutnot.

TO BECHA'NCE. v. a. [from be and chance.] To befall; to happen to: a word proper, but now in little use.

My sons, God knows what has bechanced them.

It becometh the king to perform the least word he hath spoken, yea, if he should only beck with his head.

Homily of Prayer, P. 3.

TO BECK. v. a. To call or guide, as by a motion of the head.

Bell, book, and candle, shall not drive me back,

When gold and silver beck me to come on. Shakspeare, K. John.

Oh, this false soul of Egypt, this gay charin,

Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them home.

Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

BECK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sign with the head; a nod.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee

Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,

Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles.

Milton, L' Allegro.

Neither the lusty kind shewed any roughness, nor the easier any idleness; but still like a well-obeyed master, whose beck is enough for discipline. Sidney.

Then forthwith to him takes a chosen band
Of spirits, likest to himself in guile,
To be at hand, and at his beck appear. Milton.

The menial fair, that round her wait,
At Helen's beck prepare the room of state. Pope.

BECK. * n. s. [Sax. becc, a little river; Dutch bece; Dan. beck; Teut. back.] A small stream; a common word in the north of England.

The brooks, the becks, the rills, the rivulets.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 1.

Petty bourns and becks. Ibid. S. xxix.
Stainburn, a stony burn or beck, is a township within this parish, [Workington.] Burn, Hist. of Cumberland, p. 56.

Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his desire unto the people. Acts, xix. 33.

When he had raised my thoughts by those transporting airs, he beckoned to me, and, by the waving of his hand, directed me to approach. Addison.

Sudden you mount! you beckon from the skies,
Clouds interpose, waves roar, and winds arise. Pope.

To BE'CKON. v. a. To make a sign to.
With her two crooked hands she signs did make,
And beckon'd him. Spenser, F. Q.

It beckons you to go away with it,
As it 'th some impartment did desire
To you alone. Shakespeare.

With this his distant friends he beckons near,
Provokes their duty, and prevents their fear. Dryden.

BE'CKON. * n. s. The same as beck. [from the verb.]
A sign with the head; a sign without words.

He, that is corrupted, cooperates with him that corrupts:
he runs into his arms at the first beckon.

To BECL'P. † v. a. [be-clýppan, Sax.] To embrace. One of our oldest verbs, but not exemplified by Dr Johnson.

And he took a child, and sett him in the myddil of hem, and when he hadde beclýpped him, he sayde to hem, Whoever resceyvethe one of sicke children in my name, he resceyvethe me. Wicliffe, S. Mark, ix. 36.

And sodenly, ere she it wiste,
Beclýpt in armes he her kiste. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 1.

To BECL'UD. * v. a. [be and cloud.] To dim, to obscure.

Stella oft sees the very face of woe
Painted in my beclouded stormy face.

Becloud his eyes, which soon fore'd smiling clears.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Bel. 5. st. 15.

To BECOME. † v. n. pret. I became; comp. pret. I have become. [from by and come.]

1. To enter into some state or condition, by a change from some other.

The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Gen. ii. 7.

And unto the Jews I became a Jew, that I might gain the Jews. 1 Cor. ix. 20.

A smaller pear, grafted upon a stock that beareth a greater pear, will become great.

Bacon.

My voice thou oft hast heard, and hast not fear'd,
But still rejoice'd; how is it now become
So dreadful to thee? Milton.

So the least faults, if mix'd with fairest deeds,
Of future ill become the fatal seed. Prior.

2. To become of. To be the fate of; to be the end of; to be the subsequent or final condition of. It is observable, that this word is never, or very seldom, used but with what, either indefinite or interrogative.

What is then become of so huge a multitude, as would have overspread a great part of the continent? Raleigh.

Perplex'd with thoughts, what would become of me, and all mankind? Milton.

The first hints of the circulation of the blood were taken from a common person's wondering what became of all the blood which issued out of the heart. Graunt.

What will become of me then? for when he is free, he will infallibly accuse me. Dryden.

What became of this thoughtful busy creature, when removed from this world, has amazed the vulgar, and puzzled the wise. Rogers.

3. In the following passage, the phrase, where is he become? is used for what is become of him? as Dr. Johnson says. But it is of much older authority than Shakespeare, from whom he cites his example.

Again the day, he him withdrough
So privily, that she ne wiste
Where he become; but as hym liste,
Out of the temple he goth li. way. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 1.

Where is the antique glory now become,
That whylome wont in women to appeare?
Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 1.

I cannot joy, until I be resolved
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakespeare.

4. To go.
You shall have sometimes fair houses so full of glass, that one cannot tell where to become to be out of the sun. Bacon.
To BECOME. v. a. [from be or by, and comen, Sax. to please.

1. Applied to persons, to appear in a manner suitable to something.

If I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up. Shakespeare.

Why would I be a queen? because my face
Would wear the title with a better grace;
If I become it not, yet it would be Part of your duty then to flatter me. Dryden.

2. Applied to things, to be suitable to the person; to besit; to be congruous to the appearance, or character, or circumstances, in such a manner as to add grace; to be graceful.

She to her sire made humble reverence,
And bow'd low, that her right well became,
And added grace unto her excellency. Spenser, F. Q.

I would I had some flowers of spring that might Become your time of day; and your's, and your's,
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads, growing. Shaksp.

Yet be sad, good brothers;
For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you.
Your dishonour. Shakespeare.

Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakespeare.

Wicherly was of my opinion, or rather, I of his: for it becomes me so to speak of so excellent a poet. Dryden.

He utterly rejected their fables concerning their gods, as not becoming good men, much less those which were worshipped for gods. Stillingfleet.

BECOMING. particip. adj. [from become.] That which pleases by an elegant propriety; graceful. It is sometimes used with the particle of; but generally without any government of the following words.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces,

Black eyes, or little know not what, in faces. Suckling.
Their discourses are such as belong to their age, their calling, and their breeding; such as are becoming of them, and of them only. Dryden.

B E D

Yet some becoming boldness I may use;
I've well deserv'd, nor will he now refuse.

Dryden.

Make their pupils repeat the action, that they may correct what is constrained in it, till it be perfected into an habitual and becoming easiness.

Locke.

BECOMING. n. s. [from become.] Ornament. A word not now in use.

Sir, forgive me,

Since my becomings kill me, when they not
Eye well to you.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BECOMINGLY. † adv. [from becoming.] After a becoming or proper manner.

So truly and becomingly religious.

More, Co. j. Cabb. Dedication.

That she may be not only commendable for the innocent privity of her heart, but unblamable for the elegance and decency of her hand; which useth these, as all things, not only lawfully, but expediently, piously, and prudently, conscientiously, and becomingly.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 74.

BECOMINGNESS. † n. s. [from becoming. See To BECOME.] Decency; elegant congruity; propriety.

There is a natural bravery, excellency, and becomingness, in some actions, and there is a baseness and filthiness in others, whether we will or not.

Nor is the majesty of the divine government greater in its extent, than the becomingness hereof is in its manner and form.

Grew.

Let us live with the utmost regard to that beauty and becomingness of virtue, which will make the conduct of a good Christian lovely in the eyes of all that behold it.

Delany, Christmas Sermon.

To BECURL. \ v. a.* [from be and curl.] A ludicrous
word.

Is the beau compelled against his will to practise winning airs before the glass, or employ for whole hours all the thought withinside his noddle to bepowder and becurl the outside.

Search's Freewill, Foreknowledge, and Fate, p. 98.

BED. † n. s. [bed, Sax. budi, Goth. bedde, Dutch.]

1. Something made to sleep on.

Lying not erect, but hollow, which is in the making of the bed; or with the legs gathered up, which is in the posture of the body, is the more wholesome.

Bacon.

Rigour now is gone to bed,

And Advice with scrupulous head.

Milton.

Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds,

With twining oziens fence'd, and moss their beds.

Dryden.

2. Lodging; the convenience of a place to sleep in.

On my knees I beg,

That you'll vouchsafe me, raiment, bed, and food.

Shakspeare.

beds, when they are newly come up, and remove them into pots, with better earth.

Bacon.

5. The channel of a river, or any hollow.

So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low
Down sunk a hollow bottom, broad, and deep,
Capacious bed of waters.

Milton.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is supposed to be the bed of the Tiber. We may be sure, when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sacked by a barbarous enemy, that they would take care to bestow such of their riches that way, as could best bear the water.

Addison.

6. The place where any thing is generated, or reposited.

See hoary Albula's infected tide

O'er the warm bed of smoking sulphur glide.

Addison.

7. A layer; a stratum; a body spread over another.

B E D

I see no reason, but the surface of the land should be as regular as that of the water, in the first production of it; and the strata, or beds within, lie as even.

Burnet.

8. To bring to BED. To deliver of a child. It is often used with the particle of; as, she was brought to bed of a daughter.

lapse, he may possibly fancy that she infected him.

Wiseman.

To BEDDABLE. v. a. [from dabble.] To wet; to be-sprinkle. It is generally applied to persons, in a sense including inconvenience

Never so weary, never so in woe,
Beddabled with the dew, and torn with maws,
I can no further crawl, no further go.

Shakspeare.

To BEDAFF. \ v. a.* [One of our oldest verbs, from daff, a fool; which, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, is the Sax.
daffe. The Icelandick daufr or dauft is certainly a stupid person; to which our word may be referred.

Chaucer ranks a cockney and a daff together.

"When this jape is told another day, I shall be holden a daffe or a cokenay," Reve's Tale. The word daff is yet used as a verb, meaning to daunt, in the north of England; and a daff fellow is a blockish or daunted fellow. It is to be observed that Urry, in the example of this old verb which I cite from Chaucer, reads adassid; but Mr. Tyrwhitt, from the best manuscripts, bedaffed.] To make a fool of.

Be not bedaffed for your innocence.

Clerk's Tale, ad fin.

choose out of such women? Addison.

BEDHANGINGS.* n. s. [from bed and hang.] Curtains; stuff fit for curtains.

The story of the prodigal, or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bedhangings.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

To BEDIGHT.* v. a. [from dight, or perhaps it is the participle of bedeck, as Mr. H. Tooke contends.]

To adorn; to dress; to set off: an old word, now only used in humorous writings.

Nearer to Phœbus, more I am bedight
 With his fair rays. More, Song of the Soul, P. 2. B. 1. C. 2.

A maiden fine bedight he apt to love;

The maiden fine bedight his love retains,

And for the village he forsakes the plains. Gay.

To BEDIM.* v. a. [from dim.] To make dim; to obscure; to cloud; to darken.

Let clouds bedim my face, break in mine eye.
Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

I have bedimm'd

The noontide sun, call'd forth the mutinous winds,
 And 'twixt the green sea and the azure vault

Set roaring war. Shakespeare.

To BEDISMAL.* v. a. [from be and dismal.] To make dismal. A low word.

Let us see your next number not only bedismal'd with broad black lines, death's heads, and cross marrow-bones, but sewed with black thread! Student, ii. 259.

To BEDIZEN.* v. a. [from dizen.] To dress out: a low word.

The name bedizen'd by the pedant muse,
 The place of fame and elegy supplies.

Headley, Parody of Gray's Elegy.

BE'DLAM.† n. s. [corrupted from Bethlehem, the name of a religious house in London, converted afterwards into an hospital for the mad and lunatick.]

1. A madhouse; a place appointed for the cure of lunacy.

They should have provided—an hundred bedlams to entertain pious, zealous, and outrageous puritans, who have lost their wits and senses. Spelman's Hist. of Sacrilege, ch. 6.

Is this the language of the Exchange, or of the Ensuring-Office? Once in a man's life, he might be content at Bedlam to hear such a rapture. Rymer on Tragedy, p. 5.

All ask, what crouds the tumult could produce—
Is Bedlam or the Commons all broke loose?

T. Warton's Newmarket.

2. A madman; a lunatick, an inhabitant of Bedlam.

Let's follow the old earl, and get the bedlam
To lead him where he would; his roguish madness
Allows itself to any thing.

Shakspeare.

BE'DLAM.† adj. [from the noun.] Belonging to a madhouse; fit for a madhouse. Dr. Johnson might have added that this adjective, in the sense of mad, is applied to things as well as persons; and is of older authority than that of Shakspeare; for Huloet and Barret, in their dictionaries, give “a bedlam body,” which is rendered furious.

The country gives me proof and precedent
Of bedlam beggars, who with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms,
Pins, wooden pricks.

Shakspeare.

They accounted them bedlam fools, who did not believe that the drunkenness of the German people was the true foundation and establishment of so many famous republicks as were now seen among them. Transl. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 51.

This which follows is plain bedlam stuff; this is the demoniac legion indeed. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnu.

Life to the immortal, death to the perishing part of thee;
blessing to the rational, divine; cursing to the bedlam, brutish part of thee. Hammond's Sermons, p. 511.

BE'DLAMITE.† n. s. [from bedlam.] An inhabitant of Bedlam; a madman.

The nurse enters like a frantick bedlamite.

B. Jonson, New Inn, Argument.

If wild ambition in thy bosom reign,
Alas! thou boast'st thy sober sense in vain;
In these poor bedlamites thyself survey,
Thyself less innocently mad than they.

Fitzgerald.

Had the Egyptian prince intended the ruin of this city of wicked bedlamites, he could not have taken a more effectual method to do it, than by such an ensnaring largess.

Burke's Vind. of Natural Society.

BE'DMAKER. n. s. [from bed and make.] A person in the universities, whose office it is to make the beds, and clean the chambers.

I was deeply in love with my bedmaker, upon which I was rusticated for ever. Spectator.

BE'DMATE. n. s. [from bed and mate.] A bedfellow; one that partakes of the same bed.

Had I so good occasion to lie long
As you, prince Paris, nought but heav'nly business
Should rob my bedmate of my company.

Shakspeare.

BE'DMOULDING. } n. s. [from bed and mould.]

BE'DDING-MOULDING. } A term used by workmen, to signify those members in the cornice, which are placed below the coronet. Builder's Dict.

To BEDOTE.* v. a. [from be and dote.] To make to dote. Obsolete.

To bedote this queene was their intent.

Chaucer, Leg. of Hips. ver. 180.

POST. n. s. [from bed and post.] The post at the corner of the bed, which supports the canopy.

B E D

I came the next day prepared, and placed her in a clear light, her head leaning to a bedpost, another standing behind, holding it steady. Wiseman's Surgery.

BE'DPRESSER. n. s. [from bed and press.] A heavy lazy fellow.

This sanguine coward, this bedpresser, this horseback-breaker, this huge hill of flesh. Shakspeare.

BE'DRAGGLE. v. a. [from be and draggle.] To soil the cloaths, by suffering them, in walking, to reach the dirt.

Poor Patty Blount, no more be seen
Bedraggled in my walks so green.

Swift.

To BEDRENCH. v. a. [from be and drench.] To drench; to soak; to saturate with moisture.

Far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tophet should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land. Shakspeare.

BE'DRID.† adj. [Sax. bedruba, clanicus; Teut. bedder, Germ. bed-reise.] Confined to the bed by age or sickness.

Norway, uncle of young Fontinbras,
Who, impotent and bedrid, scarcely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose.

Shakspeare.

Lies he not bedrid? and, again, does nothin,
But what he did being childish?

Shakspeare.

Now, as a myria:

Of ants durst th' emperor's lov'd snake invade;
The crawling galleys, seagulls, finny chips,
Might brave our pinnaces, now bedrid ships.

Donne, Poems, p. 145.

Hanging old men, who were bedrid, because they would not discover where their money was. Clarendon.

Infirm persons, when they come to be so weak as to be fixed to their beds, hold out many years; some have lain bedrid twenty years. Ray.

BE'DROOM.* n. s. [from bed and room.] A bed-chamber.

BE'DRITE. n. s. [from bed and rite.] The privilege of the marriage bed.

Whose vows are, that no bedrite shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be lighted.

Shakspeare.

To BEDROP.† v. a. [from be and drop.] To besprinkle; to mark with spots or drops; to speckle.

In clothis black bedropped all with tears.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

Not so thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedrop with blood of Gorgon.

Milton.

Our plenteous streams a various race supply;
The silver eel in shining volumes roll'd,
The yellow carp, in scales bedropt with gold.

Pope.

BE'DSIDE.* n. s. [from bed and side.] The side of the bed.

Last night he plaid his horrid game agen,
Came to my bed-side at the full of midnight,
And in his hand that fatal fearful cup.

Middleton's Witch, ii. 2.

When I was thus dressed, I was carried to a bed-side.

Taller, No. 15.

BE'DSTAFF. [bed and staff.] A wooden pin stuck anciently on sides of the bedstead to hold the cloaths from slipping on either side.

Hostess, accommodate us with a bedstaff.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

BE'DSTEAD. n. s. [from bed and stead.] The frame on which the bed is placed.

Chimnies with scorn rejecting smoke;
Stools; tables, chairs, and bedsteads broke.

Swift.

BE'DSTRAW. n. s. [from bed and straw.] The straw laid under a bed to make it soft.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture; or the chamber or bedstraw kept close, and not aired. Bacon.

B E E

BEDSWEVER. n. s. [from bed and swerve.] One that is false to the bed; one that ranges or swerves from one bed to another.

She's a bedswerver, even as bad as those,
That vulgar give the boldest titles to. Shakespeare.

BEDTIME. † n. s. [from bed and time; formerly bedtide, from the Sax. bedtīd.] The hour of rest; sleeping time.

What masks, what dances shall we have,
To wear away this long age of three hours,
Between our after-supper and bedtime? Shakespeare.

After evening repasts, till bedtime, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion. Milton on Education.
The scouring drunkard, if he does not fight
Before his bedtime, takes no rest that night. Dryden.

TO BEDD'CK.* v. a. [from be and duck.] To put under water.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiersly leapt,
And deepe himself beducked in the same. Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 42.

TO BEDD'NG.† v. a. [from be and dung.] To cover, or manure with dung.

Leaving all but his [Goliah's] head to bedung that earth,
Which had lately shaken at his terrour.

Bp. Hall, Comes of Cons. ii. 2.

If they will fall quaking and groaning intolerably, and appear in the streets, as some have done, soundly be-dunged with calumny and filth; such may make some people believe any Romish tenets as revelations from God.

Puller's Moderation of the Ch. of England, p. 485.

TO BEDD'SK.* v. a. [from be and dusk.] To smutch; to make brown, swart, or blackish. Not now in use.

Shirwood.

BEDWARD. adv. [from bed and ward.] Toward bed.

In heart

As merry, as when our nuptial-day was done,
And tapers burnt to bedward. Shakespeare.

TO BEDWARF. v. a. [from be and dwarf.] To make little; to hinder in growth; to stunt.

'Tis shrinking, not close weaving, that hath thus
In mind and body both bedwarfed us. Donne.

BEDWORK. n. s. [from bed and work.] Work done in bed; work performed without toil of the hands.

The still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fitness call them on, and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemy's weight;
Why this hath not a finger's dignity:
They call this bedwork, mappery, closet war. Shakespeare.

TO BEDY'E.* v. a. [of be and dye.] To stain; to colour.

Fayre goddess, lay that furious fitt asyde,
Till I of warres and bloody Mars doe sing,
And Briton fields with Sarazin blood bedyde.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 7.

BEE. n. s. [beo, Saxon.]

1. The animal that makes honey, remarkable for its industry and art.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that, by a ruling nature, teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakespeare.

From the Moorish camp,
There has been heard a distant humming noise,
Like bees disturb'd, and arming in their hives. Dryden.

A company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers, and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other viands. Locke.

2. An industrious and careful person. This signification is only used in familiar language.

BEE-EATER. n. s. [from bee and eat.] A bird that feeds upon bees.

VOL. I.

B E E

BEE-FLOWER. n. s. [from bee and flower.] A species of foolstones. Miller.

BEE-GARDEN. n. s. [from bee and garden.] A place to set hives of bees in.

A convenient and necessary place ought to be made choice of, for your apiary, or bee-garden. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BEE-HIVE.† n. s. [from bee and hive.] The case, or box, in which bees are kept.

Drones suck not eagles' blood, but rob beehives.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

I find, in the school of nature, no better emblem of this commendable resignation of ourselves to publick service, than the beehive. Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 375.

Or rob the beehive of its golden hoard.

Tickell, to a Lady before Marriage.

BEE-MASTER. n. s. [from bee and master.] One that keeps bees.

They that are bee-masters, and have not care enough of them, must not expect to reap any considerable advantage by them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BEECH. n. s. [bece, or boc, Saxon; fagus.]

There is but one species of this tree at present known, except two varieties, with striped leaves. It will grow to a considerable stature, though the soil be stony and barren; as also, upon the declivities of mountains. The shade of this tree is very injurious to plants, but is believed to be very salubrious to human bodies. The timber is of great use to turners and joiners. The mast is very good to fatten swine and deer. Miller.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood. Dryden.

Nor is that sprightly wildness in their notes,

Which, clear and vigorous, warbles from the beech. Thomson.

BEECHEN. adj. [bece, Sax.] Consisting of the wood of the beech; belonging to the beech.

With diligence he'll serve us when we dine,

And in plain beechen vessels fill our wine.

Congreve, Juv. Sat. xi.

BEEF.† n. s. [baef, French.]

1. The flesh of black cattle prepared for food.

What say you to a piece of beef and mustard? Shakespeare.
The fat of roasted beef falling on birds, will waste them. Swift.

2. An ox, bull, or cow, considered as fit for food. In this sense it has the plural beeves; the singular is seldom found, Dr. Johnson says. The passage in Shakespeare, however, in which he has given beeves, has beefs. This word, beef, was the common language, as Mr. Malone also has observed, for an ox or cow in the time of queen Elizabeth; since which time it has been disused in England, but was then carried to Scotland, and is still retained there.

These are the beasts which ye shall eat; the beef, the sheep, and the goat. Deut. xiv. 4. (Tr. of 1578.)

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice, 1.3.

Alcinous slew twelve sheep, eight white-tooth'd swine,
Two crook-naunch'd beeves. Chapman's Odyssey.

There was not any captain, but had credit for more victuals than we spent there; and yet they had of me fifty beeves among them. Sir Walter Raleigh's Apology.

On hides of beeves, before the palace gate,
Sad spoils of luxury! the suitors sate. Pope.

BEEF.† adj. [from the substantive, Dr. Johnson says; but it is only the substantive used adjectively, as Mr. Mason has observed; which is common enough in our language.] Consisting of the flesh of black cattle.

If you are employed in marketing, do not accept of a treat of a beef stake, and a pot of ale, from the butcher. Swift.

BEEF-EATER. † n. s. [from beef and eat, because the commons is beef when on waiting. Mr. Steevens derives it thus: Beef-eater may come from beaufetier, one who attends at the sideboard, which was anciently placed in a beaufet. The business of the beef-eaters was, and perhaps is still, to attend the king at meals. This derivation is corroborated by the circumstance of the beef-eaters having a hasp suspended to their belts for the reception of keys.] A yeoman of the guard.

BEEF-WITTED. adj. [from beef and wit.] Dull; stupid; heavy-headed.

Thou mongrel, beef-witted lord! Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

BEELD.* n. s. [Sax. behlban, (Gen. xxix. 3.) to secure with a covering. Beeld is common in the north of England for shelter.] Protection; refuge.

I will or bear, or be myself, thy shield;

And, to defend thy life, will lose my own:

This breast, this bosom soft, shall be thy beeld

'Gainst storms of arrows.

Fairfax, Tasso, xvi. 49.

BE'EMOL. n. s. This word I have found only in the example, and know nothing of the etymology, unless it be a corruption of bymodule, from by and module, a note; that is, a note out of the regular order.

There be intervenient in the rise of eight, in tones, two beemols, or half notes; so as, if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes. Baron, Nat. Hist.

BEEN.† [beon, Saxon.]

1. The participle preterite of To BE.

Enough that virtue fill'd the space between,
Prov'd by the ends of being to have been.

Pope.

2. The present tense plural of To BE. Obsolete.

Such earthly metals soon consumed beene.

Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 33.

BEER.† n. s. [bir, Welsh, bier, Germ. beap, Sax. bar, Goth. barley.] Liquor made of malt and hops. It is distinguished from ale, either by being older or smaller.

Put them all together, they will scarce

Serve to beg single beer in.

Braun, and Fl. Captain, ii. 1.

Try clarifying with almonds in new beer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Flow, Welsted! flow, like thine inspirer, beer;

Though stale, not ripe; and tho' thin, yet never clear;

So sweetly mawkish, and so smoothly dull;

Heady, not strong; and foaming, though not full.

Pope.

BE'ERBARREL.* n. s. A barrel which holds beer.

Why, of that loam, whereto he was converted, might they not stop a beer-barrel?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

BE'ERHOUSE.* n. s. [from beer and house.] The old term for what is now alehouse.

What woman (even among the drunken Almshouses) is suffered to follow her in, or into the alehouse or beerhouse?

Giles, The Delicate Diet for Drunkards, (1576).

BE'ESTINGS. See B'ESTINGS.

BEE. n. s. [beta, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The species are; 1. The common white beet.

2. The common green beet. 3. The common red beet. 4. The turnep-rooted red beet. 5. The great red beet. 6. The yellow beet. 7. The Swiss or Chard beet. Miller.

BE'ETLE. n. s. [býtel, Saxon.]

1. An insect distinguished by having hard cases or sheaths, under which he folds his wings.

They are as shards, and he their beetle.

Shakespeare.

The poor beetle, that we tread upon,

His corporal sufferance finds a pang as great,

As when a giant dies.

Shakespeare.

Others come sharp of sight, and too provident for that which concerned their own interest, but as blind as beetles in foreseeing this great and common danger. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

B E F

A grot there was with hoary moss o'ergrown,
The clasping ivies up the ruin creep,
And there the bat and drowsy beetle sleep.

Garth.

The butterflies and beetles are such numerous tribes, that I believe, in our own native country alone, the species of each kind may amount to one hundred and fifty, or more. Ray.

2. A heavy mallet, or wooden hanmer, with which wedges are driven, and pavements rammed.

If I do, fillip me with a three man beetle.

Shakespeare.

When, by the help of wedges and beetles, an image is cleft out of the trunk of some well-grown tree; yet, after all the skill of artificers to set forth such a divine block, it cannot, one moment, secure itself from being eaten by worms, or defiled by birds, or cut in pieces by axes.

Stillington.

To BE'ETLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To jut out; to hang over.

What if it tempt you toward the flood, my lord?

Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,

That beetlet o'er his base into the sea?

Shakespeare.

Or where the hawk,

High in the beetling cliff his airy builds.

Thomson.

BE'ETLEBROW.* n. s. [from beetle and brow.] A prominent brow.

He had a beetle-brow,

A down-look, middle stature, with black hair.

Sir R. Fanshawe, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 175.

They make a wit of their insipid friend;

His hlobber-lips and beetle-brows commy'd. Dryden, Jur. Sat. iii.

BE'ETLEBROWED.† adj. [from beetle and brow.] Having prominent brows. Dr. Johnson cites an example from Swift; but the expression is of great antiquity, as it occurs in the Visions of Pierce Plowman; and I think Dryden, in his adoption of beetle-brows, just cited, had not forgotten the passage.

He was bittle-browed and baberypped also. Vis. of P. Plowman.

A beetle-browed sullen face makes a palace as smoaky as an Irish hut.

Howell's Letters, ii. 25.

Enquire for the beetle-browed critick, &c.

Swift.

BE'ETLEHEADED.† adj. [from beetle and head.] Logger-headed; wooden headed; having a head stupid like the head of a wooden beetle. Hulot uses the phrase "a beetle-headed fellow," long before Shakespeare.

A whorson, beetle-headed, flap-ear'd knave.

Shakespeare.

BE'ETLESTOCK.† n. s. [from beetle and stock.] The handle of a beetle.

To crouch, to please, to be a beetle-stock

Of thy great master's will.

Spenser, M. Hubbard's Tale.

BE'ETRAVE.

BE'ETRADISH.

} A plant.

BE'EVES. n. s. [The plural of beef.] Black cattle; oxen.

One way, a band select from forage drives

A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,

From a fat meadow ground.

Milton, P. L.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the length and duration of their days; whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous, first, in bisculous or cloven-hoofed, as camels; and beeves, whereof there is above a million annually slain in England.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Beeves, at his touch, at once to jelly turn,

And the huge boar is shrunk into an urn.

Pope, Dunciad.

To BEFA'LL.† v. n. [Sax. beƿeallan, particip. beƿeallen. It befell, it hath befallen.]

1. To happen to: used generally of ill.

Let me know

The worst that may befall me in this case.

Shakespeare.

Other doubt possesses me, lest harm

Befall thee, sever'd from me.

Milton.

This venerable person, who probably heard our Saviour's prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, drew his congregation out of those unparalleled calamities, which befell his countrymen.

Addison on the Chr. Religion.

This disgrace has befallen them, not because they deserved it, but because the people long new bees. Addison, Freeholder.

2. To happen to, as good or neutral.

Bion asked an envious man, that was very sad, what harm had befallen unto him, or what good had befallen unto another man? Bacon, Apophthegms.

No man can certainly conclude God's love or hatred to any person, from what befalls him in this world. Tillotson.

3. To happen; to come to pass.

But since the affairs of men are still uncertain, Let's reason with the worst that may befall. Shakespeare.

I have reveal'd
This discord which befall, and was in heaven
Among the angelick powers. Milton, P. L.

4. It is used sometimes with to before the person to whom any thing happens: this is rare.

Some great mischief hath befallen
To that meek man. Milton, P. L.

5. To befall of: To become of; to be the state or condition of: a phrase little used.

Do me the favour to dilate at full,
What hath befall'n of them, and thee, till now. Shakespeare.

To BEF'LT. v. a. [from be and fit.] To suit; to be suitable to; to become.

Blind is his love, and best befits the dark.
Out of my sight, thou serpent! — that name best

Befts thee, with him leagu'd; thyself as false. Milton, P. L.

I will bring you where she sits,
Clad in splendour, as befts
Her deity. Milton, P. L.

Thou, what befts the new lord mayor,
Art anxiously inquisitive to know. Dryden.

To BEFO'AM. * v. a. [from foam.] To cover with foam.

At last the dropping wings, befoam'd all o'er
With flaggy heaviness their master bore. Eusden, On. Met. iv.

To BEFO'OL. † v. a. [from be and fool.] To infatuate; to fool; to deprive of understanding; to lead into error.

Go then, and befool yourselves, for confusedly opposing common sense and reason. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 185.

To be so pitifully baffled and befooled. Hammond, Serm. p. 567.

Men befool themselves infinitely, when, by venting a few sighs, they will needs persuade themselves that they have repented. South.

Jeroboan thought policy the best piety, though in nothing more befooled; the nature of sin being not only to defile, but to infatuate. South.

BEFO'RE. prep. [beforan, Sax.]

1. Farther onward in place.

Their common practice was to look no further before them than the next line; whence it will follow that they can drive to no certain point. Dryden.

2. In the front of; not behind.

Who shall go
Before them in a cloud, and pillar of fire:
By day a cloud, by night a pillar of fire,
To guide them in their journey, and remove Behind them, while the obdurate king pursues. Milton.

3. In the presence of: noting authority or conquest.

Great queen of gathering clouds,
See we fall before thee!
Prostrate we adore thee. Dryden.

The Alps and Pyrenean sink before him. Addison.

4. In the presence of: noting respect.

We see that blushing, and the casting down of the eyes both are more when we come before many. Bacon.

They represent our poet betwixt a farmer and a courtier, when he dress'd himself in his best habit, to appear before his patron. Dryden.

5. In sight of.

Before the eyes of both our armies here,
Let us not wrangle. Shakespeare.

6. Under the cognizance of: noting jurisdiction.

If a suit be begun before an archdeacon, the ordinary may license the suit to an higher court. Ayliffe.

7. In the power of: noting the right of choice.

The world was all before them, where to chuse
Their place of rest, and Providence their guide. Milton.

Give us this evening; thou hast morn and night,
And all the year before thee for delight.

He hath put us in the hands of our own counsel.
death, prosperity and destruction are before us. Dryden.

8. By the impulse of something behind.

Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened
With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind.
Hurried by fate, he cries, and borne before
A furious wind, we leave the faithful shore. Shakespeare.

9. Preceding in time.

Particular advantages it has before all the books which have appeared before it in this kind. Dryden.

10. In preference to.

We should but presume to determine which should be the fittest till we see he hath chosen some one, which one we may then boldly say to be the fittest, because he hath taken it before the rest. Hooker.

We think poverty to be infinitely desirable before the torments of covetousness. Bp. Taylor.

11. Prior to; nearer to any thing: as, the eldest son is before the younger in succession.

12. Superiour to: as he is before his competitors both in right and power.

BEFO'RE. adv.

lights many times upon this, that are disposed of, or not beg-gable. Butler's Characters.
- BEGGAR. n. s. [from beg.] It is more properly written begger; but the common orthography is retained, because the derivatives all preserve the a, Dr. Johnson says. They certainly now ~~do~~, but formerly the principal derivative, beggary, was written beggerly. Milton, Hammon, and other excellent writers so spelt it.]
1. One who lives upon alms; one who has nothing but what is given him.
He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the

To BEG'IN. v. n. I began, or begun; I have begun. [beginnan, Sax. from be, or by to, and gan, gan, or gan, to go.]

1. To enter upon something new: applied to persons.

Begin every day to repent: not that thou shouldst at all defer it: but all that is past ought to seem little to thee, seeing it is so in itself. Begin the next day with the same zeal, fear, and humility, as if thou hadst never begun before.

Bp. Taylor.

2. To commence any action or state; to do the first act, or first part of an act; to make the first step from not doing to doing.

They begin at the ancient men which were before the house.

Ezekiel, ix. 6.

By peace we will begin.

Shakspeare.

I'll sing of heroes and of kings;

Begin my muse.

Cowley.

Of these no more you hear him speak;

He now begins upon the Greek:

These rang'd and show'd, shall, in their turns,

Remain obscure as in their urns.

Prior.

Beginning from the rural gods, his hand

Was liberal to the powers of high command.

Dryden.

Rapt into future times, the bard begun,

A virgin shall conceive.

Pope.

3. To enter upon existence; as, the world began; the practice began.

I am as free as nature, first made man

Ere the base laws of servitude began,

When wild in woods the noble savage ran.

Dryden.

4. To have its original.

And thus the hard and stubborn ace of man,

From animated rock and flint began.

Blackmore.

From Nimrod first the savage chace began;

A mighty hunter, and his game was man.

Pope.

5. To take rise; to commence.

Judgement must begin at the house of God. 1 Peter, iv. 17.

The song begun from Jove.

Dryden.

B E G

All began,
All ends in love of God, and love of man.

Pope.

6. To come into act.

Now and then a sigh he stole,

And tears began to flow.

Dryden.

To BEG'IN. v. a.

1. To do the first act of any thing; to pass from not doing to doing, by the first act.

Ye nymphs of Solyma, begin the song.

Pope.

They have been awaked, by these awful scenes, to begin religion; and, afterwards, their virtue has improved itself into more refined principles, by divine grace.

Watts.

2. To trace from any thing as the first ground.

The apostle begins our knowledge in the creatures, which leads us to the knowledge of God.

Locke.

3. To begin with. To enter upon; to fall to work upon.

A lesson which requires so much time to learn, had need be early begun with.

Government of the Tongue.

BEG'IN.* n. s. Used by Spenser for beginning. Obsolete.

Let no whit thee dismay

The hard beginne that meets thee in the dore.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 21.

BEG'INNER. n. s. [from begin.]

1. He that gives the first cause, or original, to any thing.

Thus heaping crime on crime, and grief on grief,

To loss of love adjoining loss of friend,

I meant to purge both with a third mischief,

And, in my woe's beginner, it to end.

Spenser, F. Q.

Socrates maketh Ignatius, the bishop of Antioch, the first beginner thereof, even under the apostles themselves.

Hooker.

2. An unexperienced attempter; one in his rudiments; a young practitioner.

Palladius, behaving himself nothing like a beginner, brought the honour to the Iberian side.

Sidney.

They are, to beginners, an easy and familiar introduction; a mighty augmentation of all virtue and knowledge in such as are entered before.

Hooker.

I have taken a list of several hundred words in a sermon of a new beginner, which not one hearer could possibly understand.

Swift.

BEG'INNING. n. s. [from begin.]

1. The first original or cause.

Wherever we place the beginning of motion, whether from the head or the heart, the body moves and acts by a consent of all its parts.

Swift.

2. The entrance into act, or being.

In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth.

Genesis, i. 1.

3. The state in which any thing first is.

Youth, what man's age is like to be, doth show;

We may our end by our beginning know.

Denham.

4. The rudiments, or first grounds or materials.

By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, art,

Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow:

Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,

Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow.

Dryden.

The understanding is passive; and whether or not it will have these beginnings, and materials of knowledge, is not in its own power.

Locke.

5. The first part of any thing.

The causes and designs of an action, are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end.

BEG'INNINGLESS.* adj. [from beginning.] W. Schest is 310; and to hath no beginning.

Melchisedeck, in a typical or mystical . . . Vocab. 1514.] and endless in his existence.

To BEGIRD. † v. a. I begirt, or begirded. [I have begirt.

Sax. berypdan, Goth. bigardans, S. Luke xvii. 8.]

1. To bind with a girdle.

2. To surround; to encircle; to encompass.

Begird the Almighty throne,

Beseeking, or besieging

Milton, P. L. ii. 213.

Or should she confident,

As sitting queen adorn'd on beauty's throne,

Descend, with all her winning charms begirt,

To enamour.

Milton, P. L. v. 868.

At home surrounded by a servile crowd,

Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud:

Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears;

His very state acknowledging his fears.

Prior.

3. To shut in with a siege; to beleaguer; to block up.

It was so closely begirt before the king's march into the west, that the counsel humbly desired his majesty, that he would relieve it.

Clarendon.

To BEGIRT. † v. a. [This is, I think, only a corruption of begird; perhaps by the printer, Dr. Johnson says; but he is mistaken; begirt being no corruption in excellent writers, as my examples from Mede and Milton prove.] To begird.

And, Lentulus, begirt you Pompey's house,

To seize his sons alive; for they are they Must make our peace with him.

B. Jonson.

Both significations suit well to an army; and the latter, that which beleaguers and begirts a city or fort besieged.

Mede on Daniel, p. 41.

Was it that he who came to abrogate the burden of the law, not the equity, should put this yoke upon a blameless person, to league himself in chains with a begirting mischief, not to separate till death

Milton, Tetrachordon.

BEGLERBEG. † n. s. [Turkish.] The chief governour of a province among the Turks; or rather of provinces, as Mr. Mason has rightly observed.

Next to the first vizier are the several beglerbeks, having under their jurisdiction many provinces.

Ricaut.

To BEGNAW. † v. a. [Sax. begnagan. Mr. Mason has inadvertently given this word as beknaw, charging Dr. Johnson with an omission, where his example from Shakspeare's K. Richard, cited by Mr. Mason to exemplify beknaw which has no real existence, illustrates the genuine word begnaw.]

To bite; to eat away; to corrode; to nibble.

His horse is stark spoiled with the ladders, begnawn with the hots, waid in the back, and shoulder-shotten.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul.

Shakspeare, Richard III.

BEGONE. † interject. Only a coalition of the words be gone, Dr. Johnson says. But it is the old participle also for gone; and we yet use "woe begone,"

i. e. far gone in woe; and in the dialect of Norfolk and Suffolk, begone is decayed or worn. Go away; hence; haste away.

I was a lusty one,

And faire, and riche, and yonge, and well begone.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prolog.

Begone! the goddess cries, with stern disdain;

Begone! nor dare the hallow'd stream to stain.

She fled, for ever banish'd from the train.

Addison.

nificent sentiments of Gothiphotos the brave,

3. To produce, as acc. The ban slave.

Dryde

To BEGRAVE. † v. a. [Teut. begraven, from graw, a grave.]

Frequently used by Gower.

1. To bury. Obsolete.

They arrive

Where that the body was begrave

With worship.

Gower, Conf. Am. b. 4.

2. To engrave. Obsolete also.

[He] stood upon a foote on highte

Of borned golde; and with great sleight

Of workmanship it was begrave.

Ibid. b. i.

To BEGREASE. † v. a. [from be and grease.] To soil or dawb with unctuous or fat matter. Minsheu.

To BEGRIME. † v. a. [from be and grime. See GRIME and GRIM.] To soil with dirt deep impressed; to soil in such a manner that the natural hue cannot easily be recovered.

They did endeavour to purge it [religion] of all such filth as you and your predecessors had begrimed it with.

Cromley's Deliberate Answer, &c. (1587) fol. 80.

Her name that was as fresh

As Dian's visage, is now begrin'd, and black

As my own face.

Shakspeare.

BEGRIMER. † n. s. [from begrime.] That which soils or spots a thing. Sherwood.

To BEGRUDGE. † v. a. [from be and grudge. See TO GRUDGE.] To envy.

None will have cause to begrudge the beauty or height of corner stones, when beholding them to beare a double degree of weight in the building.

Standard of Equality, § 25.

To BEGUILE. v. a. [from be and guile.]

1. To impose upon; to delude; to cheat.

This I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words.

Colossians, ii. 4.

The serpent me beguil'd, and I did eat!

Whosoever sees a man, who would have beguiled, and imposed upon him, by making him believe a lie, he may truly say, that is the man who would have ruined me.

South.

2. To deceive; to evade.

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Tis yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

Shakspeare.

3. To deceive pleasingly; to amuse.

Sweet, leave me here awhile;

My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile

The tedious day with sleep.

Shakspeare.

With these sometimes she doth her time beguile;

These do by fits her phantasy possess.

Sir J. Daines.

To BEGUILTY. † v. a. [from be and guilty.] To render guilty.

By easy commutations of publick penance for a private pecuniary mulct, [thou] dost at once beguilty thine own conscience with sordid bribery, and embolden the adulterer to commit that sin again without fear, from which he hath once escaped without shame, or so much as valuable loss.

Bp. Sanderson, Sermons, p. 275.

BEGUIN. † n. s. [Fr. beguin, low Lat. beghina. V. Du Cange.] A nun of a particular order, supposed to be so named from beguin, old Fr., a kind of coif, or head-dress; or begine, Germ. Matthew of Westminster says that the order of beguins was very common in Germany. Cotgrave says, that they "commonly be all old, or well in years," in V. BEGUIN. This word is given on account of bigot, which see.

Young wanton wenches, and beguins, nuns, and naughty nicks.

World of Wonders, (1668) p. 184.

BEGUN. † The participle passive of begin, Dr. Johnson says; but the example which he gives, proves it to be merely the preterperfect tense of begin. [Sax. begunne.]

But thou bright morning star, thou rising sun,
Which in these latter times has brought to light
Those mysteries, that, since the world begun,
Lay hid in darkness and eternal night.

Sir J. Davies.

BEHALF. † n. s. [This word Skinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half; as, for my part. It seems to me rather corrupted from behoof, profit; the pronunciation degenerating easily to behave; which, in imitation of other words so sounded, was written, by those who knew not the etymology, behalf. This remark of Dr. Johnson approaches nearly to the genuine Sax. behefe, which escaped him.]

1. Favour; cause favoured; we say in behalf, but for the sake.

He was in confidence with those who designed the destruction of Strafford; against whom he had contracted some prejudice, in the behalf of his nation.

Clarendon.

Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf.

Addison.

Never was any nation blessed with more frequent interpositions of Divine Providence in its behalf.

Atterbury.

2. Vindication; support.

He might, in his presence, defy all Arcadian knights, in the behalf of his mistress's beauty.

Sidney.

Rest the fiend,

Or in behalf of man, or to invade
Vacant possession, some new trouble raise.

Milton.

Others believe, that by the two Fortunes, were meant prosperity or affliction; and produce, in their behalf, an ancient monument.

Addison on Italy.

To BEHAPPEN. * v. n. [from be and happen.] To happen to; to befall.

This is the greatest shame, and foulest scorn,
Which unto any knight bechappen may,
To lose the badge that should his deeds display.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 52.

To BEHAVE. † v. a. [Sax. See BEHALF. pel-behofen, well adorned. V. Lye in behopen.] † to employ;

1. To carry; to conduct: used almost always with the reciprocal pronoun.

We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you. 2 Thess. iii. 7.
Manifest signs came from heaven, unto those that behaved themselves unfaithfully.

2 Maccabees, ii. 21.

To their wills wedded, to their errors slaves,
No man, like them, they think, himself behaves.

Denham.

We so live, and so act, as if we were secure of the final issue and event of things, however we may behave ourselves.

Atterbury.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of, to govern; to subdue; to discipline: but this is not now used. In these passages, it is the Sax. behabban, from the Goth. haban, being the primitive sense of the word.

But who his limbs with labours, and his mind
Behaves with cares, cannot so easy miss.

Spenser, F. Q.

With such sober and unnoted passion
He did behave his anger, ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument.

Shaksp. Tim. of Athens.

To BEHAVE. v. n. To act; to conduct one's self. It is taken either in a good or a bad sense; as he behaved well or ill.

BEHAVIOUR. n. s. [from behave.]

1. Manner of behaving one's self, whether good or bad; manners; carriage with respect to propriety.

Mopsa, curious in any thing but her own good behaviour, followed Zelmane.

Sidney.

2. External appearance, with respect to grace.

He marked, in Dora's dancing, good grace and handsome behaviour.

Sidney.

3. Gesture; manner of action, adapted to particular occasions.

Well witnessing the most submissive behaviour, that a thrall'd heart could express.

Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility.

Hooker.

One man sees how much another man is a fool, when he dedicates his behaviour to love.

Shakspere.

And he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands.

1 Samuel, xxi. 13.

4. Elegance of manners; gracefulness.

The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behaviour than virtue.

Bacon.

He who adviseth the philosopher, altogether devoted to the Muses, sometimes to offer sacrifice to the altars of the Graces, thought knowledge imperfect without behaviour.

Wotton.

5. Conduct; general practice; course of life.

To him, who hath a prospect of the state that attends men after this life, depending on their behaviour here, the measures of good and evil are changed.

Locke.

6. To be upon one's behaviour. A familiar phrase, noting such a state as requires great caution; a state in which a failure in behaviour will have bad consequences.

Tyrants themselves are upon their behaviour to a superior power.

L'Estrange, Fables.

To BEHEAD. v. a. [from be and head.] To deprive of the head; to kill by cutting off the head.

His beheading he underwent with all christian magnanimity.

Clarendon.

On each side they fly,

By chains connext, and, with destructive sweep,
Behead whole troops at once.

Philips.

Mary, queen of Scots, was beheaded in the reign of queen Elizabeth.

Addison on Italy.

To BEHOLD. * v. a. [from be and hell.] To torture as with the pains of hell.

Satan, Death, and Hell, were his inveterate foes, that either drew him to perdition, or did beheld and wrack him with the expectation of them.

Henry's Sermon (1658) p. 72.

BEHOLD. particip. passive, from beheld; which see.

All hail! ye virgin daughters of the main!

Ye streams, beyond my hopes beheld again!

Pope, Odyssey.

BEHEMOTH. n. s. Behemoth, in Hebrew, signifies beasts in general, particularly the larger kind, fit for service. But Job speaks of an animal behemoth, and describes its properties. Bochart has taken much care to make it the hippopotamus, or river-horse. Sanctius thinks it is an ox. The Fathers suppose the devil to be meant by it. But we agree with the generality of interpreters, that it is the elephant.

Culmet.

Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox.

Job, xl. 15.

Behold! in plaited mail

Behemoth rears his head.

Thomson.

BEHEN. } n. s. Valerian roots. Also a fruit resembling the tamarisk, from which perfumers extract an oil.

Dict.

BEHEST. † n. s. [Either from be and hæfe, Sax. a command; or from beheban, to behight; which verb signifies, among other senses, to command; though not so noticed by Dr. Johnson. Behest is in the Prompt. Parv. rendered promissio; and to behight, promitto, as also in the Ort. Vocab. 1514.] Command; precept; mandate.

Her tender youth had obediently lived under her parents' behests, without framing, out of her own will, the forechoosing of any thing.

Sidney.

Such joy he had their stubborn hearts to quell,
And sturdy courage tame with dreadful awe,
That his behest they fear'd as a proud tyrant's law. Spenser, F. Q.
I, messenger from everlasting Jove,
In his great name thus his behest do tell. Fairfax, Tasso.

To visit oft these happy tribes,
On high behests his angels to and fro
Pass'd frequent. Milton, P. L.

In heaven God ever blest, and his divine
Behests obey, worthiest to be obey'd! Milton, P. L.

To BEHIGHT.† v. a. pret. behot, part. behight. [Sax.
behetan, to promise.]

1. To promise: this word is obsolete.

Sir Guyon, mindful of his vow yplight,
Uprose from drowsy couch, and him address,
Unto the journey which he had behight. Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 1.

2. To entrust; to commit.

That most glorious house that glist'reth bright,— Whereof the keys are to thy hand behight
By wise Fidelia. Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 50.

3. To call; to name; hight being often put in old authors for named or was named. See HIGHT.

But now aread, old father, why of late
Didst thou behight me born of English blood,
Whom all a faeries son do nominate? Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 64.

4. To command.

So taking courteous congè, he behight
Those gates to be unbarr'd; and forth he went.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. xi. 17.

5. To adjudge.

There it was judged, by those worthy wights,
That Satyrane the first day best had donne:—
The second was to Triamond behight. Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 7.

6. To address; to speak to.

Whom soon as he beheld he knew, and thus behight.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 25.

7. To inform; to assure.

In right ill array
She was, with storm and heat, I you behight.
Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.

8. To mean; to intend.

The author's meaning should of right be heard,
He knoweth best to what end he enditeth:
Words sometime bear more than the heart behiteth.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 461.

9. To reckon; to esteem.

False faitour Scudamour, that hast by flight
And foule advantage this good knight dismayd,
A knight much better than thyself behight.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 44.

BEHIND.† prep. [Goth. hinder, Sax. behindan, hindan.]

1. At the back of another.

Acomates hasted with harquebusiers, which he had caused his horsemen to take behind them upon their horses. Knolles.

2. On the back part; not before.

She came in the press behind, and touched his garment.
Mark, v. 27.

3. Towards the back.

The Benjamites looked behind them. Judges, xx. 40.

4. Following another.

Her husband went with her along, weeping behind her.
Samuel, iii. 16.

5. Remaining after the departure of something else.
He left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in one hour. Shakspeare.

Piety and virtue are not only delightful for the present, but they leave peace and contentment behind them. Tillotson.

6. Remaining after the death of those to whom it belonged.

What he gave me to publish, was, but a small part of what he left behind him. Pope.

7. At a distance from something going before.

Such is the swiftness of your mind,
That, like the eagle, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.

8. Inferiour to another, having the posteriour place with regard to excellence.

After the overthrow of this first house of God, a second was erected; but with so great odds, that they wept, which beheld how much this latter came behind it. Hooker.

9. On the other side of something.

From light retir'd, behind his daughter's bed,
He, for approaching sleep, compos'd his head. Dryden.

BEHIND. adv.

1. Out of sight; not yet produced to view; remaining.

We cannot be sure, that we have all the particulars before us; and that there is no evidence behind, and yet unseen, which may cast the probability on the other side. Locke.

2. Most of the former senses may become adverbial, by suppressing the accusative case; as, I left my money behind, or behind me.

BEHINDHAND. adv. [from behind and hand.]

1. In a state in which rent or profit, or any advantage, is anticipated, so that less is to be received, or more performed, than the natural or just proportion.

Your trade would suffer, if your being behindhand has made the natural use so high, that your tradesmen cannot live upon his labour. Locke.

2. Not upon equal terms, with regard to forwardness.

In this sense, it is followed by with.
Consider, whether it is not better to be a half year behind- hand with the fashionable part of the world, than to strain beyond his circumstances. Spectator.

3. Shakspeare uses it as an adjective, but licentiously, for backward; tardy.

And these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behindhand slackness. Shakspeare.

To BEHOLD. v. a. pret. I beheld, I have beheld, or beholden. [behealdan, Saxon.] To view; to see; to look upon; to behold is to see, in an em-phatical or intensive sense.

Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears. Ezekiel, xl. 4.

When Thessalians on horseback were beheld afar off, while their horses watered, while their heads were depressed, they were conceived by the spectators to be one animal.

Brown, Vulgar Errors.
Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes,
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden.

At this the former tale again he told,
With thund'ring tone, and dreadful to behold. Dryden.

The Saviour comes by ancient bards foretold.
Hear him ye deaf, and all ye blind behold. Pope.

BEHOLD. interject. [from the verb.] See; to: a word
by which attention is excited, or admiration noted.

Behold! I am with thee, and will keep thee. Genesis, xxviii. 15.

When out of hope, behold her! not far off,
Such as I saw her in my dream, adorn'd
With what all earth or heaven could bestow,
To make her amiable. Milton, P. L.

BEHOLDEN. particip. adj. [gehouden, Dutch; that is, held in obligation. It is very corruptly written beholding.] Obligated; bound in gratitude: with the particle to.

Horns, which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for. Shakspeare.

Little are we beholden to your love;
And little looked for at your helping hands. Shakspeare.

I found you next; in respect of bond both of near alliance, and particularly of communication in studies: wherein I must acknowledge myself beholden to you. Bacon.

I think myself mightily beholden to you for the reprehension you then gave us. Addison.

We, who see men under the awe of justice, cannot conceive, what savage creatures they would be without it; and how much beholden we are to their wise contrivance. Atterbury.

B E H

BEHO'LDER. n. s. [from behold.] Spectator; he that looks upon any thing.

Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink?
Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.

These beasts among
Beholders rude, and shallow to discern
Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee?
Milton, P. L.

Things of wonder give no less delight
To the wise Maker's, than beholder's sight.
Denham.

The justling chiefs in rude encounters join,
Each fair beholder trembling for her knight.
Granville.

The charitable foundations in the church of Rome exceed all the demands of charity, and, raise envy, rather than compassion, in the breasts of beholders.
Atterbury.

BEHO'LDING. adj. [corrupted from beholden.] Obligated.
See BEHOLDEN.

BEHO'LDING. n. s. Obligation.
Love to virtue, and not to any particular beholdings, hath expressed this my testimony.
Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

BEHO'LDINGNESS. n. s. [from beholding, mistaken for beholden.] The state of being obligated.

The king invited us to his court, so as I must acknowledge a beholdingness unto him.
Sidney.

In this my doubt I seem'd loth to confess,
In that I seem'd to shun beholdingness. Donne, Poems, p. 159.

To BEHO'NEY.* v. a. [from be and honey.] To sweeten with honey. Sherwood.

BEHO'OF. n. s. [Sax. behefe, Germ. behef, Su. be-hof. See also BEHALF.] That which behoves; that which is advantageous; profit; advantage.

Her Majesty may alter any thing of those laws, for her own
behoof, and for the good of the people. Spenser on Ireland.

No mean recompence it brings
To your behoof: if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce
To her original darkness, and your sway.
Milton, P. L.

Wert thou some star, which, from the ruin'd roof
Of shak'd Olympus, by mischance didst fall;
Which careful Jove, in nature's true behoof,
Took up, and in fit place did reinstate.
Milton, Ode.

Because it was for the behoof of the animal, that, upon any sudden accident, it might be awakened, there were no shuts or stopples made for the ears.
Ray.

It would be of no behoof, for the settling of government, unless there were a way taught, how to know the person to whom belonged this power and dominion.
Locke.

BEHO'OVABLE.* adj. [from behoove.] So written by Minshew; by others, behovable; which see. Fit; expedient.

To BEHO'OVE. v. n. [behojan, Saxon; it is a duty.] To be fit; to be meet; either with respect to duty, necessity, or convenience. It is used only impersonally with it.

For better examination of their quality, it behooveth the very foundation and root, the highest wellspring and fountain of them to be discovered.
Hooker.

He did so prudently temper his passions, as that none of them made him wanting in the offices of life, which it behoov'd or became him to perform.
Atterbury.

But should you lure the monarch of the brook,
Behooves you then to ply your finest art.
Thomson.

BEHO'OVERFUL. adj. [from behoof.] Useful; profitable; advantageous. This word is somewhat antiquated.

It is very behooveful in this country of Ireland, where there are waste deserts full of grass, that the same should be eaten down.
Spenser on Ireland.

Laws are many times full of imperfections; and that which is supposed behooveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious.
Hooker.

Madam, we have culled such necessities
As are behooveful for our state, to-morrow.
Shakspeare.

It may be most behooveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly: so it is as requisite, in matters of

B E J

judgement, punishment, and censure, that the same be tran-acted privately. Clarendon.

BEHO'OVERFULLY. adv. [from behooveful.] Profitably; usefully.

Tell us of more weighty dislikes than these, and that may more behoovefully import the reformation. Spenser on Ireland.

BEHO'T. [preterite, as it seems, of behight, to promise.]

With sharp intended sting so rude him smote,
That to the earth him drove as stricken dead,
No living wight would have him life behot.
Spenser, F. Q.

BEHO'VABLE.* adj. [from behoove.] Profitable; expedient; useful.

All spiritual graces behooveable for our soul. Homilies, ii. 227.

BEHO'VE.* n. s. [Sax. behojan.] Advantage; interest; convenience; behoof. Obsolete.

To further forth the fruit of my desire,
My friends devis'd this mean for my behoove.
Gascoigne's Poems, (1575,) p. 140.

I lothe that I did love;
In youth that I thought swete:
As time requires for my behoove

Methinks they are not mete. Old Ballad, referred to in Hamlet.

To BEHO'VE.* v. n. [Sax. behojan. This is the word now used for behoove, and was that of our ancient writers; though Dr. Johnson and Dr. Ash have not condescended even to notice behoove. The double o, indeed, is not analogous to the etymology.
See also BEHOVEFUL, BEHOVELY, and the subst.
BEHOVE.] To be fit; to be meet.

Thus it is writun, and thus it bihofte Christ to suffer.
Wicliffe, (1380,) S. Luke, xxiv. 46.

Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer.
Transl. (1578,) S. Luke, xxiv. 46.

Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer.
Transl. (1611,) S. Luke, xxiv. 46.

BEHO'VEFUL.* adj. [from behoove and full.] Fit; expedient.

That freedom of judgement, which was behooveful for the study of philosophy. Bp. Sanderson, Sermon, p. 306.

BEHO'VELY.* adj. [from behoove.] Profitable. I cite this ancient adjective in confirmation of the orthography of behoove.

Whereof if thou wilt, that I tell,
It is behovely for to hear. Gower, Conf. Am, b. 1.

To BEHO'WL.* v. n. To howl at; a word, Dr. Ash says, not much used. The fact is, that the existence of this word is doubtful. It has been proposed and defended by the commentators on Shakspeare, beginning with Bishop Warburton, for the reading of behold's or beholds in the following passage of Shakspeare, as it stands in the old copies; and modern editions read accordingly behowls. Hence Dr. Ash, I suppose, adopted behowl; for I know no other work in which the word is to be found; and the commentators themselves support it in its assumed position, only by observing the propriety of howl.

Now the hungry lion roars,
And the wolf behowls the moon;
Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,
All with weary task fordone. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr. v. 2.

To BEJA'DE.* v. a. [from be and jade.] To tire.
If you have no mercy upon them, yet spare yourself, lest you
bejade the good galloway, your own opiniatre wit.
Milton, Anim. upon the Rem. Defence.

To BEJA'PE.* v. a. [from be and jape, a jest. See
JAPE.] To laugh at; to deceive; to impose upon.
Obsolete.
[Thou] hast bejaped here duke Thesens.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

I shall bejaped ben a thousand time
More than that foole, of whose folly men time.
Chaucer, Troil. Cr. i. 532.

BE'ING. † particip. [from be, beon, Sax. existing.]
Those, who have their hope in another life, look upon themselves as being on their passage through this. Atterbury.

BE'ING. n. s. [from be.]

1. Existence; opposed to nonentity.

Of him all things have both received their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are. Hooker.

Yet is not God the author of her ill,
Though author of her being, and being there. Davies.

There is none but he,
Whose being I do fear: and under him
My genius is rebuked. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Thee, Father, first they sung, omnipotent,
Immutable, immortal, infinite,
Eternal king! Thee, Author of all being,
Fountain of light! Milton, P. L.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing to be an excellent creation. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.
Consider every thing as not yet in being; then examine, if it must needs have been at all, or what other ways it might have been. Bentley.

2. A particular state or condition.

Those happy spirits, which ordain'd by fate
For future being, and new bodies wait. Dryden.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.

As now your own, our beings were of old,
And once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould. Pope.

The person existing.
Ah, fair, yet false; ah, being form'd to cheat,
By seeming kindness, mixt with deep deceit. Dryden.

It is folly to seek the approbation of any being, besides the supreme; because no other being can make a right judgement of us, and because we can procure no considerable advantage from the approbation of any other being. Addison, Spectator.

BE'ING. † conjunct. [from be.] Since. Dict.

Now, being death is nothing else but the privation or recession of life, and we are then properly said to die when we cease to live; being life consisteth in the union of the soul unto the body, from whence, as from the fountain, flow motion, sensation, and whatsoever vital perfection; death can be nothing else but the solution of that vital union. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

BE'ING-PLACE. * n. s. [from being and place.] A place in which to be; a state of existence.

Before this world's great frame, in which all things
Are now contain'd, found any being-place. Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Love.

BE IT SO. A phrase of anticipation, suppose it be so; or of permission, let it be so.

My gracious duke,
Be't so she will not here, before your grace,
Consent to marry with Demetrius;

I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakespeare.

To BEK'ISS. * v. a. [from be and kiss.] To salute.
She's sick o' the young shepherd that bekist her. B. Jonson, Sad Shep. i. 6.

To BEKNA'VE. * v. a. [from be and knave.] To call knave.

May satire ne'er befool ye, or beknave ye. Pope.

To BEKNO'W. * v. a. [from be and know.] To acknowledge; to confess. Obsolete.

No wight that excuseth himself wilfully of his sinne, may not be delivered of his sinne, till that he mekely beknoweth his sinne. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

This messenger turnment was, till he,
Muste beknowe, and tellen plat and plain,
Fro night to night, in what place he had lain. Ib. Man of Law's Tale.

To BELA'BOUR. † [from be and labour.] To beat; to thump: a word in low speech, Dr. Johnson says; but used in a very serious poem, I may add.

What several madnesses in m n appear,
Orestes runs from fancy'd furies here;
Ajax belabours there an harmless ox,
And thinks that Agamemnon feels the knocks. Dryden.

He sees virago Nell belabour,
With his own staff, his peaceful neighbour. Swift.

The strong man,
By stronger arm belabour'd, gasps for breath. R. Blair, The Grave.

To BELA'CE. v. a. [Sea term.] To fasten; as to belace, a rope. Dict.

BELA'CED. * part. adj. [from be and lace.] Adorned with lace.

When thou in thy bravest
And most belaced servitude dost strut,
Some newer fashion dost usurp; and thou
Unto its antick yoke durst not but bow. Baumont's Psyche, 16. 10.

To BELA'M. * v. a. [from be and lam. See To LAMM, which Dr. Johnson notices.] Dr. Ash says, that belam is derived from a low word; but no more. It is a common word in the North of England, and in the sense which is assigned to it in our old lexicographer, viz. To beat; to bar. V. Cotgrave in BATEMENT, and Sherwood in BELAMME.

BE'LAMY. n. s. [bel amie, Fr.] A friend; an intimate. This word is out of use.

Wise Socrates
Pour'd out his life, and last philosophy,
To the fair Critias, his dearest belamy. Spenser, F. Q.

BE'LAMOUR. n. s. [bel amour, Fr.] Gallant; consort; paramour; obsolete.

Lo, lo, how brave she decks her bounteous bow'r,
With silken curtains, and gold coverlets,
Therein to shroud her sumptuous belamour. Spenser, F. Q.

To BELA'TE. * v. a. [from be and late.] To retard a person, so as to make him too late.

The action cannot waste,
Caution retard, nor promptitude deceive,
Slowness belate, nor hope drive on too fast. Davenant's Gondibert, ii. 2.

BELA'TED. adj. [from be and late.] Benighted; out of doors late at night.

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels, by a forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton, P. L.

Or near Fleetditch's oozy brinks
Belated, seems on watch to lie. Swift.

BELA'TEDNESS. * n. s. [from belated.] Slowness; backwardness.

That you may see I am sometime suspicious of myself, and do take notice of a certain belatedness in me, I am the bolder to send you some of my nightward thoughts. Milton, Lett.

To BELA'VE. * [from be and lave. See To LAVE.] To wash. Cockeram.

To BELA'WGIVE. * v. a. [from be, law, and give. An unusual word.] To give a law to; to legislate for.

The Holy One of Israel hath belawgiven his own people with this very allowance. Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce.

To BELA'Y. † v. a. [from be and lay; as, to waylay, to lie in wait, to lay wait for.]

1. To block up; to stop the passage.
The speedy horse all passages belay,
And spur their smoking steeds to cross their way. Dryden.

2. To place in ambush. Dr. Johnson says; and, in proof of his assertion, cites a passage in Spenser, which he copied from a corrupted edition, and in which the word belaces led him to a wrong definition. The true word in Spenser is forts, (see the edit. of Spenser, 1805, vol. 8. p. 124.) and the meaning of belay is to attack; to besiege; adopted by Spenser from our older poetry, and from Spenser by Sandys. The Scotch use bely also for to besiege.

B E L

About Thebes, where he laie,
Whan it of siege was belaine. Gower, Conf. Am. b. i.

Gainst such strong castles needeth greater might
Than those small forts which ye were wont belay.
Spenser, Sonn. xiv.

So when Arabian thieves belaid us round,
And when by all abandon'd, Thee I found.
Sandys, Hymn to God.

3. To decorate; to lay over.

All in a woodman's jacket he was clad
Of Lincolne greene, belay'd with silver lace.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 5.

To BELAY a rope. [Sea term.] To splice; to mend a rope, by laying one end over another.

To BELCH.† v. n. [bealcan, Saxon; formerly written belk, bolke, or bealk. Dict. of Huloet, and of Barret.]

1. To eject the wind from the stomach; to eruct.

Full gorges belk, if not much rather spew,
Most fulsomely. Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, sign. T. 1.

2. To issue out, as by eructation.

Behold, they belch out with their mouth; swords are in their lips.
Psalm lix. 7.

The waters boil, and, belching from below,
Black sands as from a forceful engine throw. Dryden.

A triple pile of plumes his crest adorn'd,
On which with belching flames Chimæra burn'd. Dryden.

To BELCH.† v. a. To throw out from the stomach; to eject from any hollow place. It is a word implying coarseness; hatefulness; or horror.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungrily, and, when they're full,
They belch us. Shakspeare.

The mouth of fools poureth out [in the margin belcheth] foolishness. Proverbs xv. 2.

The bitterness of it I now belch from my heart. Shakspeare.

Immediate in a flame,
But soon obscur'd with smoke, all heaven appear'd,
From those deep-throated engines belch'd. Milton, P. L.

The gates that now
Stood open wide, belching outrageous flame
Far into chaos, since the fiend pass'd through. Milton, P. L.

Rough as their savage lords who rang'd the wood,
And, fat with acorns, belch'd their windy food. Dryden.

There belcht the mingled streams of wind and blood,
And human flesh, his indigested food. Pope, Odyssey.

When I an amorous kiss design'd,
I belch'd an hurricane of wind. Swift.

BELCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of eructation.

2. A cant term for malt liquour.

A sudden reformation would follow, among all sorts of people; porters would no longer be drunk with belch. Dennis.

BELCHING.* n. s. [from belch.] The act of eructation; "a bealking or breaking of wind upwards," Barret. Bishop Hall seems to use it in the sense of violently throbbing, in allusion, perhaps, to the painful efforts of those diseased persons, whom belching attacks.

Often belkings [are] a token of ill digestion. Barret, Ale.
What aches of the bones, what belking of the joints, what convulsion of the sinews! Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

The symptoms are, a sour smell in their feces, belchings, and distensions of the bowels. Arbuthnot on Rheum.

BELDAM.† n. s. [belle dante, which, in old French, signified probably an old woman, as belle age, old age.]

1. An old woman; generally a term of contempt, marking the last degree of old age, with all its faults

B E L

and miseries, Dr. Johnson says. The only example which he gives, is that from Milton; which certainly implies no contempt, but merely great age. It is indeed often used by our old writers for the grand-mother; and we have, in our language, belsire for grandsire, corresponding with beldam for grandam.

The familiar examples, as of the mother, the beldame, the aunt, the sister, the cosyn, or of some other kinswoman or freinde, should be of more force and value.

Vives, Dut. of an Husband, tr. by Paynel, (about 1550.)

To shew the beldame daughters of her daughter.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

The beldam and the girl, the grandsire and the boy.

Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 6.

Then sing of secret things that came to pass,
When beldam Nature in her cradle was. Milton, Vac. Ex.

2. A hag.

Miso his wife, so handsome a beldame, that only her face and her splay-foot have made her accused for a witch.

Sidney, Arcadia, B. 1.

Why, how now, Hecat, you look angrily?—

—Have I not reason, beldams as you are?

Saucy and overbold? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The resty sieve wagg'd ne'er the more;

I weep for woe, the testy beldam swore. Dryden.

To BELAGUER.† v. a. [belggeren, Dutch, galukan, Goth. to shut up, to inclose.] To besiege; to block up a place; to lie before a town.

Their business, which they carry on, is the general concernment of the Trojan camp, then beleaguer'd by Turnus and the Latins. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Against beleaguer'd heav'n the giants move:
Hills pil'd on hills, on mountains mountains lie,
To make their mad approaches to the sky. Dryden, Ovid.

BELEAGURER.† n. s. [from beleaguer.] One that besieges a place. Sherwood.

To BELEAVE.* v. a. [from be and leave; an old English, as well as a Scottish, verb. See Jamieson's Dict. in BELIEF. Not disused in the time of Milton.] To leave.

Wondering at fortune's turns, and scarce is he
Belcft, relating his own misery. May's Lucan, B. 8.

To BELEE.† v. a. [a term in navigation.] To place in a direction unsuitable to the wind. One vessel is said to be in the lee of another, when it is so placed that the wind is intercepted from it. This remark has been rendered subservient to the establishment of belee'd, by the commentators, as the genuine text of Shakspeare in Othello; beled being the reading of the old quarto; belee'd, that of the first folio, which Warburton wished to reject, but his successors have adopted. Iago, the speaker of the following lines, means that Cassio had got the wind of him.

He, sir, had the election:

And I,—of whom his eyes had seen the proof,
At Rhodes, at Cyprus; and on other grounds
Christian and heathen,—must be belee'd and calm'd
By debtor and creditor, this counter-caster.

Shakspeare, Othello, i. 1.

BELEMNITES. n. s. [from βέλος, a dart or arrow, because of its resemblance to the point of an arrow.] Arrowhead, or finger-stone, of a whitish and sometimes a gold colour.

To BELEPER.* v. a. [from be and leper.] To infect as with a leprosy.

You have a law, lords, that without remorse
Dooms such, as beleper'd with the curse
Of foul ingratitude, to death. Beaum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

Imparity, and church-revenue, rushing in, corrupted and belepered all the clergy with a worse infection than Gehazi's.

Milton, Eiconocl. Ch. 14.

BELFLOWER. n. s. [from belle and flower, because of the shape of its flower; in Latin campanula.] A plant.

There is a vast number of the species of this plant. 1. The tallest pyramidal bellflower. 2. The blue peach-leav'd bellflower. 3. The white peach-leaved bellflower. 4. Garden bellflower, with oblong leaves and flowers; commonly called Canterbury bells. 5. Canary bellflower, with orrach leaves and a tuberosc root. 6. Blue bellflower, with edible roots, commonly called rampions. 7. Venus looking-glass bellflower, &c. Miller.

BELFOUNDER. n. s. [from bell and found.] He whose trade it is to found or cast bells.

Those that make recorders know this, and likewise bellfounders in fitting the tune of their bells. Bacon.

BELFRY.† n. s. [Belfroy, in French, is a tower; which was perhaps the true word, till those, who knew not its original, corrupted it to belfry, because bells were in it, Dr. Johnson says. But our belfry is not a corruption, but comes from the old French belfroit, or low Latin belfredus. V. Du Cange. And Roquefort in BEFROI.] The place where the bells are rung.

Fetch the leathern bucket that hangs in the belfry; that is curiously painted before, and will make a figure. Gay.

BELGA'RD. n. s. [belle regard, Fr.] A soft glance; a kind regard: an old word, now wholly disused.

Upon her eyelids many graces sat,
Under the shadow of her even brows,
Working belgards, and amorous retrait. Spenser, F. Q.

To BELIBEL.* v. a. [from be and libel.] To traduce; to libel; to slander.

The pope, hearing thereof, belibelled him [the emperor] more foully than ever before.

Fuller's Hist. of the Holy War, p. 163.

To BELI'E. v. a. [from be and lie.]

1. To counterfeit; to feign; to mimic.

Which durst, with horses hoofs that beat the ground,
And martial brass, belie the thunder's sound. Dryden.
The shape of man, and imitated beast
The walk, the words, the gesture could supply,
The habit mimic, and the mien belie. Dryden, Fables.

2. To give the lie to; to charge with falsehood.

Sure there is none but fears a future state;
And when the most obdurate swear they do not,
Their trembling hearts belie their boastful tongues. Dryden.
Paint, patches, jewels laid aside,
At night astronomers agree,
The evening has the day bely'd
And Phillis is some forty-three. Prior.

3. To calumniate; to raise false reports of any man.

Thou dost belie him, Piercy, thou beliest him:
He never did encounter with Glendower. Shakspeare.

4. To give a false representation of any thing.

Uncle, for heav'n's sake, comfortable words.—
—Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts. Shakspeare.
Tuscan Valerius by force o'ercame,
And not bely'd his mighty father's name. Dryden, Æneid.
In the dispute what'er I said,
My heart was by my tongue bely'd;
And in my looks you might have read,
How much I argu'd on your side. Prior.

5. To fill with lies. This seems to be its meaning here.

'Tis slander, whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

BELIEF. n. s. [from believe.]

1. Credit given to something which we know not of ourselves, on account of the authority by which it is delivered.

Those comforts that shall never cease,

Future in hope, but present in belief.

Wotton.

Faith is a firm belief of the whole word of God, of his gospel, commands, threats, and promises. Wake.

2. The theological virtue of faith, or firm confidence of the truths of religion.

No man can attain belief by the bare contemplation of heaven and earth; for that they neither are sufficient to give us as much as the least spark of light concerning the very principal mysteries of our faith. Hooker.

3. Religion; the body of tenets held by the professors of faith.

In the heat of general persecution, whereunto christian belief was subject upon the first promulgation, it much confirmed the weaker minds, when relation was made how God had been glorified through the sufferings of martyrs. Hooker.

4. Persuasion; opinion.

He can, I know, but doubt to think he will;

Yet hope would fain subscribe, and tempts belief. Milton, S. A.

All treaties are grounded upon the belief, that states will be found in their honour and observance of treaties. Temple.

5. The thing believed; the object of belief.

Superstitions prophecies are not only the belief of fools, but the talk sometimes of wise men. Bacon.

6. Creed; a form containing the articles of faith.

BELI'EVABLE.† adj. [from believe.] Credible; that which may be credited or believed. Sherwood.

To BELI'EVE.† v. a. [gelyfan, Saxon, galaubian, Gothick.]

1. To credit upon the authority of another, or from some other reason than our personal knowledge.

Adherence to a proposition, which they are persuaded, but do not know to be true, is not seeing, but believing. Locke.

Ten thousand things there are, which we believe merely upon the authority or credit of those who have spoken or written of them. Watts, Logic.

2. To put confidence in the veracity of any one.

The people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever. Exodus, xix. 9.

To BELI'EVE. v. n.

1. To have a firm persuasion of any thing.

They may believe that the Lord God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee. Exodus, ix. 5.

2. To exercise the theological virtue of faith.

Now God be prais'd, that, to believing souls,
Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair. Shakspeare.
For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Romans, x. 10.

3. With the particle in; to hold as an object of faith.

Believe in the Lord your God, so shall you be established. 2 Chron. xx. 20.

4. With the particle upon; to trust; to place full confidence in; to rest upon with faith.

To them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. St. John, i. 12.

5. I believe, is sometimes used as a way of slightly noting some want of certainty or exactness.

Though they are, I believe, as high as most steeples in England, yet a person, in his drink, fell down, without any other hurt than the breaking of an arm. Addison on Italy.

BELI'EVER. n. s. [from believe.]

1. He that believes, or gives credit.

Discipline began to enter into conflict with churches, which, in extremity had been believers of it. Hooker.

2. A professor of christianity.

Infidels themselves did discern in matters of life, when believers did well, when otherwise. Hooker.

B E L

If he which writeth, do that which is forcible, how should he which readeth, be thought to do that, which, in itself, is of no force to work belief, and to save believers? Hooker.

Mysteries held by us have no power, pomp, or wealth, but have been maintained by the universal body of true believers, from the days of the apostles, and will be to the resurrection; neither will the gates of hell prevail against them. Swift.

BELIEVINGLY. adv. [from To believe.] After a believing manner.

BELI'KE. adv. [from like, as by likelihood.]

1. Probably; likely; perhaps.

There came out of the same woods a horrible foul bear, which fearing, belike, while the lion was present, came furiously towards the place where I was. Sidney.

Lord Angelo, belike, thinking me remiss in my office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on. Shakspeare.

Josephus affirmeth, that one of them remained in his time; meaning, belike, some ruin or foundation thereof. Raleigh.

2. It is sometimes used in a sense of irony; as, It may be supposed.

We think, belike, that he will accept what the meanest of them would disdain. Hooker.

God appointed the sea to one of them, and the land to the other, because they were so great, that the sea could not hold them both; for else, belike, if the sea had been large enough, we might have gone a fishing for elephants.

Brerewood on Languages.

BELI'KELY.* adv. [from belike.] Probably; still used in the north of England.

Having belikely heard some better words of me, than I could deserve. Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

BELI'VE.† adv. [bitive, Sax. probably from bi and live, in the sense of vivacity; speed; quickness.] Speedily; quickly: a word out of use, Dr. Johnson says. But it is still common, I must add, in Westmoreland for presently: which sense, implying a little delay, like our expression of by and by, was formerly the general acceptation of the word; no doubt, from the Sax. belipan, to remain.

By that same way the direful dames to drive Their mournful chariot, fill'd with rusty blood, And down to Pluto's house are come belive. Spenser, F. Q.

BELL.† n. s. [bel, Saxon; supposed, by Skinner, to come from pelvis, Lat. a basin. See BALL.]

1. A vessel, or hollow body of cast metal, formed to make a noise by the act of a clapper, hammer, or some other instrument striking against it. Bells are in the towers of churches, to call the congregation together.

Your flock assembled by the bell, Encircled you to hear with reverence. Shakspeare.

Get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself, And bid the merry bells ring to thy ear, That thou art crowned, not that I am dead. Shakspeare.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder, Elements of Speech.

He has no one necessary attention to any thing, but the bell, which calls to prayers twice a-day. Addison, Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing in the form of a bell, as the cups of flowers.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I, In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The humming bees that hunt the golden dew, In summer's heat on tops of lilies feed, And creep within their bells to suck the balmy seed. Dryden.

3. A small hollow globe of metal perforated, and containing in it a solid ball; which, when it is shaken, by bounding against the sides, gives a sound.

B E L

As the ox hath his yoke, the horse his curb, and the fault on his bells, so hath man his desires.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

4. Bell, book, and candle; the old phrase for execration, adopted from the directions given, in elder times, that sentence of excommunication against delinquents should be "throughout explained in order in English, with bells tolling, and candles lighted, that it may cause the greater dread." See Johnson's Ecclesiast. Laws, vol. 2. And note on Shakspeare's K. John, A. iv. S. 2.]

Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back, When gold and silver beck me to come on.

Shakspeare, K. John.

Out with your beads, Curate; The devil's in your dish: bell, book, and candle!

Beaumont and Fl. Spanish Curate.

5. To bear the bell. To be the first; from the wether, that carries a bell among the sheep, or the first horse of a drove that has bells on his collar, Dr. Johnson says. But his solitary example from Hakewill explains neither assertion; and exhibits not the precise expression bear the bell. Some think, that a bell was formerly a common prize. In the reign of K. James I. the prize at a horse-race in Chester was a silver bell; and at York, a golden bell. See Lysons's Cheshire, p. 586. And Gent. Mag. vol. 50. p. 515. To bear away the bell is also found in our old writers, and has given rise to a conjecture that the expression may mean "carrying or winning the fair lady," belle. See Brand's Popular Antiq. But this is rather far-fetched; and the example, which I give from Howell, discountenances the conjecture. That from B. Riche justifies the opinion, that it comes from the sheep bearing the bell.

So Satyrane that day was judg'd to bear the bell.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 25.

My prickear'd ewe, since thou dost bear the bell, And all thy mates do follow at thy call.

Keepe still this haunce, &c.

B. Riche, Adventures of Simonides, (1584.) P. i. sign. N. iij.

The ale bore away the bell among the doctors.

Howell's Letters, B. i. § 2. L. 21.

The Italians have carried away the bell from all other nations, as may appear both by their books and works. Hakewill.

6. To shake the bells. A phrase, in Shakspeare, taken from the bells of a hawk.

Neither the king, nor he that loves him best, The proudest he that holds up Lancaster, Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shakes his bells. Shakspeare.

TO BELL. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow in buds or flowers, in the form of a bell.

Hops, in the beginning of August, bell, and are sometimes ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BELL-FASHIONED. adj. [from bell and fashion.] Having the form of a bell; campaniform.

The thorn apple rises with a strong round stalk, having large bell-fashioned flowers at the joints. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BELLADONNA.* n. s. [Ital.] In botany, the deadly nightshade. This name is said by Ray to have been given to it by the Italians, because the ladies make a cosmetick of the juice, or distilled water, which they use to make their complexion fair and white.

BELLE.† n. s. [beau, belle, Fr.] A smart or gay young lady.

B E L

What motive could compel
A well-bred lord to assault a gentle belle?
O say, what stranger cause yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope, Rape of the Lock.
My beans are now shepherds, and my belles wood-nymphs.
Tatler, No. 182.

BE'LLIED.* [In heraldry.] Having bells affixed to it;
as, a hawk rising, jessed and bellied.

BELLES LETTRES. n. s. [Fr.] Polite literature.
It has no singular.

The exactness of the other, is to admit of something like discourse, especially in what regards the belles lettres. Tatler.

BELLIBONE. n. s. [from bellus, beautiful, and bonus, good, Lat. belle & bonum, Fr.] A woman excelling both in beauty and goodness. A word now out of use.

Pau may be proud, that ever he begot
Such a bellibone,

And Syrix rejoice, that ever was her lot
To bear such an one. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

BE'LLIED.* adj. [from belly.] Sometimes used in composition. See BIGBELLIED, GORBELLIED.

BELLIGERANT. } adj. [Lat. belligerans, belliger.]
BELLIGEROUS. } Waging war. Dict.

To BELLIGERATE.* v. n. [Lat. belligero.] To make war. Cockeram.

BELLIGERENT.* adj. This is the word most in use, as Mr. Mason has observed on the two preceding synonymous adjectives.

Pére Bougeant's third volume will give you the best idea of the treaty of Munster, and open to you the several views of the belligerent and contracting parties. Id. Chesterfield.

BELLING. } n. s. [Sax. bellan, to roar. Belling is indeed only bellowing contracted, and it is sometimes written bellowing by those who describe the present term.] A hunting term, spoken of a roe, when she makes a noise in rutting time. Dict.

BELLIPOTENT. adj. [bellipotens, Lat.] Puissant; mighty in war. Dict.

BELLIQUE.* adj. [old Fr. bellique, militaire; from the Lat. bellicus.] Warlike; martial,

The bellique Cesar, as Suetonius tells us, was noted for sin-gularity in his apparel. Pelham's Resolves, ii. 52.

BELLITUDE.* n. s. [Lat, bellitudo.] Handsomeness; beauty. Obsolete. Cockeram.

To BELLOW. v. n. [bellan, Saxon.]

1. To make a noise as a bull.

Jupiter became a bull, and bellow'd; the green Neptune a ram, and bleated. Shakspeare.

What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat Within the lion's den? Dryden, Sp. Friar.

But now, the husband of a herd must be Thy mate, and bellowing sons thy progeny. Dryden.

2. To make any violent outcry.

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,
As he'd burst heav'n. Shakspeare.

3. To vociferate; to clamour. In this sense it is a word of contempt.

The dull fat captain, with a hound's deep throat,
Would bellow out a laugh in a base note. Dryden.

This gentleman is accustomed to roar and bellow so terribly loud, that he frightens us. Tatler.

4. To roar as the sea in a storm; or as the wind; to make any continued noise, that may cause terrour.

Till, at the last, he heard a dreadful sound,
Which through the wood loud bellowing did rebound. Spenser.

The rising rivers float the nether ground;
And rocks the bellowing voice of boiling seas rebound. Dryden.

B E L

BELLOW.* n. s. [from the verb.] Roar; as, the bellow of the wind or sea.

BELLLOWER.* n. s. [from bellow.] He who roars or bellows.

BELLOWING.* n. s. [from bellow.] Loud noise;
roaring.

Captain Brown thundered out his farewell in a hundred great shot, whose echo not only made Gombroon tremble, but seemed to rend the higher regions with their bellowings.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 111.

The beasts that haunt those springs,
Of whom I hear the dreadful bellowings.

Brown, Brit. Past. B. i. S. i.

BELLOWS. } n. s. [biliz, Sax. perhaps it is corrupted from bellies, the wind being contained in the hollow, or belly, Dr. Johnson says. But it is no corruption, being from the Goth. balgs, balgris. It has no singular; for we usually say, a pair of bellows; but Dryden has used bellows as a singular.]

1. The instrument used to blow the fire.

Since sighs into my inward furnace turned,
For bellows serve to kindle more the fire. Sidney.

One, with great bellows, gather'd filling air,
And, with forc'd wind, the fuel did enflame. Spenser, F. Q.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryden.

The lungs, as bellows, supply a force of breath; and the aspera arteria is as the nose of bellows, to collect and convey the breath. Holder.

2. In the following passage, it is singular.

Thou neither, like a bellows, swell'st thy face,
As if thou wert to blow the burning mass

Of melting ore. Dryden.

BELLUINE. } adj. [belluinus, Lat.] Beastly; belonging to a beast; savage; brutal.

There have been the fearfulest distractions here, that ever happened upon any part of the earth; a belluin kind of immanity never ranged so among men. Howell's Letters, iii. 15.

If human actions were not to be judged, men would have no advantage over beasts. At this rate, the animal and belluine life would be the best. Atterbury.

BELLY. } n. s. [balgs, Goth. balg, Dutch; bol, bola, Welsh.]

1. That part of the human body which reaches from the breast to the thighs, containing the bowels.

The body's members
Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it;—
That only like a gulf it did remain,

Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

2. In beasts, it is used, in general, for that part of the body next the ground.

And the Lord said unto the serpent, Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. Genesis, iii. 14.

3. The womb: in this sense, it is commonly used judiciously or familiarly.

I shall answer that better, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you. Shakspeare.

The secret is grown too big for the pretence, like Mrs.
Primly's big belly. Congreve, Way of the World.

4. That part of man which requires food, in opposition to the back, or that which demands clothes.

An Irish harp hath the concave, or belly, not along the strings, but at the end of the strings.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

6. Any place in which something is enclosed.

Out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice.

Jonah, ii. 2.

To BELLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell into a larger capacity; to hang out; to bulge out.

Thus by degrees day wastes, signs cease to rise,

For bellying earth, still rising up, denies

Their light a passage, and confines our eyes. Creech, Manilius.

The power appear'd, with winds assist'd the sail,

The bellying canvas strutted with the gale. Dryden.

Loud rattling shakes the mountains and the plain,

Heav'n bellies downwards, and descends in rain. Dryden.

'Midst these disports, forget they not to drench

Themselves with bellying goblets. Philips.

BELO'NGING. * n. s. [from belong.] Quality; endowment; faculty.

Thyself and thy belongings
Are not thine own so proper, as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee.
Heaven doth with us, as we with torches do;
Not light them for ourselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Measure.

BELO'VED. participle. [from belove, derived of love.]
It is observable, that though the participle be of very frequent use, the verb is seldom or never admitted; as we say, you are much beloved by me, but not, I belove you.] Loved; dear.

I think, it is not meet,
Mark Anthony, so well belov'd of Caesar,
Should outlive Caesar.

Shakespeare.

In likeness of a dove

But when I do, you shall petition it. Dryden.

BELO'W. adv.

1. In the lower place; in the place nearest the centre.

To men standing below on the ground, those that be on the top of Paul's, seem much less than they are, and cannot be known; but, to men above, these below seem nothing so much lessened, and may be known. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of the tempests and winds before the air here below; and therefore the obscuring of the smaller stars, is a sign of tempest following. Bacon, Ib.

His sultry heat infects the sky;

The ground below is parch'd, the heav'n above us fry. Dryden.

This said, he led them up the mountain's brow,
And shew'd them all the shining fields below. Dryden.

B E N

BENCH. n. s. [benc, Sax. banc, Fr.]

1. A seat, distinguished from a stool by its greater length.

The seats and benches shone of ivory,

An hundred nymphs sat side by side about.

Spenser.

All Rome is pleas'd, when Statius will rehearse,

And longing crowds expect the promis'd verse;

His lofty numbers, with so great a gust,

They hear, and swallow with such eager lust:

But while the common suffrage crown'd his cause,

And broke the benches with their loud applause,

His muse had starv'd, had not a piece unread,

And by a player bought, supply'd her bread.

Dryden.

2. A seat of justice; the seat where judges sit.

To pluck down justice from your awful bench;

To trip the course of law.

Shakespeare.

Cyriac, whose grandsire on the royal bench

Of British Themis, with no mean applause,

Pronounc'd, and in his volumes taught our laws,

Which others at their bar so often wrench.

Milton.

3. The persons sitting on a bench; as, the whole bench voted the same way.

Fools to popular praise aspire,

Of publick speeches, which worse fools admire;

While, from both benches, with redoubl'd sounds,

Th' applause of lords and commoners abounds.

Dryden.

To BENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with benches.

'Twas bench'd with turf, and goodly to be seen,

The thick young grass arose in fresher green.

Heaps of spent arrows fall, and strew the ground;

And helms, and shields, and rattling arms resound.

Dryden.

2. To direct to a certain point.

Octavius and Mark Anthony

Came down upon us with a mighty power,

Bending their expedition toward Philippi.

Shakespeare.

Why dost thou bend thy eyes upon the earth,

And start so often, when thou sitt'st alone?

Shakespeare.

Your gracious eyes upon this labour bend.

Fairfax.

To that sweet region was our voyage bent,

When winds and every warring element,

Disturb'd our course.

Dryden.

B E N

Then, with a rushing sound, the assembly bend,
Diverse, their steps; the rival rout ascend
The royal dome.

Pope.

3. With the particle down.

The Almighty Father from above,
From the pure empyrean where he sits
High thron'd above all highth, bent down his eye
His own works and their works at once to view.

Milton, P. L. iii. 58.

4. To apply to a certain purpose; to intend the mind.

Men will not bend their wits to examine, whether things, wherewith they have been accustomed, be good or evil. Hooker.

Each corporal agent to this terrible feat.

Shakspeare.

As a fowler was bending his net, a blackbird asked him what he was doing?

L'Estrange.

6. To incline.

But when to mischief mortals bend their will,
How soon they find fit instruments of ill!

Pope.

7. To bow, in token of submission.

Would'st thou be window'd in great Rome, and see Thy master thus with pleach'd arms, bending down
His corrigible neck?

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

8. To subdue; to make submissive: as, war and famine will bend our enemies.

9. To bend the brow. To knit the brow; to frown.
Some have been seen to bite their pen, scratch their head, bend their brows, bite their lips, beat the board, and tear their paper.

Camden.

To BEND.† v. n.

1. To be incurvated.

Great God, stoop from the bending skies;
The mountains touch, and clouds shall rise.

BENEDI'CTION. n. s. [benefictio, Lat.]

1. Blessing; a decretory pronunciation of happiness.

A sovereign shame so bows him; his unkindness,
That stript her from his benefiction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his dog-bersted daughters.

Shakspeare.

From him will raise

A mighty nation; and upon him shower.

His benefiction so, that, in his seed,

All nations shall be blest.

Milton.

2. The advantage conferred by blessing.

Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New; which carrieth the greater benefiction, and the clearer revelation of God's favour.

Bacon.

3. Acknowledgments for blessings received; thanks.

Could he less expect

Than glory and benefiction, that is, thanks?

Milton.

Such ingenious and industrious persons are delighted in searching out natural rarities; reflecting upon the Creator of them his due praises and benefictions.

Ray.

4. The form of instituting an abbot.

What consecration is to a bishop, that benefiction is to an abbot; but in a different way: for a bishop is not properly such, till consecration; but an abbot, being elected and confirmed, is properly such before benefiction.

Ayliffe.

BENEFAC'TION. n. s. [from benefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of conferring a benefit.

2. The benefit conferred; which is the more usual sense.

One part of the benefactions, was the expression of a generous and grateful mind.

Atterbury.

BENEFAC'TOR. n. s. [from benefacio, Lat.] He that confers a benefit; frequently he that contributes to some public charity: it is used with of, but oftener with to, before the person benefited.

Then swell with pride, and must be titled gods,

Great benefactors of mankind, deliverers,

Worshipp'd with temple, priest, and sacrifice.

Milton.

From that preface he took his hint, though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor.

Dryden.

I cannot but look upon the writer as my benefactor, if he conveys to me an improvement of my understanding.

Addison.

Whoever makes ill returns to his benefactor, must needs be a common enemy to mankind.

Swift.

BENEFAC'TRESS. † n. s. [from benefactor.] A woman who confers a benefit.

She was a benefactress to many monasteries.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 30.

BENEFICE. † n. s. [from beneficium, Lat.]

1. Advantage conferred on another. This word is generally taken for all ecclesiastical livings, be they dignities or others.

Comel.

And of the priest estoons 'gan to enquire,
How to a benefice he might aspire.

Spenser.

Much to himself he thought, but little spoke,

Dryden.

And, undepriv'd, his benefice forsook.

2. Benefice, in the feudal language, signified an emolument and a duty; but it also formerly meant, generally speaking, benefit; and so Wickliffe gives for "partakers of the benefit," 1 Tim. vi. 2. "partakers of benefice."

BENEFICED. adj. [from benefice.] Possessed of a benefice, or church preferment.

The usual rate between the beneficed man and the religious person, was one moiety of the benefice.

Ayliffe.

BENEFICENCE. † n. s. [old Fr. beneficence.] The practice of doing good; active goodness.

You could not extend your beneficence to so many persons; yet you have lost as few days, as Aurelius.

Dryden.

Love and charity extends our beneficence to the miseries of our brethren.

Rogers.

BENEFICENT. adj. [from beneficus, beneficentior, Lat.]

Kind; doing good. It differs from benign, as the act from the disposition; beneficence being kindness, or benignity exerted in action.

Such a creature could not have his origination from any less than the most wise and beneficent being, the great God.

Hale.

But Phœbus, thou, to man beneficent,

Delight'st in building cities.

Prior.

BENEFICENTLY. * adv. [from beneficent.] In a beneficent manner.

BENEFICELESS. * adj. [from benefice and less.] Having no benefice.

Pownall on the Study of Antiquities, p. 68.

BENEFICIALNESS. n. s. [from beneficial.] Usefulness; profit; helpfulness.

Though the knowledge of these objects be commendable for their contentation and curiosity, yet they do not commend their knowledge to us, upon the account of their usefulness and beneficialness.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

BENEFICIARY. adj. [from benefice.] Holding something in subordination to another; having a dependent and secondary possession, without sovereign power.

The duke of Parma was tempted by no less promise, than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the pope.

Bacon.

BENEFICIARY. † n. s.

B E N

1. He that is in possession of a benefice.

A benefice is either said to be a benefice with the cure of souls, or otherwise. In the first case, if it be annexed to another benefice, the beneficiary is obliged to serve the parish church in his own proper person.

2. A person beneficed by another.

His beneficiaries frequently made it their wonder, how the doctor should either know of them or their distress.

Fell's Life of Hammond, § 2.

BENEFICIENCY.* n. s. [Fr. beneficence.] Kindness; benignity; graciousness.

They [the ungrateful] discourage the inclinations of noble minds, and make beneficency cool unto acts of obligation, whereby the grateful world should subsist and have their consolation.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 17.

BENEFICIENT.* adj. [from beneficence.] The French have also the verb beneficier. V. Cotgrave.

As its tendency is necessarily beneficent, it is the proper object of gratitude and reward. A. Smith, Theor. of Hum. Sent.

BENEFIT. n. s. [beneficium, Lat.]

1. A kindness; a favour conferred; an act of love.

When noble benefits shall prove

Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.

Shakspeare.
Psaln ciii. 2.

Offer'd life

Neglect not, and the benefit embrace,

By faith, not void of works.

Milton, P. L.

2. Advantage; profit; use.

The creature abateth his strength for the benefit of such as put their trust in thee.

Wisdom, xvi. 24.

3. [In law.] Benefit of clergy is an ancient liberty of the church, when a priest, or one within orders, is arraigned of felony before a secular judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, pray to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected to him: and this might be done in case of murder. The ancient law, in this point of clergy is much altered: for clerks are no more delivered to their ordinaries to be purged, but now every man, though not within orders, is put to read at the bar, being found guilty, and convicted of such felony as this benefit is granted for; and so burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner, or deputy, standing by, do say, Legit ut clericus; or otherwise suffereth death for his transgression.

Cowel.

To BENEFIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.

What course I mean to hold,

Shall nothing benefit your knowledge.

Shakspeare.

He was so far from benefiting trade, that he did it a great injury, and brought Rome in danger of a famine.

Arbutnot.

To BENEFIT. v. n. To gain advantage; to make improvement.

To tell you therefore what I have benefited herein, among old and renowned authors, I shall spare.

Milton on Educ.

To BENE'GROE.* v. a. [from be and negro; an unusual but forcible word.] To make extremely dark.

And if at the coming and appearance of the humanity of Christ, the sun shall be bene'groed in darkness, as a petty light at the coming of a greater; how if you cast an eye upon the life of God!

Hewyt, Sermons, (1658.) p. 79.

Surrounded with miseries, bene'groed in more than Cimmerian, and that perpetual darkness too, &c.

Ibid. p. 109.

To BENE'VE. or BENE'VEPNE.* v. a. [from be and nempe, Sax. niman, nemnan, to name; pret. and pt. benempt, bynempt. Chaucer uses the verb nuc, for name, Squire's Tale, ver. 10632. Dr.

B E N

Johnson gives benempt as an adjective, when his example clearly proves it to be a verb; and defines it named, marked out, when it there means promised or given. The word in any sense is now obsolete.]

1. To name; to pronounce.

But say me, what is Algind, he

That is so oft bynempt?

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

But, ere they did their utmost obsequy,

Sir Guyon, more affection to increase,

Bynempt a sacred vow, which none should release.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 60.

2. To promise; to give.

Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gayne,

Thah kid or cosset, which I thee bynempt.

Milton, Apul. for Smeetyann.

BENJAMIN. n. s. A gum. See BENZOIN.

To BENIGHT. v. a. [from night.]

1. To involve in darkness; to darken; to shrowd with the shades of night.

He that has light within his own clear breast

May sit in the center, and enjoy bright day;

But he that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts,

Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;

Himself is his own dungeon.

Milton, Comus.

Those bright stars that did adorn our hemisphere, as those dark shades that did benight it, vanish.

Boyle.

A storm begins, the raging waves run high,
The clouds look heavy and benight the sky.
The miserable race of men that live
Benighted half the year, benumm'd with frosts,
Under the polar Bear.

Garth.

2. To surprise with the coming on of night.

Being benighted, the sight of a candle I saw a good way off, directed me to a young shepherd's house.

Philips.

Sidney.

Here some benighted angel, in his way,
Might ease his wings; and, seeing heaven appear
In its best work of mercy, think it there.

Dryden.

3. To debar from intellectual light; to cloud with ignorance.

But what so long in vain, and yet unknown
By poor mankind's benighted wit, is sought,
Shall in this age to Britain first be shown.

Dryden.

BENIGN. adj. [benignus, Lat. It is pronounced without the g, as if written benine; but the g is preserved in benignity.]

1. Kind; generous; liberal; actually good. See BENEFICENT.

This turn hath made amends! Thou hast fulfill'd
Thy words, Creator bounteous and benign!
Giver of all things fair.

Milton.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign.

Milton.

We owe more to Heav'n than to the sword,
The wish'd return of so benign a lord.

Waller.

What Heav'n bestows upon the earth, in kind influences and benign aspects, is paid it back in sacrifice and adoration.

South.

They who delight in the suffering of inferiour creatures, will not be very compassionate or benign.

Locke.

Diff'rent are thy names,
As thy kind hand has founded many cities,
Or dealt benign thy various gifts to men.

Prior.

2. Wholesome; not malignant.

These salts are of a benign mild nature, in healthy persons;
but, in others, retain their original qualities, which they discover in cachexes.

Arbuthnot.

BENIGN Disease, is when all the usual symptoms appear in the small-pox, or any acute disease, favourably, and without any irregularities, or unexpected changes.

Quincy.

BENIGNANT.* adj. [from benign.] Kind; gracious; actually good.

Defend my heart, benignant Power,
From amorous looks and smiles;
And shield me, in my gayer hour,
From love's destructive wiles.

Maiden's Wish, Collect. of Eng. Songs, i. iv. 20.

If what has now been stated should be urged by the enemies of Christianity, as if its influence on the mind were not benignant, let it be remembered, that Johnson's temperament was melancholy, of which such direful apprehensions of futurity are often a common effect.

Boswell, Life of Johnson, iv. 314.

BENIGNITY. n. s. [old Fr. benigneté.]

1. Graciousness; goodness.

It is true, that his mercy will forgive offenders, or his benignity co-operate to their conversions.

Brough.

Although he enjoys the good that is done him, he is unconcerned to value the benignity of him that does it.

South.

2. Actual kindness.

He which useth the benefit of any special benignity, may enjoy it with good conscience.

Hooker.

than blood.

Hayward.

3. Salubrity; wholesome quality; friendliness to vital nature.

Bones receive a quicker agglutination in sanguine than in choleric bodies, by reason of the benignity of the serum, which sendeth out better matter for a callus.

Wiseman.

BENIGNLY. adv. [from benign.] Favourably; kindly; graciously.

'Tis amazement more than love,
Which her radiant eyes do move;
If less splendour wait on thine,
Yet they so benignly shine,
I would turn my dazzled sight
To behold their milder light.

Waller.

Oh truly good, and truly great!

For glorious as he rose, benignly so he set.

Prior.

BENISON. n. s. [old Fr. benison, bonne priere; benison, benediction. Lacombe.] Blessing; benediction: not now used, unless ludicrously.

We have no such daughter; nor shall ever see

That face of her's again; therefore, begone

Without our grace, our love, our benison. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

That won't st to love the traveller's benison. Milton, Comus.

BENNET. n. s. An herb; the same with avens.

BENT. n. s. [from the verb To bend.]

1. The state of being bent; a state of flexure; curvity.

Strike gently, and hold your rod at a bent a little. Walton's Angler.

2. Degree of flexure.

There are divers subtle inquiries concerning the strength required to the bending of bows; the force they have in the discharge, according to the several bents; and the strength required to be in the string of them.

Bp. Wilkins.

3. Declivity. [old Fr. pente, the slope of a hill.

Dryden has adopted the word from Chaucer.]

A mountain stood,
Threatening from high, and overlook'd the wood:

Beneath the lowering brow, and on a bent,

The temple stood of Mars arripotent.

Dryden.

4. Utmost power, as of a bent bow.

Then let thy love be younger than thyself,

Or thy affection cannot hold the bent.

Shakespeare.

We both obey,

And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,

To lay our service freely at your feet.

Shakespeare.

5. Application of the mind; strain of the mental powers.

The understanding should be brought to the knotty parts of knowledge, that try the strength of thought, and a full bent of the mind, by insensible degrees.

Locke.

6. Inclination; disposition towards something.

O who does know the bent of women's fantasy! Spenser, F. Q.

To your own bents dispose you; you'll be found

Be you beneath the sky.

York.

Bacon.

Soon inclin'd to admit delight,
The bent of nature!

Milton, P. L.

The golden age was first; when man, yet new,

No rule but uncorrupted reason knew;

And, with a native bent, did good pursue.

Dryden.

Let there be propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry.

South.

'Tis odds but the scale turns at last on nature's side, and the evidence of one or two senses gives way to the united bent and tendency of all the five.

Atterbury.

7. Determination; fixed purpose.

Their unbelief we may not impute unto insufficiency in the mean which is used, but to the wilful bent of their obstinate hearts against it.

Hooker.

Yet we saw them forced to give way to the bent, and current humour of the people, in favour of their ancient and lawful government.

Temple.

8. Turn of the temper, or disposition; shape, or fashion, superinduced by art.

Not a courtier,

Although they wear their faces to the bent

Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at.

Shakespeare.

Two of them have the very bent of honour.

Shakespeare.

Then thy straight rule set virtue in my sight,

The crooked line reforming by the right;

My reason took the bent of thy command,

Was form'd and polish'd by thy skilful hand.

Dryden.

9. Tendency; flexion; particular direction.

The exercising the understanding, in the several ways of reasoning, teacheth the mind suppleness, to apply itself more dexterously to bents and turns of the matter, in all its researches.
Locke.

10. A stalk of grass, called bent-grass. [Germ. bintz, from binden, to bind, a rush; so our bent may here be from band.]

His spear, a bent both stiff and strong,
And well ~~met~~ of two inches long;
The pile was of a horse-fly's tongue,
Whose sharpness naught reversed.
Drayton, Nymphid.

Benum'd her senses first, then stopp'd her breath.
Dryden.

BENUMMEDNESS. * n. s. [from benum. A very old Eng. substantive, occurring in Barret's Alvearie.]

The state of being benumbed.

Preternatural sleep is a committing a rape upon the body and mind, whereby the offensive superfluities, by their violent assaults, force the brain to a benumbedness for its destruction.
Smith's Old Age, p. 131.

When there is a benumbedness, or scaredness, upon the grand principle of spiritual sense, as it is expressed in Ephes. xix. 4. we come "to be past feeling," no wonder then if sin and Satan inflict blow after blow, in the most fatal manner, upon the soul.
South, Sermons, ix. 55.

BENZO'IN. n. s. A medicinal kind of resin imported from the East Indies, and vulgarly called benjamin. BESE'EN.* particip. [from beseen, Skinner. This word I have found only in Spenser, Dr. Johnson says. But see BESEE. In our older writers, this participle is beseey; as "evil beseey," ill beseen; "richly beseey," of a rich appearance. V. Tyrwhitt, Gloss. Chauc. Spenser uses it more than once.] Adapted; adjusted; becoming.

Then her they crowne their goddesses and their queene,
And decke with flowers thy altars well beseene.
Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Love.

Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,
Armed in antique robes down to the ground,
And sad habiliments, right well beseen. Spenser, F. Q.

To BESE'T.* v. a. pret. I beset; I have beset. [Goth. bisatjan, Mar. xii. 1. Sax. bejaetan, beraet.]

1. To besiege; to hem in; to inclose; as with a siege.

Follow him that's fled;
The thicket is beset, he cannot scape. Shakspeare.

Now, Caesar, let thy troops beset our gates,
And bar each avenue
Cato shall open to himself a passage. Addison.

I know thou look'st on me, as on a wretch
Beset with ills and cover'd with misfortunes. Addison.

2. To waylay; to surround.

Draw forth thy weapon, we're beset with thieves;
Rescue thy mistress. Shakspeare.

The only righteous in a world perverse,
And therefore hated, therefore so beset
With foes, for daring single to be just. Milton.

True fortitude I take to be the quiet possession of a man's self, and an undisturbed doing his duty, whatever evil besets, or danger lies in his way. Locke.

3. To embarrass; to perplex; to entangle without any means of escape.

Now, daughter Sylvia, you are hard beset.
Thus Adam, sore beset, reply'd. Shakspeare.

Spenser, F. Q.

To BESHINE.* v. n. [from be and shine.] To shine upon. An unusual word.

He had a wyf,
That he lov'd as hertlich as his own lyf;
[She] was as fair a creature as sun might beshine.

Hist. of Beryn, Urry's Ch. p. 403.

To BESHREW.* v. a. The original of this word is somewhat obscure; as it evidently implies to wish ill, some derive it from beschryen, Germ. to enchant. Topsel, in his Book of Animals, deduces it from the shrew mouse, an animal, says he, so poisonous, that its bite is a severe curse. A shrew likewise signifies a scolding woman; but its origin is not known. This is Dr. Johnson's account of the etymology. But see SHREW. Beshrew is probably from the Sax. verb berýneþian, particip. berýnþe, ensnared; the verb properly meaning to take by stratagem or snare. Mr. Tooke thinks beshrew to be the imperative of this verb, berýneþe, and to mean, be thou wred, Div. of Purley, vol. ii. p. 210. To this I cannot accede. — "That they might take Jesus by subtilty," S. Matt. xxvi. 4. is in the Sax. maþne berýnþan. Be thou taken in some snare is, therefore, an explanation of better authority than Mr. Tooke's unsupported assertion; and is moreover illustrated, I think, by a passage in Gower, where beshrewed seems to mean full of subtilty, and is a just picture of hypocrisy.

This double hypocrisy,
With his devout apparance,
A vyeer set upon his face,
Whereof, toward the world's grace,
He seemeth to be right well thewed;
And yet his herte is all beshrewed. Gower, Conf. Am. b. i.

1. To wish a curse to.

Nay, quoth the cock; but I beshrew us both,
If I believe a saint upon his oath. Dryden, Fables.

2. To happen ill to.

Beshrew thee, cousin, which did'st lead me forth
Of that sweet way I was in to despair. Shakespeare.
Now much beshrew my manners, and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied. Shakespeare.

To BESHUT.* v. a. [from be and shut.] To shut up. Obsolete.

They have my joye fully let,
Sith Bialacoil they have beshet
Fro me in prison wickedly. Chancer, Rom. R. 4488.

BESIDE.* } prep. [from be and side.]

BESIDES.* } 1. At the side of another; near.

Beside the hearse a fruitful palmtree grows,
Ennobled since by this great funeral. Fairfax.
He caused me to sit down beside him. Bacon.

These may serve as landmarks, to shew what lies in the direct way of truth, or is quite besides it. Locke.

5. Before a reciprocal pronoun, out of; as beside himself; out of the order of rational beings; out of his wits.

They be carried besides themselves, to whom the dignity of publick prayer doth not discover somewhat more fitness in men of gravity, than in children. Hooker.

Only be patient, till we have appea'd
The multitude, beside themselves with fear. Shakespeare.
Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art be ide thyself: much learning doth make thee mad. Acts, xxvi. 24.

BESIDE.* } adv.
BESIDES.* }

1. More than that; over and above.

If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor
May unfold me to him; there stand I in peril. Shakespeare.
Besides, you know not, while you here attend,
Th' unworthy fate of your unhappy friend. Dryden.

That man that doth not know those things, which are of necessity for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson.

Some wonder, that the Turk never attacks this treasury. But, besides that he has attempted it formerly with no success, it is certain the Venetians keep too watchful an eye. Addison.

2. Not in this number; out of this class; not included here.

The men said unto Lot, Hast thou here any besides? Genesis, xix. 12.
Outlaws and robbers, who break with all the world beside, must keep faith among themselves. Locke.

All that we feel of it, begins and ends
In the small circle of our foes or friends;
To all beside as much an empty shade,
An Eugene living, as a Caesar dead. Pope.
And dead, as living, 'tis our author's pride
Still to charm those who charm the world beside. Pope.

3. Except.

We would have omniscience and all parts of divinity besides the holiness; yet alas, those without these would prove fatal acquiescences. Decay of Christian Piety, p. 349.

To BESIEGE. v. a. [from siege.] To beleaguer; to lay siege to; to beset with armed forces; to endeavour to win a town or fortress, by surrounding it with an army, and forcing the defendants, either by violence or famine, to give admission.

And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down. Deuteronomy, xxviii. 52.

The queen, with all the northern earls and lords, intend here to besiege you in your castle. Shakespeare.

BESIEGER. n. s. [from besiege.] One employed in a siege.

There is hardly a town taken, in the common forms, where the besiegers have not the worse of the bargain. Swift.

To BESIT.* v. a. [from be and sit. See To SIT.]

To suit; to become. Not now in use; and ignorantly converted into besit by some editors of Spenser, who supposed the author not to know the language of his own and former times. Chaucer and Gower repeatedly use sit in this sense of become.

Me ill besits, that in derdoing arms
And honour's suit my vowed days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baytes and pleasing charmes,
With which weake men thou witchest, to attend.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 10.

And that which is for ladies most besiting,
To stint all strife, and foster friendly peace,
Was from those dames so farre and so unfitting,
As that, instead of praying them surcease,
They did much more their cruelty encrease. Ibid. iv. ii. 19.

To BESLA'VE.* v. a. [from be and slave.] To subjugate; to make a slave of.

He that hath once fixed his heart upon the face of an harlot, and hath beslaved himself to a bewitching beauty, casts off at once all fear of God, respect to laws, shame of the world, regard of his estate, care of wife, children, friends, reputation, patrimony, body, soul. Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 116.

Whom sad diseases have beslaved to drugs and diets.
Quarles, Judgement and Mercy.

It [covetousness] blinds justice, poisons charity, strangles conscience, beslaves the affections, betrays friendship, breaks all relations. Ibid.

To BESLIME.* v. a. [from be and slime.] To soil; to dawb.

Our fry of writers may beslime his fame,
And give his action that adulterate name.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, Prol.

To BESLUBBER. v. a. [from slubber.] To dawb; to smear.

He persuaded us to tickle our noses with speargrass, and make them bleed; and then beslubber our garments with it, and swear it was the blood of true men. Shakespeare.

To BESMEAR.† v. a. [from smear. See To SMEAR.]

1. To bedawb; to overspread with something that sticks on.

He lay as in a dream of deep delight,
Besmeared with precious balm, whose virtuous might Did heal his wounds. Spenser, F. Q.

That face of his I do remember well;
Yet when I saw it last, it was besmeared
As black as Vulcan. Shakespeare.

First Moloch! horrid king! besmeared with blood
Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears. Milton, P. L.

Her fainting hand let fall the sword, besmeared
With blood. Denham.
Her gushing blood the pavement all besmeared. Dryden.

2. To soil; to foul.

My honour would not let ingratitude
So much besmeare it. Shakespeare.

Then should a great deal of good paper escape the misery of being besmeared by his pen.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, ii. 14.

BESMEARER.* n. s. [from besmeare.] He which soils or besmears any thing. Sherwood.

To BESMIRCH.† v. a. [from be and smirch. See To SMIRCH.] To soil; to discolour. Not in use.

Perhaps he loves you now,
And now no soil of causal doth besmirch
The virtue of his will. Shakespeare.

Our gayness, and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakespeare.

To BESMOK'E. v. n. [from smoke.]

1. To foul with smoke.

2. To harden or dry in smoke.

To BESMU'T.† v. a. [Goth. bismait, he anointed, S. John, ix. 11. Sax. bermytan. Formerly written besmolre, from the Dutch besmodderen.] To soil or blacken with smoke or soot.

Of fustian he wored a gipon,
All besmotred with his habergeon. Chaucer, Canterb. T. Prol.
To BESNO'W.* v. a. [Sax. bernyubed, from nyuban, to snow.] To scatter in abundance like snow; to whiten as snow.

The presents every day ben newed,
He was with giftes al besnewed,
The people was of him so glad. Gower, Con. Am. b. 6.

Another shall

Impearl thy teeth, a third thy white and small
Head shall besnow.— Carew, Poems, p. 95.

BESNU'FFED.* adj. [from snuff.] Smear'd with snuff.

Unwash'd her hands, and much besnuff'd her face.
Young, Satire 6.

BE'SOM. n. s. [bejm, bejma, Sax.] An instrument to sweep with.

Bacon commended an old man that sold besoms: a proud young fellow came to him for a besom upon trust; the old man said, Borrow of thy back and belly, they will never ask thee again; I shall dun thee every day. Bacon.

I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of hogs. Isaiah, xiv. 22.

To BESORT. v. a. [from sort.] To suit; to fit; to become.

Such men as may besort your age,
And know themselves and you. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

BESO'RT. n. s. [from the verb.] Company; attendance; train.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
With such accommodation and besort,
As levels with her breeding. Shakespeare, Othello.

To BESOT. v. a. [from sof.]

1. To infatuate; to stupify; to dull; to take away the senses.

Swinish gluttony
Ne'er looks to heav'n amidst his gorgeous feast,
But, with besotted base ingratitude,
Crams and blasphemes his feeder. Milton, Comus.

Or fools besotted with their crimes,
That know not how to shift betimes. Hudibras.

He is besotted, and has lost his reason; and what then can there be for religion to take hold of him by? South.

2. To make to doat, with on. Not much used.

Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights. Shakespeare.

Trust not thy beauty; but restore the prize,
Which lie, besotted on that face and eyes,
Would rend from us. Dryden.

BESO'TTEDLY.* adv. [from besotted.] In a foolish, besotted manner.

After ten or twelve years' prosperous war and contestation with tyranny, basely and besottedly to run their necks again into the yoke which they have broken.

Milton, Ready Way to establish a Free Commonwealth.

BESO'TTEDNESS.* n. s. [from besotted.] Stupidity; infatuation.

God, when men sin outrageously and will not be admonished, gives over chastising them, perhaps by pestilence, fire, sword, or famine, which may all turn to their good; and takes up his severest punishments, hardness, besottedness of heart, and idolatry, to their perdition. Milton, of True Religion, &c. ad fin.

BESOU'GHT. † [part. passive of beseech, and of beseech; which see.]

Hasten to appease
 The incensed Father, and the incensed Son,
 While pardon may be found, in time besought. Milton.
To BESPA'NGLE. v. a. [from spangle.] To adorn with spangles; to besprinkle with something shining.

Not Berenice's locks first rose so bright,
 The heav'n's bespangling with dishevell'd light. Pope.

To BESPA'TTER. † v. a. [from spatter.]
 1. To soil by throwing filth; to spot or sprinkle with dirt or water.

Those who will not take vice into their bosoms, shall yet have it bespatter their faces. Government of the Tongue.

His weapons are the same which women and children use;
 a pin to scratch, and a squirt to bespatter. Swift.

2. To asperse with reproach.
 Fair Britain, in the monarch blest,
 Whom never faction could bespatter. Swift.

If the calumniator bespatters and belyes me, I will endeavour to convince him by my life and manners, but not by being like himself. South, Sermons, viii. 198.

To BESPA'WL. † v. a. [from spawl.] To dawb with spittle.

This remonstrant would invest himself conditionally with all the rheum of the town, that he might have sufficient to bespawl his brethren. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

To BESPE'AK. v. a. bespoke, or bespake; I have bespoke, or bespoken. [from speak.]

1. To order, or entreat any thing beforehand, or against a future time.

If you will marry, make your loves to me;
 My lady is bespoke. Shakspeare.
 Here is the cap your worship did bespeak. Shakspeare.

When Baboon came to Strutt's estate, his tradesman waited upon him to bespeak his custom. Arbutnot.

A heavy writer was to be encouraged, and accordingly many thousand copies were bespoke. Swift.

2. To make way by a previous apology.
 My preface looks as if I were afraid of my reader, by so tedious a bespeaking of him. Dryden.

3. To forebode; to tell something before hand.
 They started fears, bespoke dangers, and formed ominous prognosticks, in order to scare the allies. Swift.

4. To speak to; to address. This sense is chiefly poetical.

With hearty words her knight she gan to cheer,
 And, in her modest manner, thus bespake,
 Dear knight. Spenser, F. Q.

At length with indignation thus he broke
 His awful silence, and the powers bespoke. Dryden.

Then staring on her with a ghastly look,
 And hollow voice, he thus the queen bespoke. Dryden.

5. To betoken; to shew.
 When the abbot of St. Martin was born, he had so little of the figure of a man, that it bespoke him rather a monster. Locke.

He has dispatched me hence,
 With orders that bespeak a mind composed. Addison.

BESPE'AKER. n. s. [from bespeak.] He that bespeaks any thing.

They mean not with love to the bespeaker of the work, but delight in the work itself. Wolton.

To BESPE'CKLE. † v. a. [from speckle.] To mark with speckles, or spots.

[They] in a flaring tire bespeckled her with all the gaudy allurements of a whore. Milton, of Ref. in England, B. I.

To BESPE'T. * v. a. [from be and spet. See To SPET.]
 This is the old word, which continued in use till Milton's time, who uses it for spit in his mask of Comus.] To dawb with spittle.

Then was his visage, that ought to be desired to be seen of all mankind, villainously bespet. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.
 To bespet one all over. Barret, Alvearie.

The dragon womb
 Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom. Milton, Com. v. 132.

 Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood;
 The bed besprinkles, and bedews the ground. Dryden.

BESPRI'NKLER. * n. s. [from besprinkle.] He that sprinkles any thing. Sherwood.

To BESPI'RT, or BESPURT. * v. a. [from be and spirt, which see.] To throw out scatteringly.

It will be nothing disagreeing from Christian meekness, to handle such a one in a rougher accent, and to send home his haughtiness well bespurt with his own holy-water.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

To BESPu'TTER. v. a. [from sputter.] To sputter over something; to dawb any thing by sputtering, or throwing out spittle upon it.

BEST. † adj. the superlative from good. [Goth. batista; ber, betepa, betet, betet, good, better, best,
 Saxon.]

1. Most good; that which has good qualities in the highest degree.

And he will take your fields, even the best of them, and give them to his servants. 1 Samuel, viii. 14.

When the best things are not possible, the best may be made of those that are. Hooker.

When he is best, he is little more than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast. Shakspeare.

B E S

I think it a good argument to say, the infinitely wise God hath made it so; and therefore it is best. But it is too much confidence of our own wisdom, to say, I think it best, and therefore God hath made it so. Locke.

An evil intention perverts the best actions, and makes them sin. Addison.

2. The best. The utmost power; the strongest endeavour; the most; the highest perfection.

I profess not talking: only this,

Let each man do his best. Shakspeare.

The duke did his best to come down. Bacon.

He does this to the best of his power. Locke.

My friend, said he, our sport is at the best. Addison.

3. To make the best. To carry to its greatest perfection; to improve to the utmost.

Let there be freedom to carry their commodities where they may make the best of them, except there be some special cause of caution. Bacon.

His father left him an hundred drachmas; Alnaschar, in order to make the best of it, laid it out in glasses. Addison.

We set sail, and made the best of our way, till we were forced, by contrary winds, into St. Remo. Addison.

BEST. adv. [from well.] In the highest degree of goodness.

He shall dwell in that place where he shall choose in one of thy gates, where it liketh him best. Deut. xxiii. 16.

BEST. † is sometimes used in composition, Dr. Johnson observes; but in the following and similar words it is arbitrary.

My best-beloved, and approved friend.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

These latter best-betrust spies had some of them further instructions, to draw off the best friends and servants of Perkin, by making remonstrances to them, how weakly his enterprise and hopes were built. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The best-condition'd and unwearied spirit In doing courtesies. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

By this law of loving even our enemies, the christian religion discovers itself to be the most generous and best-natured institution that ever was in the world. Tillotson.

Which might have aw'd the best-resolved of men. Milton, S. A. v. 847.

His death (whose spirit lent a fire Even to the dullest peasant in his camp) Being bruited once, took fire and heat away From the best-temper'd courage in his troops. Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

To BESTA'IN. v. a. [from stain.] To mark with stains; to spot.

We will not line his thin bestained cloke With our pure honour. Shakspeare.

To BESTEAD. † v. a. I bested; I have bested, and bestad. [from stead.]

1. To profit.

Hence vain deluding joys,
The brood of folly, without father bred,
How little you bestead,
Or fill the fixed mind with all your toys. Milton, Il Pens.

2. To treat; to accommodate. This should rather be bested.

They shall pass through it hardly bestead, and hungry. Isaiah, viii. 21.

3. To dispose.

What the fowle evil hath thee so bestad? Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

BESTIAL. adj. [from beast.]

1. Belonging to a beast, or to the class of beasts.

His wild disorder'd walk, his haggard eyes,
Did all the bestial citizens surprize. Dryden.

2. Having the qualities of beasts; brutal; below the dignity of reason or humanity; carnal.

I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial. Shakspeare, Othello.

B E S

Moreover, urge his hateful luxury, And bestial appetite, in change of lust. Shakspeare.

For those, the race of Israel oft forsook Their Living Strength, and unfrequented left His righteous altar, bowing lowly down To bestial gods. Milton, P. L.

The things promised are not gross and carnal, such as may court and gratify the most bestial part of us. Decay of Piety.

BESTIALITY. † n. s. [old Fr. bestialité.] The quality of beasts; degeneracy from human nature.

What can be a greater absurdity, than to affirm bestiality to be the essence of humanity, and darkness the centre of light?

Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

To BESTIALIZE. \ v. a.* [from bestial.] To make like a beast.

In all the true pleasures which ever fell to my lot, they [reason and reflection] had a considerable share; and where they are wanting, there is no such thing as pleasure of any kind for me; and humanity is debased and bestialized where it is otherwise. Phil. Letters on Physiognomy, (1751,) p. 87.

BESTIALLY. † adv. [from bestial.] Brutally; in a manner below humanity.

To BESTICK. † v. a. preter. I bestuck, I have bestuck. [from stick.] To stick over with any thing; to mark any thing by infixing points or spots here and there.

Truth shall retire,

Bestuck with slanderous darts; and works of faith.

Rarely be found. Milton, P. L.

I have gained a name bestuck, or, as I may say, bedecked with the reproaches and reviles of this modest confuter.

Milton, Apol. for Smeatymn.

To BESTINK. \ v. n.* part. bestunk. To stink.

Sherwood.

To BESTIR. † v. a. [from stir.]

1. To put into vigorous action. It is seldom used otherwise than with the reciprocal pronoun.

As when men went to watch

On duty, sleeping found by whom they dread,
Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake. Milton, P. I.

Bestirs her then, and from each tender stalk

Whatever earth, all-bearing mother yields,
She gathers. Milton, P. I.

But, as a dog that turns the spit,
Bestirs himself, and plies his feet
To climb the wheel, but all in vain,
His own weight brings him down again. Hudibras.

What aileth them, that they must needs bestir themselves to get in air, to maintain the creature's life? Ray.

2. It is used by Shakspeare with a common word, Dr. Johnson says; and so it is in Ben. Jonson, with a word often vulgarly applied to it in modern times.

I am scarce in breath, my lord.—No marvel you have so bestirred your valour, you cowardly rascal! Shakspeare.

How should we bustle forward? Give some counsel

How to bestir our stumps i' these cross ways. B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

BESTNESS. \ n. s.* [from best.] The most excellent state of a thing.

Generally the bestness of a thing (that we may so call it) is best discerned by the necessary use.

Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, § 4.

To BESTORM. \ v. n.* [from be and storm.] To rage; to storm.

All is sea besides,

Sinks under us, bestorms, and then devours.

Young, Night Th. 4.

To BESTOW. † v. a. [Sax. berstaudan, berstob, Dutch, bestedan.]

1. To give; to confer upon: commonly with upon.

All men would willingly have yielded him praise; but his nature was such as to bestow it upon himself, before any could give it. Sidney.

All the dedicate things of the house of the Lord, did they bestow upon Baalim. 2 Chron. xxiv. 7.

B E S

2. Sometimes with to.

Sir Julius Caesar, had, in his office, the disposition of the six clerks' places; which he had bestowed to such persons as he thought fit. Jarrendon.

3. To give as charity or bounty.

Our Saviour doth plainly witness, that there should not be as much as a cup of cold water bestowed for his sake, without reward. Hooker.

And though he was unsatisfied in getting, Which was a sin; yet in bestowing, madam, He was most princely. Shakspeare.

Spain to your gift alone her Indies owes; For what the pow'rful takes not, he bestows. Dryden.

BESTOWAL.* n. s. [from bestow.] Disposal.

BESTOWER.† n. s. [from bestow.] Giver; he that confers any thing; disposer.

They all agree in making one supreme God; and that there are several beings that are to be worshipped under him; some as the bestowers of thrones, but subordinate to the Supreme. Stillingfleet.

Where benefits

Are ill conferr'd, as to unworthy men That turn them to bad uses, the bestower For wanting judgement how, and on whom, to place them, Is partly guilty. Beaum. and Fl. Qu. of Corinth.

TO BESTRADLE.* v. a. To BESTRIDE, which see. See also To STRADDLE.

BESTRAUGHT.† particip. [Of this participle I have not found the verb; by analogy we may derive it from beSTRACT; perhaps it is corrupted from distracted. Such is Dr. Johnson's remark. He might have found the part. beSTRACT, however, in the old dictionaries of Minsheu and Sherwood; in that of the former, with the interpretation "distractus mente," i. e. distracted; in that of the latter, "beSTRACT or beSTRAUGHT, distract or distraught." Our elder language exhibits also beSTRAUGHT in the sense of distracted.] Distracted; mad; out of one's senses; out of one's wits.

BeSTRAUGHT heads relief hath found By musick's pleasant swete delights.

Paradise of Dainty Devises, (1576.) No. 53.

Ask Marian, the fat alewife, if she knew me not. What! I am not beSTRAUGHT. Shakspeare

STREW.† v. a. particip. pass. bestrewed, or estrown. [Sax. berstyped. See To STREW.] To sprinkle over.

So thick bestrown, Abject and lost lay these, covering the flood. Milton, P. L.

Her star-bestudded crown.

Drayton, Ep. of K. John to Matilda

The unsought diamonds Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep, And so bestud with stars, that they below Would grow inur'd to light. Milton, Comus.

TO BESWIKE.* v. a. [Sax. berswican, to entice; Icelandic. sækta. One of our oldest verbs, repeatedly used by Gower; in the following passage well applied to the Syrens.] To allure.

In women's voice they singe, With notes of so great likynge, Of such measure, of such musike, Wherof the shippes they beswike, That passen by the costes there. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

BET.† n. s. [peddian, to wager; ped, a wager, Sax. from which the etymologists derive bet. I should rather imagine it to come from betan, to mend, encrease, or better, as a bet encreases the original wager, Dr. Johnson says. What is meant by a bet encreasing the wager, I know not. The etymology might belong to betan, to abide by, full as well as to betan; and perhaps the Goth. beta, to strive against, may not be disregarded.] A wager; something laid to be won upon certain conditions.

The hoary fool, who many days, Has struggl'd with continu'd sorrow, Renews his hope, and blindly lays The desperate bet upon to-morrow. Prior,

His pride was in piquette, Newmarket fame, and judgement at a bet. Pope,

TO BET. v. a. [from the noun.] To wager; to stake at a wager.

He drew a good bow: and dead? John of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much upon his head. Shakspeare.

He flies the court for want of clothes, Cries out 'gainst cocking, since he cannot bet. B. Jonson.

The god, unhappily engag'd,
Complain'd, and sigh'd, and cry'd, and fretted,
Lost every earthly thing he betted.

Prior.

BET. The old preterite of beat.

He staid for a better hour, till the hammer had wrought and bet the party more pliant.

Bacon.

To BETA'KE. † v. a. [preter. I betook; part. pass. be- taken. [Sax. betæcan.]

1. To commit, or entrust, or deliver. This is the meaning of the Sax. word, is so given in our old lexicography, and is what Spenser intends (as he elsewhere repeatedly intends) in the following passage, which Dr. Johnson has cited to illustrate his erroneous definition of betake in the first instance, viz. to take or seize. The sense of deliver, or com- mit, is of the highest authority in our language.
See Chaucer, Canterb. Tales, ver. 3748. Wickliffe,
S. Matt. xxvi. "What wolen ye give to me, and I schal bitake him to you?" See also Barret's Alv.
1580.

Then to his handes that writt he did betake,
Which he disclosing read.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 25.

Give them the threefold charity, which thou once demandest of Peter, what time thou didst betake unto him the charge of thy sleep. Wh. Duty of Man, Pr. for the Peace of the Church.

2. To have recourse to: with the reciprocal pronoun.

The adverse party betaking itself to such practices as men embrace, when they behold things brought to desperate extremities.

Hooker.

Thou tyrant!

Do not repent these things; for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir: therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair.

Shakespeare.

The rest, in imitation, fo like arms
Betook them, and the neighbouring hills up tore.

Milton.

3. To apply: with the reciprocal pronoun.

With ease such fond chimeras we pursue,
As fancy frames for fancy to subdue;
But when ourselves to action we betake,
It shuns the mint, like gold that chymists make.

Dryden.

As my observations have been the light whereby I have steered my course, so I betake myself to them again.

Woodward.

4. To move; to remove. With the pronoun; understood in Spenser.

Then to her iron waggon she betakes,
And with her bears the foul well-flavour'd witch.

Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 28.

Soft she withdrew; and, like a wood nymph light,
Oread or Dryad, or of Delia's train,

Betook her to the groves

Milton, P. L.

They both betook them several ways;

Both to destroy.

Milton, P. L.

I observed to the windward of me a black cloud falling to the earth in long trails of rain, which made me betake myself for shelter to a house.

Tatler, No. 218.

* BETA'UGHT. † pret. of betake, in the sense of commit or entrust. [Sax. betachte.] Obsolete.

In Hope I wool comfortid be;

For Love when he betaught her me,

Said that Hope, where so I go,

Should aie be relesse to my wo. Chaucer, Rom. of the R. 4438.

That is, when Love committed or gave her to me.

* Spenser uses betake in the same way, omitting to.

Into those theevish dens he went,

And thence did all the spoyles and treasures take,—

Of which the best he did his Love betake. F. Q. vi. xi. 51.

That is, did give to his Love.

To BETE'EM. v. a. [from teem.] To bring forth; to bestow; to give.

So would I, said th' enchaunter, glad and fain

Beteem to you this sword, you to defend;—

But that this weapon's powre I well have kend,

To be contrary to the work that ye intend.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 19.

Rain, which I could well

Beteem them from the tempest of mine eyes.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

BETEL. † n. s. An Indian shrub, growing like a vine, of great celebrity in the East; the leaf of which long has been, and is to this day, highly prized by the natives and others. The betel-nut is the produce of a different tree. See BETLE.

Opium, coffee, the root of betel, tears of poppy, and tobacco, condense the spirits.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 312.

To BETHINK. † v. a. I bethought; I have bethought.
[Goth. bithagkan, Sax. bedencan, bedohē.] To recal to reflection; to bring back to consideration, or recollection. It is generally used with the reciprocal pronoun, and of before the subject of thought.

They were sooner in danger than they could almost bethink themselves of change.

Sidney.

I have bethought me of another fault.

Shakespeare.

I, better bethinking myself, and misliking his determination, gave him this order.

Raleigh.

He himself,

Insatiable of glory, had lost all:

Yet of another plea bethought him soon.

Milton, P. R.

The nets were laid, yet the birds could never bethink themselves, till hamper'd, and past recovery.

L'Estrange.

Cherippus, then in time yourself bethink,
And what your rags will yield by auction sink.

Dryden.

A little consideration may allay his heat, and make him be- think himself, whether this attempt be worth the venture.

Locke.

To BETHINK. † v. n. To consider.

Cease then, my tongue! and lend unto my mynd

Leave to bethinke how great that Beautie is,

Whose utmost parts so beautifull I find.

Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Beauty.

BE'THLEHEM. n. s. [See BEDLAM.] An hospital for lunatics.

BETHLEHEMITE. † n. s. [See BEDLAMITE.] A lunatick; an inhabitant of a madhouse; also one of an order of friars so called.

BETHOUGHT. particip. [from bethink; which see.]

To BETHRAL. v. a. [from thrall.] To enslave; to conquer; to bring into subjection.

Ne let that wicked woman 'scape away,

For she it is that did my lord bethral. Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 28.

To BETHUMP. v. a. [from thump.] To beat; to lay blows upon: a ludicrous word.

I was never so bethumpt with words,

Since first I call'd my brother's father dad.

Shakespeare.

To BETIDE. † v. a. pret. It betided, or betid; part.
pass. betid, and betight, [from tib, Sax. See TIDE.] Dr. Johnson had not noticed the active verb, but had given both the following definitions, with their examples, (excepting that which gives betight, and was unknown to him,) as belonging to the verb neuter.

1. To happen to; to befall; to bechance, whether good or bad: with the person.

Said he then to the palmer, reverend sire,

What great misfortune hath betid this knight? Spenser, F. Q.

But say, if our deliverer up to heav'n

Must re-ascend, what will betide the few,

His faithful, left among the unfaithful herd,

The enemies of truth?

Milton, P. L.

2. Sometimes it has to.

Neither know I,

What is betid to Cloten; but remain

Perplex'd in all.

Shakespeare.

Why wearie we the gods with plaintes,

As if some evill were to her betight?

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov. v. 174.

BETWEEN.† prep. [betwēonan, betwīnan, Saxon, from the original word twā, two, or twegen, twām.]

1. In the intermediate space.

What modes

Of smell the headlong lioness between,
And hound sagacious on the tainted green?

Pope.

2. From one to another; noting intercourse.

He should think himself unhappy, if things should go so between them, as he should not be able to acquit himself of ingratitude towards them both.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. Belonging to two in partnership.

I ask, whether Castor and Pollux, with only one soul between them, which thinks and perceives in one what the other is never conscious of, are not two distinct persons?

Locke.

4. Bearing relation to two.

If there be any discord or suits between them and any of the family, they are compounded and appeased.

Bacon, Atlantis.

Friendship requires, that it be between two at least; and there can be no friendship where there are not two friends.

South.

5. Noting difference, or distinction of one from the other.

Their natural constitutions put so wide a difference between some men, that art would never master.

Locke.

Children quickly distinguish between what is required of them, and what not.

Locke.

6. Between is properly used of two, and among of more; but perhaps this accuracy is not always preserved.

7. Between, as well as betwixt, is sometimes used to denote participation; as, the colour is between green and yellow.

BETWIXT.† prep. [betwīx, Saxon, from the Goth.
twos, two. It has the same signification with between, and is indifferently used for it.]

Five years since there was some speech of marriage

Betwixt myself and her.

Shakspeare.

BEVEL. } n. s. In masonry and joinery, a kind of BEVIL. } square, one leg of which is frequently crooked, according to the sweep of an arch or vault. It is moveable on a point or centre, and so may be set to any angle. An angle that is not square, is called a bevil angle, whether it be more obtuse, or more acute, than a right angle.

Builder's Dict.

Their houses are very ill built, their walls bevil, without one right angle in any apartment.

Suyl.

To BEVEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut to bevel angle.

These rabbits are ground square; but the rabbits on the groundsel are bevelled downwards, that rain may the freelier fall off.

Moxon.

BEVIL. See BEAVER.

BEVER.* n. s. [Ital. bevere, to drink. In the Prompt. Parv. bever is called drynkynge time, Lat.
biberium. Huloet, in his old dictionary, calls it
"a drinking, or potation." Others, "a drinking between dinner and supper." It is still used, among workmen, for their repast, between dinner and the time of ending work.] A collation or refreshment between meals.

Ar. What, at your beever, gallants?

Mr. Will't please your ladyship to drink? 'tis of the new fountain water.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's R.

The beever being ended, and the table-cloths taken away.

Shelton, Tr of D. Quirio, 1. 4. 11.

The French, as well men as women, besides dinner and supper, use breakfasts and bevers.

Moryson's Itinerary.

To BEVER.* v. n. [Ital. bevere.] To partake of a bever.

Your gallants never sup, breakfast, or bever without me, [appetite.]

Brewer's Lingua, ii. 1.

BEVERAGE.† n. s. [from bevere, to drink, Ital. or rather from the old Fr. beuvrage.]

1. Drink; liquor to be drunk in general.

I am his cupbearer;

If from me he have wholesome beverage,

Account me not your servant.

Shakspeare.

Grains, pulses, and all sorts of fruits, either bread or beverage, may be made almost of all.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,

Of wine and honey mix'd.

Dryden, Fob.

The coarse lean gravel on the mountain sides,

Scarce dewy beverage for the bees provides.

Dryden, Virg.

Beverage, or water cyder, is made by putting the mure into a fat, adding water, as you desire it stronger or smaller. The water should stand forty-eight hours on it, before you press it; when it is pressed, tun it up immediately.

Mortimer.

A treat upon wearing a new suit of clothes.

4. A treat at first coming into a prison, called also garnish.

BEVY.† n. s. [beva, Ital.]

1. A flock of birds.

They say, a bevy of larks, even as a covey of partridges, or an eye of pheasants.

E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal. April.

Bevy [is] a troop of ladies, quails, or of deer.

Cockerm.

2. A company; an assembly; Dr. Johnson says.
But it seems to be applied exclusively to the fair sex.

And in the midst thereof upon the floor,

A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,

Courted of many a jolly paramour.

Spenser, F. Q.

O, but to satisfy this bevy of ladies,

Of which a brace, here, long'd to bid you welcome.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

A bevy of young lasses.

Beaumont and Fl. Bloody Brother.

A heavenly bevy of sweet English dames.

Broune, Brit. Past. B. 2. S. 2.

A bevy of nimble Dryads.

Milton, Apol. for Suetymnus.

They on the plain

Long had not walk'd, when, from the tents, behold

A bevy of fair women.

Milton, P. L.

Nor rode the nymph alone,

Around a bevy of bright damsels shone.

Pope.

To BEWA'IL. v. a. [from wail.] To bemoan; to lament; to express sorrow for.

In this city he

Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,

Which to this hour bewail the injury.

Shakspeare.

Yet wiser Ennius gave command to all

His friends, not to bewail his funeral.

Sir J. Denham.

I cannot but bewail, as in their first principles, the miseries and calamities of our children.

Addison.

To BEWA'IL. v. n. To express grief.

Thy ambition,

Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land

Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law.

Shakspeare.

BEWA'ILABLE.* adj. [from bewail.] That which may be lamented.

Sherwood.

BEWA'ILING.* n. s. [from bewail.] Lamentation.

As if he had also heard the sorrowings and bewailings of every surviving soul.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

To BEWA'KE.* v. a. [from wake.] To keep awake.

I wote that night was well bewaked.

Gower, Conf. Arc. B. c

To BEWARE.† v. n. [from be and ware, or that is, cautious; thus, in an old treatise, I have found, be ye ware, Dr. Johnson says. He might have added, 2 Tim. iv. 15. "of whom be thou ware also." See WARY. [Sax. beþawan, beþamian; Germ. bewaren.]

1. To regard with caution; to be suspicious of danger from; generally the particle of goes before the thing which excites caution.

You must beware of drawing or painting clouds, winds and thunder, towards the bottom of your piece. Dryden.

Every one ought to be very careful to beware what he admits for a principle. Locke.

Warn'd by the sylph, oh, pious maid, beware!

This to disclose is all thy guardian can;

Beware of all, but most beware of man. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

2. It is observable, that it is only used in such forms of speech as admit the word be: thus we say, he may beware, let him beware, he will beware; but, not he did beware, or he has been ware. The following example from Ben Jonson, as Mr. Mason has also noticed, invalidates the preceding remark of Dr. Johnson.

These studies alter now in one, grown man:
His better'd mind seeks wealth and friendship; then Looks after honours, and bewares to act
What straightway he must labour to retract.

B. Jonson, Art of Poetry.

To BEWEEP.† v. a. [Sax. beþepan.] To weep over or upon; to bedew with tears.

Old fond eyes,
Beweept this cause again; I'll pluck ye out,
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Larded all with sweet flowers,
Which bewept to the grave did go,
With true love showers. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Lo! how my hurts afresh beweept this wanted wight.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 485.

To BEWEEP.* v. n. To weep; to make lamentation.

I do beweept to many simple gulls. Shakespeare, K. Rich. III.

To BEWET. v. a. [from wet.] To wet; to moisten; to bedew; to water.

His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks. Titus Andronicus.

To BEWHORE.* v. a. [from whore.]

1. To corrupt with regard to chastity.

Were your's the loss,
Had you a daughter, [and] perhaps bewhor'd,
(For to what other end would come the thief?)
You'd play the miller then, be loud, and high.
Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

2. To pronounce a whore.
Alas! Iago, my lord hath so bewhor'd her.
Shakespeare, Othello.

To BEWILDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose in pathless places; to confound for want of a plain road; to perplex; to entangle; to puzzle.

We parted thus; I homeward sped my way,
Bewild'rd in the wood till dawn of day. Dryden.

We no solution of our question find;
Your words bewilder, not direct the mind. Blackmore.

Our understanding traces 'em in vain,
Lost and bewild'rd in the fruitless search. Addison.

It is good sometimes to lose and bewilder ourselves in such studies. Watts.

To BEWINTER.* v. a. [from winter.] To make like winter.

Tears that bewinter all my year. Cowley.

B E W

To BEWITCH. v. a. [from witch.]

1. To injure by witchcraft, or fascination, or charms.

Look how I am bewitch'd, behold, mine arm
Is like a blasted sapling wither'd up. Shakespeare.

I have foresworn his company hourly this twenty years, and yet I am bewitch'd with the rogue's company. If the rascal has not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hang'd!
Shakespeare.

My flocks are free from love, yet look so thin;
What magick has bewitch'd the woolly daws,
And what ill eyes beheld the tender lambs? Dryden, Virg.

2. To charm; to please to such a degree, as to take away the power of resistance.

Doth even beauty beautify,
And most bewitch the wretched eye. Sidney, b. ii.

The charms of poetry our souls bewitch;
The curse of writing is an endless itch. Dryden, Juv.

I do not know, by the character that is given of her works, whether it is not for the benefit of mankind that they were lost; they were filled with such bewitching tenderness and rapture, that it might have been dangerous to have given them a reading. Addison, Spect. No. 223.

BEWITCHER.* n. s. [from bewitch.] One who enchants or bewitches.

Were it not that I should be a bar to those bewitchers of beauty, I would wish ladies to be niggards of their countenances to those who are prodigal of their words and profane praises. Stafford's Niobe dissolved into a Nilus, p. 117.

BEWITCHERY.† n. s. [from bewitch.] Fascination; charm; resistless prevalence.

There is a certain bewitchery, or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of. South, Sermon. li. 333.

The pinch of any present pain, or the bewitchery of some present pleasure. South, Sermon. vi. 327.

BEWITCHFUL.* adj. [from bewitch and full.] Alluring; bewitching.

There is, on the other side, ill more bewitchful to entice away. Milton, Lett.

BEWITCHING.* n. s. [from bewitch.] The act of bewitching.

BEWITCHINGLY.* adv. [from bewitch.] In an alluring manner.

All that time that his brains are turgid and full of this humour, he is wonderful eloquent, and bewitchingly taking. Hallywell's Account of Familism, p. 106.

BEWITCHMENT n. s. [from bewitch.] Fascination; power of charming.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Shakespeare.

BEWONDERED.* part. adj. [from wonder.] Amazed; filled with much wonder.

The other seeing his astonishment,
How he bewondered was. Fairfax, Tasso.

To BEWRAP.* v. a. [from wrap.] To cover over; to wrap round.

O wretched wight, bewrapt in webs of woe,
(That still in dread wast tost from place to place!
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 32.

His sword, that many a pagan stout had shent,
Bewrapt with flowers hung idly by his side. Fairfax, Tasso.

To BEWRAY.† v. a. [pægan, beppægan, Saxon.]

1. To betray; to discover perfidiously.

Fair feeling words he wisely 'gan display,
And, for her humour fitting purpose, fain
To tempt the cause itself for to bewray. Spenser, F. Q.

Hide the outcasts; bewray not him that wandereth. Isaiah, xvi. 3.

2. To shew; to make visible: this word is now little in use, Dr. Johnson says. But this is the original meaning of the word; and I confirm this simple usage of it by examples added to those given by Dr. Johnson.

She saw a pretty blush in Philodæa's cheeks bewray a modest discontentment. Sidney

Men do sometimes bewray that by deeds, which to count they are hardly drawn. Hooker, i. § 7.

Next look on him that seems for counsel fit, Whose silver locks bewray his store of days. Fairfax

Thy speech bewrayeth thee. S. Matt. xxvi. 73.

Look as a sweet rose fairly budding forth, Bewrays her beauties to the enamour'd mora. Brown, Shepherd's Pipe, Ecl. 4.

Bewra'YER. n. s. [from bewray.] Betrayer; diserverer; divulger.

When a friend is turned into an enemy, and a bewrayer of secrets, the world is just enough to accuse the perfidiousness of the friend. Addison, Spect. No. 225.

To Bewre'ck.* v. a. [from wreck.] Figuratively, from a wreck at sea, to ruin; to destroy.

It was I, or I parted thence, bewreckt. Mir. for Magistrates, p. 120.

Bewro'UGHT.* part. [from wrought.] Worked.

Their maids and their makes, At dancings and wakes, Had their napkins and posies, And the wipers for their noses, And their snooks all bewrought With his thread which they bought. B. Jonson, Masques.

Bey.* n. s. [Turkish, beg.] A governour of a Turkish province.

The several beglerbegs having under their jurisdiction many provinces, *bey*s, agas, and others. Rycaul.

BEYO'ND.† prep. [bezeonb, bezeonban, of be and zun, to go; of which, zeonb is the participle passive; corresponding with our beyond.]

1. Before; at a distance not yet reached.

What's fame? a fancy'd life in others' breath, A thing beyond us, ev'n before our death: Just what you hear, you have. Pope, Ess. on Man.

2. On the farther side of.

Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us? Deut. xxx. 13.

Now we are on land, we are but between death and life; for we are beyond the old world and the new. Bacon.

We cannot think men beyond sea will part with their money for nothing. Locke.

3. Farther onward than.

He that sees a dark and shady grove, Stays not, but looks beyond it on the sky. Herbert.

4. Past; out of the reach of.

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach Of mercy, if thou did'st this deed of death, Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Shakespeare, K. John.

Yet these declare Thy goodness beyond thought, and pow'r divine. Milton, P. J. The just, wise, and good God, neither does, nor can require of man any thing that is impossible, or naturally beyond his power to do. South.

Consider the situation of our earth; it is placed so conveniently, that plants flourish, and animals live; this is matter of fact, and beyond all dispute. Bentley.

5. Above; proceeding to a greater degree than.

Timotheus was a man both in power, riches, parentage, goodness, and love of his people, beyond any of the great men of my country. Sidney.

One thing, in this enormous accident, is, I must confess, to me beyond all wonder. Wotton.

To his expences, beyond his income, add debauchery, idleness, and quarrels amongst his servants, whereby his manufactures are disturbed, and his business neglected. Locke.

As far as they carry conviction to any man's understanding, my labour may be of use: beyond the evidence it carries with it, I advise him not to follow any man's interpretation. Locke.

6. Above in excellence.

His satires are incomparably beyond Juvenal's; if to laugh and rally, is to be preferred to railing and declaiming. Dryden.

7. Remote from; not within the sphere of.

With equal mind, while happens, let us bear; Nor joy, nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden, Fables.

8. To go beyond, is to deceive; to circumvent.

She made earnest benefit of his jest, forcing him to do her such services, as were both cumbersome and costly; while he still thought he went beyond her, because his heart did not commit the idolatry. Sidney.

That no man go beyond, and defraud, his brother in any matter. 1 Thess. iv. 6.

BEYO'ND.* adv. At a distance; yonder.

Lo! where beyond he lyeth languishing, Deadly engorged of a great wilde boar. Spenser, F. Q. vii. 38.

BEZANT, or BESANT.* n. s. [Fr. besant.] The current coin of old Byzantium, which was of gold. Wicliffe uses besant for a piece of silver, St. Luke, xv. 8. But see BIZANTINE. Also the heraldick term for a roundlet, and supposed to have been adopted as an armorial bearing by those who were in the holy war.

BE'ZEL.} n. s. That part of a ring in which the BE'ZIL. } stone is fixed.

BE'ZOAR. n. s. [from pa, against, and zahar, poison, Persick.] A medicinal stone, formerly in high esteem as an antidote, and brought from the East Indies, where it is said to be found in the dung of an animal of the goat kind, called pazan; the stone being formed in its belly, and growing to the size of an acorn, and sometimes to that of a pigeon's egg. The peculiar manner of its formation, is now supposed to be fabulous. The name of this stone is applied to several chymical compositions, designed for antidotes; as mineral, solar, and jovial bezours. Savary, and Chambers.

BEZO'RDICK.* adj. [from bezoar.] Composed of bezoar.

When the disease [the plague] was young, it was mitigated with rob of elder; with crabs eyes; spirits of hartshorn; theriac and vinegar; bezoardick vinegar. Student, ii. 344.

BEZO'RDICKS.† n. s. [from bezoar.] Medicines compounded with bezoar.

The bezoardicks are necessary to promote sweat, and drive forth the putrified particles. Flager.

To BE'ZZLE.* v. a. [old Fr. besler; beselé, besléez, embezzled, Kelham, Norm. Dict. This is the parent of our modern word embezzle, which Dr. Johnson strangely thinks to be a corruption of imbecil.] To waste in riot.

They that spend their youth in loitering, bezzling, and harloting. Milton, Animadr. Rem. Defence.

I have laid up a little for my younger son Michael, and thou think'st to bezzle that, but thou shalt never be able to do it. Braun, and Fl. Kn. of the Burn. Pestle.

That divine part is sok'd away in sin, In sensual lust, and midnight bezzling. Marston, Scourge of Villainy.

Time will come, When wonder of thy error will strike dumb Thy bezzl'd sense. Marston, Malcontent.

BIA'NGULATED.} adj. [from binus and angulus, Lat.] BIA'NGULOUS.} Having two corners or angles. Dict.

BI'AS.† n. s. [biais, Fr. said to come from bisay, an old Gaulish word, signifying cross, or thwart. Dr. Johnson says; but may it not, with as much probability, be referred to the Gr. βία, impetus?] 1. The weight lodged on one side of a bow, which turns it from the straight line.

Madam, we'll play at bowls—
 'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,
 And that my fortune runs against the bias. Shakespeare.
 2. Any thing which turns something to a particular course;
 or gives the direction to his measures.

You have been mistook;
 But nature to her bias drew in that. Shakespeare.

This is that boasted bias of thy mind,
 By which one way to dulness 'tis inclin'd. Dryden.
 Morality influences men's lives, and gives a bias to all their actions. Locke.

Vit and humour, that expose vice and folly, furnish useful lessons. Raillery under such regulations, unbends the mind from severer contemplations, without throwing it off from its proper bias. Addison, Frecholder.

This nature gives us, let it check our pride,
 The virtue nearest to our vice ally'd;
 Reason the bias turns to good or ill. Pope, Ess. on Man.

3. Propension; inclination.
 As for the religion of our poet, he seems to have some little bias towards the opinions of Wickliff. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

To Bias, v. a. [from the noun.] To incline to some side; to balance one way; to prejudice.

O powerful Love! which Heaven or Nature
 Writ in the heart of every creature!
 Whose amiable violence,
 And pleasing rapture of the sense,
 Doth bias all things to that good,
 Which we desire not understood.

Sir R. Phaulconbridge, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 40.
 Were I in no more danger to be misled by ignorance, than
 I am to be biased by interest, I might give a very perfect account. Locke.

A desire leaning to either side, biasses the judgement strangely; by indifference for every thing but truth, you will be excited to examine. Watts.

Bias, adv. It seems to be used adverbially in the following passage, conformably to the French, mettre une chose de biais, to give any thing a wrong interpretation.

Every action that hath gone before,
 Whereof we have record, trial did draw
 Bias and thwart, not answering the aim.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.

In the following passage it seems to be an adjective. Swelled, as the bowl on the biased side.
 This is not used.

Blow, villain, till thy spher'd bias cheek
 Outwell the colick of puff Aquilon.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.

Bias-drawing, n. s. [from bias and draw.] Partiality.

In this extant moment, faith and troth,
 Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,
 Bids thee, with most divine integrity,
 From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome!
Shakespeare, Tr. and Cressida.

Biasness, n. s. [from bias; old Fr. biaisance.] An inclination or tendency to some side. Sherwood.

Bib, n. s. [from bibere, to drink; because the bib doth receive the drink that the child slavers from the mouth, Minshew.] A small piece of linen put upon the breasts of children over their clothes.

We'll have a bib, for spoiling of your doublet.
Beaumont and Fl. The Captain.

I would fain know, why it should not be as noble a task, to write upon a bib and hanging-sleeves, as on the bullæ and pretextæ. Addison on Medals.

To BIB, v. n. [bibo, Lat.] To tipple; to sip; to drink frequently.

He playeth with bibbing mother Meroë, as though so named, because she would drink mere wine without water. Camden.
 To appease a froward child, they gave him drink as often as he cried; so that he was constantly bibbing, and drank more in two or four hours than I did. Locke.

BIBA'CIOUS, adj. [bibas, Lat.] Addicted to drinking. Dict.

BIBA'CITY, n. s. [bibacitas, Lat.] The quality of drinking much.

BIBBER, n. s. [from To bib, old Fr. bibéron.] A tippler; a man that drinks often.

Be not amongst wine-bibbers; amongst riotous eaters of flesh. Prov. xxiii. 30.

BIBBLE-BABBLER, n. s. [A low expression, adopted from babble, and yet used in some places.] Prating; idle talk.

Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bible-babble.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

BIBLE, n. s. [from βιβλίον, a book; called, by way of excellence, The Book.]

1. The sacred volume in which are contained the revelations of God.

If we pass from the apostolic to the next ages of the church, the primitive Christians looked on their Bibles as their most important treasure. Government of the Tongue.

We must take heed how we accustom ourselves to a slight and irreverent use of the name of God, and of the phrases and expressions of the holy Bible, which ought not to be applied upon every slight occasion. Tillotson.

In questions of natural religion, we should confirm and improve, or connect our reasonings by the divine assistance of the Bible. Watts.

2. Any great book. Obsolete. It is so used by Chaucer, and said by Mr. Tyrwhitt to be adopted from the French; but I am obliged to agree with Dr. Jamieson, in admitting that no such direct usage of the word offers itself.

To tellen all, wold passen any bible,
 That o wher is. Chaucer, Chan. Yconnaunces Tale.

All these armis that there yweren.
 That they thus on their cotis weren—
 Men might make of hem a bible.

Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 244.
 BIBLE-BEARING, n. s. [from bible and bear.] Carrying a bible; a very significant word to denote a hypocrite thus employing himself "to be seen of men."

A saint-seeming and bible-bearing hypocritical puritan.
Mountagu's Appeal to Caesar, p. 43.

BIBLICAL, n. s. [from bible.] Relating to the Bible.

To make a biblical version faithful and exact, so that it may represent the true text of the original in the best manner, is very different from giving it "a shewy and modernized" appearance. Abp. Newcome, Ess. on the Transl. of the Bible, p. 220.

Augustine and Jerome corresponded upon biblical subjects infinitely less important. Porson to Travis, p. 305.

BIBLIO'GRAPHER, n. s. [from βιβλίς, and γράφω, to write.] A man skilled in literary history, and in the knowledge of books; a transcriber. Dict.

BIBLIOGRA'PHICAL, n. s. [from bibliography.] Relating to the knowledge of books.

BIBLIO'GRAPHY, n. s. [Gr. βιβλίον and γράφω,
 Fr. bibliographie.] The science of a bibliographer;
 the knowledge of literary history.

BIBLIOMANIA, n. s. [Gr. βιβλίον and μανία, Fr.
bibliomanie.] The rage of possessing books; book-madness. The word, both in French and English, is modern; but the malady, if it may so be called,
 is increasing; and he who wishes to notice the gradations of this rage, in order that he may avoid admission into a literary bedlam, or may know how to manage, without a keeper, his "willing chains and sweet captivity," cannot do better than consult the Reverend Mr. Dibdin's treatise, entitled Bibliomania.

BIBLIOMANIAC. * n. s. [from Bibliomana.

French, determining not to be behind-hand with us in this contest for insanity, have also the modern substantive, bibliomane. V. Morin. Gr. and Fr. Dict. Etymolog.] He who is smitten with a rage for books.

BIBLIOPOLIST. * n. s. [Gr. βιβλίον and πωλείν, Fr. bibliopole.] A bookseller.

BIBLIOTHECAL. adj. [from bibliotheca, Lat.] Belonging to a library.

BIBLIOTHECARY. * n. s. [Gr. βιβλίον and θήκη, Fr. bibliothécaire.] A librarian. This is no modern word.

Master Doctor James, the incomparably industrious and learned bibliothecary of Oxford.

Bp. Hall's Honour of the Married Clergy, i. 28.

BIBLIOTHEKE. * n. s. [Fr. bibliothèque.] A library. This is a very old word in our language.

He [Alcuinus] much commendeth a bibliothèque or lybrary in Yorke. Bede's Concluse. Leland's Journey.

We being present, the king asking him how many thousand volumes he had gotten together in his bibliothèque; he answered, that for the present he had no more than two hundred thousand. Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, (1633) p. 26.

BIBULOUS. adj. [bibulus, Lat.] That which has the quality of drinking moisture; spongy.

Strow'd bibulous above, I see the sands,
The pebbly gravel next, and gutter'd rocks. Thomson, Autumn.

BICAPSULAR. adj. [bicapsularis, Lat.] Having the seed vessel divided into two parts.

BICE. n. s. The name of a colour used in painting. It is either green or blue.

Take green bice, and order it as you do your blue bice, you may diaper upon it with the water of deep green. Peacham.

BICIPITAL. } adj. [biceps, bicipitis, Lat.]

BICIPITOUS. } 1. Having two heads.

While men believe bicipitous conformation in any species, they admit a genijation of principal parts. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. It is applied to one of the muscles of the arm.

A piece of flesh it exchanged from the bicipital muscle of either party's arm. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO BICKER. † v. n. [bicre, Welsh, a contest.]

1. To skirmish; to fight without a set battle; to fight off and on. This is a very old Eng. verb, and is noticed in the Prompt. Parv. "bickerynge or fightinge, pugno, dimico."

Nor is it to be considered to the breaches of confederate nations, whose mutual interest is of such high consequence, though their merchants bicker in the East Indies.

Milton, of Ref. in Eng. b. 2.

2. To quiver; to play backward and forward.

Add from about him fierce effusion row'd
Of smoke, and bickering flame, and sparkles dire. Milton, P. L.
An icy gale, oft shifting, o'er the pool,
Breathes a blue film, and, in its mid career,
Arrests the bickering stream. Thomson, Winter.

BICKERER. * n. s. [from the verb.] A skirmisher.

Sherwood.

BICKERING. * n. s. [from bicker. This is an old Eng. substantive; two examples of which had been hitherto admitted among the illustrations of the verb.]

Quarrel; skirmish.

They fell to such a bickering that he got a halting, and lost his picture. Sidney.

B I D

After many bickings betwixt the English and Scottish, a truce first, and afterwards a peace was concluded betwixt our king and king James. * Is. Herbert, Hist. of Hen. VIII. p. 376.

In thy face

I see thy fury; if I longer stay,

We shall begin our ancient bickerings.

Shakespeare.

A champion, fitter for a troop of pigmies, to trail a reed in their bickerings with cranes, than to be committed with any reasonable or scholar-like antagonist.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, iii. 18.

The bickering was doubtful and intricate, part on the water, part on the sands; not without loss of some eminent men on the English side.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. b. 5.

Then was the war shiver'd, as it were, into small frays and bickerings.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. b. 2.

BICKERMENT. * n. s. [from bicker.] Quarrel.

Artogall, arriving happily,

Did stay awhile their greedy bickermment,

Till he had questioned the cause of their dissent.

Spenser, F. G. v. iv. 6.

BICKERN. n. s. [apparently corrupted from beakiron.]

An iron ending in a point.

A blacksmith's anvil is sometimes made with a pike or bickern, or beakiron, at one end. Moron.

BICORNE. } adj. [bicornis, Lat.] Having two

BICORNOUS. } horns.

We should be too critical, to question the letter Y, or bicornous element of Pythagoras; that is, the making of the horns equal. Broun, Vulg. Err.

BICORPORAL. adj. [bicorpor, Lat.] Having two bodies.

TO BID. † v. a. pret. I bid, bad, bade, I have bid, or bidden. [Goth. biudan, anabiudan, to bid, to command; biddan, Sax.]

1. To desire; to ask; to call; to invite.

I am bid forth to supper, Jessica;

There are my keys.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

Go ye into the highways, and, as many as you shall find, bid to the marriage.

Matth. xxii. 9.

We ought, when we are bidden to great feasts and meetings, to be prepared beforehand. Hakewill.

2. To command; to order: before things or persons.

Saint Withold footed thrice the world,

He met the nightmare, and her ninefold,

Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

He chid the sisters,

When first they put the name of king upon me,

And bade them speak to him.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Haste to the house of sleep, and bid the god,

Who rules the nightly visions with a nod,

Prepare a dream.

Dryden, Fables.

Curse on the tongue that bids this general joy.

—Can they be friends of Antony, who revel

When Antony's in danger?

Dryden, All for Love.

Thames heard the numbers, as he flow'd along,

And bade his willows learn the moving song.

Pope.

Acquire a government over your ideas, that they may come when they are called, and depart when they are bidden.

Watts.

3. To offer; to propose: as, to bid a price; [Dutch, bieden, to bid money for;] to promise.

• Come, and be true.—

—Thou bidst me to my loss: for true to thee

Were to prove false.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

When a man is resolute to keep his sins while he lives, and yet unwilling to relinquish all hope, he will embrace that profession which bids fairest to the reconciling those so distant interests.

Decay of Piety.

As when the goddesses came down of old,

With gifts their young Dardanian judge they try'd,

And each bade high to win him to their side.

Graville.

To give interest a share in friendship, is to sell it by inch of candle; he that bids most shall have it: and when it is mercenary, there is no depending on it. Collier on Friendship.

B I D

4. To proclaim; to offer; or to make known by some publick voice.

Our hands thrice bid, and so our wedding day
My kitchin bought them press'd, then forc'd away.

Gay, When ye call.

5. To pronounce, to declare.

You are retir'd

As if you were a feast alone, and not
The hostess of the meeting; pray you, bid
These unknown friends to's welcome.

Shakspeare.

Divers as we passed by them, put their arms a little abroad;
Which is their gesture when they bid any welcome.

Bacon.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, sore repuls'd,

Greet your arrival to this distant isle?

How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions?

A. Philips.

6. To renounce.

Myself and Oxford, with five thousand men,
Shall cross the seas; and bid false Edward battle.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

She bid war to all that durst supply

The place of those her cruelty made die.

Waller.

The native cannibal, oppress with chains,

Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;

Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,

He bids defiance to the gaping crowd,

And, spent at last, and speechless as he lies,

With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies.

Granville.

7. To pray. [Goth bida, prayer. See BEAD.]

If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. 2 St. John, 10.

When they desired him to tarry longer with them, he consented not, but bade them farewell.

Acts, xviii. 21.

8. To bid beads, is to distinguish each bead by a prayer.

By some haycock, or some shady thorn,

He bids his beads both even song and morn.

Dryden.

- BIDALE. n. s. [from bid and ale.] An invitation of friends to drink at a poor man's house, and there to contribute charity.

Dict.

- BIDDEN. part. pass. [from To bid.]

1. Invited.

There were two of our company bidden to a feast of the family.

Bacon.

Madam, the bidden guests are come.

A. Philips.

2. Commanded.

Thus these that early taint the female soul,

Instruct the eyes of young coquettes to roll,

Teach infants cheeks a bidden blush to know,

And little hearts to flutter at a beam.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

- BIDDER. † n. s. [Sax. biddeþ.] One who offers or proposes a price, Dr. Johnson says. But it formerly meant a commander, a prescriber of laws to others. V. Cotgrave and Sherwood.

He looked upon several dresses which hung there, exposed to the purchase of the best bidder.

Addison, Spect.

- BIDDING. † n. s. [from bid.]

1. Command; order.

How, sayst thou, that Macduff denies his person

Of great bidding?

Shakspeare, Macb.

At his second bidding, darkness fled,

Light shone, and order from disorder sprung.

Milton, P. L.

2. [In commercial language.] The proposal of price for what is to be sold.

- TO BIDE. † v. a. [Goth. beidan, Sax. bidan.] To endure; to suffer; commonly to abide.

Poor wretched wretches, wheresoe'er you are,

That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm.

Shakspeare.

The wary Dutch this gathering storm foresaw,

And durst not bide it on the English coast,

Dryden.

- TO BIDE. v. n.

1. To dwell; to live; to inhabit.

All knees to Thee shall bow of them that bide

In heaven, or earth, or under earth in hell,

Milton, P. L.

B I F

2. To remain in a place.

Safe in a ditch he bides,

With twenty trenched gashes on his head,

The long a death to nature.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To continue in a state.

And they also, if they bide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in.

Romans, xi. 23.

4. It has probably all the significations of the word abide; which see: but it being grown somewhat obsolete, the examples of its various meanings are not easily found.

- BIDENTAL. adj. [bidens, Lat.] Having two teeth.

All management of forks is not to be helped when they are only bidental.

Swift.

- BIDET. \ n. s.* [Fr.] Menage calls it a little bide, but says, the etymology is difficult to be found.

I will return to myself, mount my bide in a dance; and curvet upon my curtal.

B. Jonson, Masques.

- BIDING. n. s. [from bide.] Residence; habitation.

At Answerp has my constant biding been.

Pope.

- BIENNIAL. adj. [biennis, Lat.] Of the continuance of two years.

Then why should some be very long lived, others only annual or biennial?

Ray on the Creation.

- BIENNIALLY. \ adv.* [from biennial.] At the return of two years.

- BIER. † n. s. [from To bear, as scetrum, in Latin, from fero, Sax. bæpe, old Fr. biere, a coffin.] A carriage or frame of wood, on which the dead are carried to the grave.

And now the prey of fowls he lies,

Nor wail'd off friends, nor laid on groaning bier.

They bore him barefac'd on the bier,

And on his grave rain'd many a tear.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

He must not float upon his watery bier

Unwept.

Milton, Lycidas.

Griefs always green, a household still in tears:

Sad pomps, a threshold throng'd with daily biers,

And liveries of black.

Dryden, Juv.

Make as if you hanged yourself, they will convey your body out of prison in a bier.

Arbuthnot, John Bull.

- BIER-BALK. \ n. s.* [from bier and balk. See BALK.] The church-road for burials, along which the corpse is carried.

Where their ancestors left, of their land, a broad and sufficient bier-balk to carry the corps to the Christian sepulture;
how men pinch at such bier balks, which, by long use and custom, ought to be inviolably kept for that purpose.

Homilies, B. ii. 237.

- BRESTING. † n. s. [byrting, Sax. probably from beists, Goth. leaven, S. Mark, viii. 15.] The first milk given by a cow after calving, which is very thick.

Written also bestning, and besting. See BEST-

INGS.

So may the first of all our fells be thine,

And both the bestning of our goats and kine.

B. Jonson, Masques.

And twice besides, her biestings never fail

To store the dairy with a brimming pail.

Dryden.

- BIFID. } adj. [bifidus, Lat. a botanical term.]

- BIFIDATED. } Divided into two; split into two; opening with a cleft.

- BIFOLD. adj. [from binus, Lat. and fold.] Twofold; double.

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;

If souls guide vows, if vows are sanctimony,

If sanctimony be the gods' delight,

BIG

If there be rule in unity itself,
This is not she; O madness of discourse!
That cause sets up with and against herself.
Bifold authority. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.

BIFORM.* adj. [Lat. biformis, old Fr. biforme.] Having a double form.

From whose monstrous-teeming womb the earth
Received what much it mourn'd, a biform birth.
Crowall, Transl. of Ovid, Metam. 8.

BIFORMED.* adj. [biformis, Lat.] Compounded of two forms or bodies.

BIFORMITY.* n. s. [old Fr. biformité.] A double form; a twofold shape.

Strange things he spake of the biformity
Of the Dizolans; what mongrel sort
Of wights; how monstrous-shap'd they be;
And how that man and beast in one consort.
More, Song of the Soul, P. 8. C. 3. st. 70.

BIFRONTED.* adj. [Lat. bifrons.] Having two fronts.

Put a case of vizards o'er his head,
That he may look bifronted as he speaks.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 3.

BIFURCATED.* adj. [from binus, two, and furca, a fork, Lat.] Shooting out, by a division, into two heads.

A small white piece, bifurcated, or branching into two, and finely reticulated all over. Woodward.

BIFURCATION.* n. s. [old Fr. biforcation.] Division into two; opening into two parts.

The first cathechetical and fur derived similitude, it holds with man; that is, in a bifurcation, or division of the root into two parts. Bro. Vulg. Er.

BIG.* adj. [This word Junius derives from bayzic; Skinner from bug, which, in Danish, signifies the belly. Minshew says, it is contracted from the Dutch buycigh, i. e. great-bellied. "He looks very bug of it," i. e. big of it, is an old Eng. phrase. See Reym. Dict. 1691. V. BIG. "A bug fellow" is also a bold, sawey fellow. See Ray's Eng. Words.]

1. Having comparative bulk, greater or less.
A troubled ocean, to a man who sails in it, is, I think, the biggest object that he can see in motion. Spectator.

2. Great in bulk: large.
Both in addition and division, either of space or duration, when the idea under consideration becomes very big, or very small, its precise bulk becomes obscure and confused. Locke.

3. Teeming; pregnant; great with young: with the particle with.

A bear big with young hath seldom been seen. Bacon.
Lies on yonder swelling bush,
Big with many a common rose,
The early bud began to blush. Waller.

4. Sometimes with of, but rarely.

His gentle lady,
Big of this gentleman, our theme, deceas'd
As he was born. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

5. Without any particle.

Like a big at sight of loathsome meat
Ready to cast, I yawn, I sigh, and sweat.
Pope, Satire of Donne Versified.

6. Full of something; and desirous, or about, to give it vent.

The big th' important day,
Big with the big of Cato and of Rome. Addison.
Big with knowledge of approaching woes,
The prince of augurs, Malithres rose. Pope.

7. Distended; swollen; ready to burst: used often of the effects of passion, as grief, rage.

Thy heart is big; get thee apart and weep.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.

8. Great in air and mien; proud; swelling; tumid; haughty; early.

BIG

How else, said he, but with a good bold face,
And with big words, and with a stately pace?

Spenser, M. Hobb. Tale.
To the meanest man, or unknown in the court, seem somewhat solemn, coy, big, and dangerous of look, talk, and answer.

If you had looked big, and spit at him, he'd have said.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

In his prosperous season, he fell under the reproach of a man of big looks, and of a mean and abject spirit. Clari.

Or does the man i' th' moon look big,
Or wear a huger periwig,
Than our own native lunatics. Hudibras.

Of governments that once made such a noise, and looked so big in the eyes of mankind, as being founded upon the deepest counsels, and the strongest force; nothing remains of them but a name. South.

Thou thyself, thus insolent in state,
Art but perhaps some country magistrate,
Whose power extends no farther than to speak
Big on the bench, and scanty weights to break.

To grant big Thraso valour, Phornio sense,
Should indignation give, at least offence. Garth.

9. Great in spirit; lofty; brave.

What art thou? have not I
An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?
Thy words I grant, are bigger: for I wear not My dagger in my mouth. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

BIG.* n. s. A particular kind of barley; a common word in Yorkshire and Cumberland.

To BIG.* [Sax. byggan.] To build. See BIGGIN.

BIGAM.* n. s. [old Fr. bigame, Lat. bigamus, one twice married, Cotgrave. Lat. bis, and Gr. γᾰμῖν.]

Some parts thereof teach us ordinances of some apostle, as the law of bigamy, or St. Paul's ordaining, that a bigam should not be a deacon or priest.

Bp. Peacock, in the Life of him by Lewis, p. 226.
No bigami, that is, none that had been twice married, or such as married widows were capable of it, [the benefit of clergy,] because such could not receive orders.

Burnet, Hist. Reform. ii. 323.
BIGAMIST.* n. s. [bigamus, low Lat.] One that has committed bigamy. See BIGAMY.

By the papal canons, a clergyman, that has a wife, cannot have an ecclesiastical benefice; much less can a bigamist have such a benefice, according to that law.

And so it shall appear plainly, that their false god Vulcan is not very hard to unmask, that he was a mortal man, and one of the sons of the other Lamech, the prime bigamist and conqueror of marriage. Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 202.

BIGAMY.* n. s. [bigamia, low Lat.] See BIGAM.

1. The crime of having two wives at once.

Randal determined to commence a suit against Martin, for bigamy and incest. Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. [In the canon law.] The marriage of a second wife, or of a widow, or a woman already debauched; which, in the church of Rome, were considered as bringing a man under some incapacities for ecclesiastical offices.

We have spoken of bigamy or twice marrying, that they also are excluded from the ministerie, whiche have married a widow. Martin on the Marriage of Priests, 1554, sign. A. b.

3. The state of being twice married. Dr. Johnson had confounded the following passage of Shakespeare with the first definition of bigamy, where it means polygamy, a crime; when it here means only marrying either two virgins successively, or once marrying a widow. It is called "loathed bigamy" by the poet, because it was esteemed, and had been pronounced by a canon, infamous.

A beauty-waning and distressed widow—
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension and death's bigamy. Shakespeare, E. Rich. III.

B I G

The duke being in years, and without heir, hough as now unmarried, by his old wife's decease of late: but the Jesuits labour hard that he so remain, perswading him that bigamy is not so acceptable an estate to him.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

My nurse, for I had one, because I'm cold, Divoted herself, the cause being in me That I can take no new in bigamy. Dante's Poems, p. 172.

BELLYED.† adj. [from big and belly.] regnant; with child; great with young.

When we have laugh't to see the sails conceive,

Now bigbellied with the wanton wind. Shakspeare.

Children and bigbellied women require antidotes somewhat more grateful to the palate. Harvey.

So many well-shaped innocent virgins are blocked up, and waddle up and down like bigbellied women. Addison.

We pursued our march, to the terror of the market people, and the miscarriage of half a dozen bigbellied women. Addison.

2. Having a large belly, or protuberance.

Now shalt thou never see the salt beset

With a big-bellied gallon flagonnet. Bp. Hall's Satires, B. 6. S. 1.

He [William Rufus] was in stature somewhat below the usual size, and big-bellied. Swift, Hist. of Eng. Reign of W. II.

BIGBONED.* adj. [from big and bone.] Having large bones; stout; very strong.

Seven big-boned villains—armed with bloody minds and deadly bow-strings. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 180.

Big-bon'd, and large of limbs, with sinews strong.

Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

BIGCORNE.* adj. [from big and corn.] Having large grains.

The strength of big-corn'd powder.

Dryden, Ann Arab. st. 149.

BEGGIN.† n. s. [beguin, Fr. from the cap worn by the nuns, called Beguins, as some assert; though others think that the nuns were so called from wearing this kind of cap.]

1. A cap like one of those worn by children.

Sleep now!

Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,

As he, whose brow with homely beggin bound,

Snores out the watch of night. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

A beggin he had got about his brain,

For in his headpiece he felt a sore paine.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May, v. 241.

You that have been a courtier from the beggin to the night-cap. B. Jonson, Epicoene.

2. A building. [Sax. byrgan, to build, byggia; whence the old verb, to bigge, in Chaucer and Wicliffe.] This is yet a common word in the North of England: the town of Newbiggin signifies newbuilt or newbuilding.

BIGHT. n. s. It is explained by Skinner, the circumference of a coil of rope.

BIGLY. adv. [from big.] Tumidly; haughtily; with a blustering manner.

Would'st thou not rather choose a small renown,

To be the may'r of some poor paltry town

Than to look, and barbarously to peak;

To sound false weights, and scanty measures break? Dryden.

BIGNAMED.* adj. [from big and name.] Having a great or famous name.

Go, take physick; doat upon

Some big-nam'd composition;

The oraculous doctor's mystick bills,

Certain hard words made into pills. Crashaw's Poems, p. 108.

BIGNESS. n. s. [from big.]

1. Bulk; greatness of quantity.

Let panic be laid below, and about the bottom of a root,

I caime the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

was surprized at the bigness and uncouth deformity of the camel. L'Estrange's Fables.

greater or smaller, comparative

Several sorts of rays u the vibrations of several bignesses, which, according to their l bignesses, excite sensations of several colours; and the air, according to their bignesses, excites sensations of several sounds. Newton's Opticks.

BIGOT.† n. s. [The etymology of this word is unknown; but it is supposed, by Camden and others, to take its rise from some occasional phrase. Dr. Johnson says, Bullokar, in his old English Expositor, says, that "the word came into England out of Normandy, where it continued to this day in the sense of an hypocrite, and also a scrupulous or superstitious person." Cotgrave likewise gives bigot as an old Norman word, signifying as much as the French expression de par Dieu, and the English for God's sake; made good French, he adds, and meaning exactly what Bullokar has stated. Barbazan thinks it a corruption of Visigoth. Mr. Malone is of the same opinion, and produces the word by the process of Visigot, Bisigot, Bigot; the v and b being a common change in old French. It appears that Bigots mean a barbarous people, in an old French romance, cited by Roquefort in his Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. But Roquefort seems to side with those who pretend that the word is from the Germ. by Gott, i. e. by the Deity. It is to be traced, in my opinion, to the low Lat. begutta, one of the appellations of the nuns called beguins. V. du Cange in V. Beguini. The abbreviation into bigot is easy; and the application of devoted, which has been given to bigot, certainly belongs to the beguin. It looks as if Speght, the old editor of Chaucer, considered beguin and bigot as synonymous; for he explains them as superstitious hypocrites. Nor has Francis Thynne, in his remarks on Speght in 1599, disjoined these words, but has considered them together. See Illustr. of Gower and Chaucer, 1810, p. 42.] A man unreasonably devoted to a certain party; prejudiced in favour of certain opinions; a blind zealot. It is used often with to before the object of zeal; as, a bigot to the Cartesian tenets.

Who ever is so impertinent a bigot, as to find fault, when the hills and dyles of crooked and unequal bodies are made to meet without a miracle by some iron bodies, or some benighted bolsterings?

Bp. Taylor, Artific. Handsom, p. 60.

Religious spite, and pious spleen bred first

This quarrel, which so long the bigots nurse.

Tate.

In philosophy and religion, the bigots of all parties are generally the most positive. Watts.

BIGOR.* adj. [from the substantive.] Bigoted.

The same fortune once happened to Moliere, on the occasion of his Tartuffe, which notwithstanding afterwards has seen the light in a country more bigot than our's, and is accounted amongst the best pieces of that poet.

Dryden, B. of Lamberham.

BIGOTED.† adj. [old Fr. bigotté, from bigoter, to make superstitious. Cotgrave.] Blindly prepossessed in favour of something; irrationally zealous; with to.

Bigoted to this idol, we disclaim

Rest, health, and ease, for nothing but a name.

Garth.

Presbyterian merit, during the reign of that weak, bigoted, and ill-advised prince, will easily be computed.

Swift.

BI'GOTEDLY. * adv. [from bigoted.] In the manner of a bigot; pertinaciously; superstitiously.

BI'GOTRY. n. s. [from bigot.]

1. Blind zeal; prejudice; unreasonable in favour of party or opinions: with the particle too.

Were it not for a bigotry to our own tenets, we could hardly imagine, that so many absurd, wicked, and bloody principles, should pretend to support themselves by the gospel. Watts.

2. The practice or tenet of a bigot.

Our silence makes our adversaries think we persist in those bigotries, which all good and sensible men despise. Pope.

BI'GSOUNDING. * adj. [from big and sound.] Having a pompous sound.

Big-sounding sentences, and words of state.

Bp. Hall's Satires, B. I. S. 3.

BI'GSWOOLN. † adj. [from big and swoln.] Turgid; ready to burst.

Scarce can I refrain

The execution of my big-swoln heart

Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. III.

The big-swoln waves in the Iberian stream.

Drayton's Polyolhon, S. I.

Might my big-swoln heart

Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow. Addison, Cato.

BIG-UDDERED. adj. [from big and udder.] Having large udders; having dugs swelled with milk.

Now driv'n before him, through the arching rock,
Came, tumbling heaps on heaps, the unnumber'd flock,
Big-udder'd ewes, and goats of female kind. Pope, Odyssey.

BI'LANDER. n. s. [belandre, Fr.] A small vessel of about eighty tons burden, used for the carriage of goods. It is a d of hoy, manageable by four or five men, and has masts and sails after the manner of a hoy. They are used chiefly in Holland, as being particularly fit for the canals.

Saxary, and Trevoux.

Like bilanders to creep

Along the coast, and land in view to keep.

Dryden.

BI'LBERRY. † n. s. [from biliz, Sax. a bladder, and berry; according to Skinner; vitis idæa. Or from the St. blubær, a blackberry, or whortleberry.] A small shrub; and a sweet berry of that shrub: whortleberry.

Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap;

There pinch the maids as blue as bilberries. Shakspeare.

BI'LO. † n. s. [corrupted from Bilboa, where the best weapons are made.] A rapier; a sword.

To be compassed like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head. Shakspeare.

And in their country's right, at Cressy, those that stood,

And that at Poitiers bath'd their bilboes in French blood.

Drayton, Polyolhon, S. 16.

A bilboa-blade that bends

With every pass he makes.

Bacon, and F. Tamer lamed.

BI'LBOES. † n. s. A sort of stocks, or wooden shackles for the feet, used for punishing offenders at sea. Dr. Johnson might have added, that they are so called from being fabricated at Bilboa. Great quantities of them were shipped on board the Spanish Armada; and some of them are yet to be seen in the Tower of London.

Methought I lay,

Worse than the mutines in the bilboes.

Shakspeare.

BILBOQUET. * n. s. [Fr.] The toy called a cup and ball.

BILE. n. s. [bilis, Lat.] A thick, yellow, bitter liquor, separated in the liver, collected in the gall-bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum, or beginning of the jejunum, by the common duct. Its use is to soothe or blunt the acids of the chyle; because they, being entangled with its sulphure, thicken it so, that it cannot be sufficiently diluted by the succus pancreaticus, to enter the lacteal vessels.

In its progression, soon the labour d cl,
Receives the confluent rills of bitter bile;
Which, by the liver sever'd from the blood,
And striving through the gall pipe, here unload
Their yellow streams.

Black.

BILE. † n. s. [bile, Sax. a sore, perhaps from bile, Lat. This is generally spelt boil; but, I think, less properly, Dr. Johnson says. Our o tionaries it byle, and bile. See Huloet, et, &c.] A sore angry swelling.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;

Or, rather, a disease that's in my flesh;

Thou art a bile in my corrupted blood.

Shakspeare.

Those biles did run—say so—did not the genital run?
were not that a botchy sore?

Shakspeare.

A furunculus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension.

Albucian.

BILGE. n. s. The compass or breadth of a ship's bottom. See TO BULGE.

Skinner.

TO BILGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To spring a leak; to let in water, by striking upon a rock: a sea term; now bulge.

Skinner.

BI'LIARY. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Belonging to the bile. Voracious animals, and such as do not chew, have a great quantity of gall; and some of them have the bilary duct inserted into the pylorus.

Arbutnot.

BI'LINGS-GATE. n. s. [A cant word, borrowed from Bilingsgate in London, a place where there is always a crowd of low people, and frequent brawls and foul language.] Ribaldry; foul language.

There stript, fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground,

And shameful bilingsgate her robes adorn.

Pope, Dunciad.

BIL'INGUOUS. adj. [bilinguis, Lat.] Having, or speaking two tongues.

BI'LIOUS. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Consisting of bile; partaking of bile.

Why bilious juice a golden light puts on,

And floods of chyle in silver currents run.

Garth.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundancy of a bilious alkali.

Arbutnot.

BIL'VE. * adv. [In our old language.] The same as belive, which see.

TO BILK. † v. a. [derived by Lye and Srenius from the Gothick, bilaitan, which is from the old Goth. bila, to fail.] To cheat; to defraud, by running in debt, and avoiding payment.

Bilk'd stationers for yeomen stood prepar'd.

Dryden.

What comely, what farce can more delight,

Than grinning hunger, and the pleasing sight

Of your bilk'd hopes?

Dryden, Fab.

BILL. n. s. [bile, Sax. See BAIL.] The beak of a fowl.

Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and, with these they would cut an apple in two at one snap.

Coreau.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater or longer talons.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In his bill

An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign

Milton, P. L.

No crowing cock does there his wings display,

Nor with his horny bill provoke the day.

Dryden, Fab.

BILL. n. s. [bille, Sax. tribille, a two edged axe.] 1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a hedging bill; so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants arm'd, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the sickle, or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

2. A kind of weapon efficiently carried by the foot; a battle axe.

Yea distaff women manage rusty bills;
Against thy seat both young and old rebel. Shakespeare.

BILL. † n. s. [old Fr. billie.] Formerly all long writings, whether letters or not, were called bills; and shorter ones billets.]

3. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive
Particular addition from the bill
That writes them all alike. Shakespeare.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,
Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no? Shakespeare.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Atterbury to Pope.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras.
The medicine was prepar'd according to the bill. L'Estrange.
Let them, but under your superiours, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,
Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. [In law.] 1. An obligation, but without condition or forfeiture for nonpayment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong, that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or else some fault, that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress. Coxwell.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials encreased or decreased. Graunt.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill. Dryden.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the forementioned suppers. Arbuthnot.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

comfortable sentences are bills of exchange, upon the which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions. By Taylor, Rule of living holy.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid. Locke.

11. A bill of lading. An account of goods delivered on board a ship.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To caress, as doves by joining bills, to be fond.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their murmuring. Ben Johnson, Cataline.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
Like Philip and Mary on a shilling. Hudibras.

They bill, they tread; Alevone compress'd,
Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest. Dryden.

He that bears th' artillery of Jove,
The strong pounce'd eagle, and the billing dove. Dryden.

- To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

His masterpiece was a composition that he billed about under the name of a sovereign antidote. L'Estrange.

BILLET. n. s. [billet, French.]

1. A small paper; a note.

When he found this little billet, in which was only written Remember Caesar, he was exceedingly confounded. Clarendon.

2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.

3. Billet doux, or a soft billet; a love letter.

'Twas then, Belinda! if report say true,
Thy eyes first open'd on a billet doux. Pope.

4. [Bilot, Fr.] A small log of wood for the chimney. Let us then calculate, when the bulk of a fagot or billet is dilated and rarified to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up. Digby on Bodies.

Thy billet at the fire was found. Prior

To BILLET. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.

Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:
Away, I say. Shakespeare, Othello.

2. To quarter soldiers, or to lodge other persons.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting soldiers. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Some thousands of the Irish papists were in several parts billeted upon us. Milton's Euconoclastes, ch. 10.

The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billeted upon them. Clarendon.

3. Simply, to dispose; to lodge.

The violence of the storm on St John's night threw down the battlements over the room where your Grace's Manuscripts are billeted, but did no more hurt. Land, (Letter to him) ii. 183.

BILLIARDS. † n. s. Without a singular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from balyards, yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser: "Balyards much unfit, and shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit," M. Hubbard's Tale. Such is Dr. Johnson's observation on this word. But his remark on the Fr. etymology, in the first place, is erroneous; for billard is from bille, a ball, just as campagnard is from campagne, and as many more French words are formed. In this determination Mr. Malone agrees with me. Balyard, in the next place, is not the genuine reading of Spenser; it is balliards, as Burton and other old authors write the word; and therefore the application of yard is forced. See BALLIARDS.] A game at which a ball is forced against another on a table.

Let it alone; let's to balliards. Shakespeare.

Even nose and cheek, withal,
Smooth as is the billiard ball. B. Janson, Underwoods.

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table.
When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion.
B'LLION. * n. s. [Fr.] A million of millions.

B'LLOW. † n. s. [bilge, Germ. bolz, Dan. probably of the same original with blitz, Sax. a bladder; which is the Goth. balgs.] A wave swoln, and hollow.

From whence the river Dee, as silver cleeen,
His tumbling billows roll with gentle rore.
Spenser, F. Q.
Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them.
Wotton.

Chasing Nereus with his trident throws
The billows from the bottom.
Denham.

But when loud billows lash the sounding shore,
The hoarse rough verse should like the torrent roar.
Pope.

To B'LLOW. † v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the show'r,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour.
Prior.

B'LLOW-BEATEN. * adj. [from billow and beat.] Tossed by billows: a fine and forcible compound.

He, — sitting in his own sublimed height,
Surveys and weighs the billow-beaten fate
Of towering statists.

*Jordan's Divinity and Morality in Poetry, * 3. b.*

B'LLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.

And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam.
Thomson, Spring.

B'LLMAN. * n. s. [from bill and man.] He who uses a bill: Huloet calls the bill-man "a mower."
Formerly applied to troops carrying this weapon.
See BILL.

In rush'd his bilmen.
Mr. for Magistrates, p. 427.

BIN. * Used in our old language for BE and BEEN.
Been, ben, bin. See BEEN.

BIN. n. s. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is reposit.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin.
Mortimer.

As when from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot sallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout.
Swift.

BINARY. † adj. [old Fr. binair, from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

BINARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago.
Chambers.

BINARY. * s. The constitution of two.

To make two, or a binary, which is the first number, add but one unto one.
Petherby's Althcomastix, p. 307.

In nature are two supreme principles,
As namely, unity and binary.

Davies, Wilkes Pilgrimage, G. 4. b.
The union of the passive and active principle in the creation of this material heaven, is the second day's work; and the binary denotes the nature thereof. More, Conject. Cabal. p. 26.

To BIND. † v. a. pret. I bound; particip. pass. bound, or bounden, [bindan, Goth. bindan, Sax.]

I. To confine with bonds; to enchain.

Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?
Job, xli. 5.

2. To gird; to enwrap; to involve.

Who hath bound the waters in a garment? Proverbs, xxx. 4.

3. To fasten to any thing; to fix by circumsolution.

Thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window, which thou didst let us down by.
Joshua, ii. 18.

Keep my commandments, and live; and my law, as the apple of thine eye. Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart.
Proverbs, vii. 3. 4.

4. To fasten together.

Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles, to burn them.
St. Matthew, xiii. 20.

5. To connect closely or inseparably.

His life is bound up in the lad's life.
Gen. xlv. 30.

6. To cover a wound with dressings and bandages:

with up.

When he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds.
St. Luke, x. 34.

Having filled up the bared cranium with our dressings, we bound up the wound.
Wise man.

7. To oblige by stipulation, or oath.

If a man vow a vow, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word.
Numbers, xxx. 2.

Swear by the solemn oath, that binds the gods.
Pope.

8. To oblige by duty or law; to compel; to constrain.

Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that, all slaves are free to.
Shakespeare.

Duties expressly required in the plain language of Scripture, ought to bind our consciences more than those which are but dubiously inferred.
Watke.

9. To oblige by kindness.

10. To confine; to hinder: with in, if the restraint be local; with up, if it relate to thought or act.

Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To sancy doubts and fears.
Shakespeare.

You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying.
Baron.

Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off.
Locke.

In such a dismal place
Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers,
Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps.
Dryden.

11. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to make costive.

Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrary operations; parts that purge, and parts that bind the body.
Baron.

The whey of milk doth loose, the milk doth bind.
Herbert.

12. To restrain.

The more we are bound up to an exact narration, we want more life, and fire, to animate and inform the story.
Fellon.

13. To bind a book. To put it in a cover.

Was ever book, containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound?
Shakespeare.

Those who could never read the grammar,

When my dear volumes touch the hammer,

May think books best, as richest bound.
Prior.

14. To bind to. To oblige to serve some one.

If still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave.
Dryden.

15. To bind to. To contract with any body.

Art thou bound to a wife, seek not to be loosed. 1 Cor. vii. 27.

16. To bind over. To oblige to make appearance.

Sir Roger was staggered with the reports concerning this woman, and would have bound her over to the county sessions.

Addison, Spect.

To BIND. † v. n.

1. To contract its own parts together; to grow stiff and hard.

If the land rise full of clots, and if it is a binding land, you must make it fine by harrowing of it.
Mortimer.

2. To make ostive.
3. To be obligatory.

Those canons, or imperial constitutions, which have not been received here, do not bind. Hale.

The promises and bargains for truck, between a Swiss and an Indian, in the woods of America, are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another. Locke.

BRND.† n. s. A species of hops, Dr. Johnson says. But it means originally the stem of the hop, which is so called from being, in its growing state, bound loosely to the pole with withered rushes, in order to assist its climbing up it. Two or three binds are reckoned sufficient for one pole.

The two best sorts are the white and the grey bind; the latter is a large square hop, and more hardy. Montmer.

BRINDER.† n. s. [from To bind.]

1. A man whose trade it is to bind books.

2. A man that binds sheaves.

Three binders stood, and took the handfuls reapt
From boys that gather'd quickly up. Chapman.

A man, with a brinder, may reap an acre of wheat in a day, if it stand well. Montmer.

3. A fillet; a shred cut to bind with.

A double cloth, of such length and breadth as might serve to encompass the fractured member, I cut from each end to the middle, into three binders. Wise-man.

4. An astringent.

Ale is their eating and their drinking surely, which keeps their bodies clear and soluble; Bread is a brinder; and, for that, abolished even in their ale. Beacon, and Th. Scornful Lady.

BRINDING.† n. s. [from bind.]

1. A bandage.

This beloved young woman began to take off the banding on his eyes. Toller, No. 53.

2. The cover of a book.

They presented him with divers skins, of parchment, exceeding fine, smooth, and delicate, bound to one so the other, by a binding that was rare and excellent.

Doane, Hist of the Septuagint, p. III.

BRINDWEED. n. s. [convolvulus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

Bindweed is the larger and the smaller; the first sort flowers in September, and the last in June and July. Montmer.

BRINOULE. n. s. [from binus and oculus.] A kind of dioptrick telescope, fitted so with two tubes joining together in one, as that a distant object may be seen with both eyes together. Harris.

BRINOCULAR.† adj. [from binus and oculus, Lat.]

1. Having two eyes.

Most animals are binocular, spiders for the most part octonocular, and some scenocular. Derham.

2. Employing both eyes at once.

When we look at an object with a binocular telescope, we see it single. Reid's Inquiry.

BINO'MIAL Root. [in algebra.] A root composed of only two parts connected with the signs plus or minus. Harris.

BINO'MINOUS. adj. [from binus and nomen, Lat.] Having two names.

BIO'GRAPHER.† n. s. [Fr. biographic, from Gr. βίος and γραφω.] A writer of lives; a relater not of the history of nations, but of the actions of particular persons.

Our Grub-street Biographers watch for the death of a great man, like so many undertakers, on purpose to make a penny. Addison, Freeholder.

BIOGRAPHICAL.* adj. [from biography. No word of this family perhaps is more than a century old.] Relating to biography.

It is impossible that soliloquies of such prolixity, and designed to include much historical and even biographical matter, should every where sustain a proper degree of spirit, pathos, and interest. Watson, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 256.

BIOGRAPHY.† n. s. [Fr. biographie, from βίος and γραφω.]

In writing the lives of men, which is called biography, some authors place every thing in the precise order of time when it occurred. Watts.

BI'OVAC.† } n. s. [Fr. from veyrucht, a double guard,
BI'HOVAC. } German, of which it is a corruption; or
BI'VOUAC. } from the Lat. bis, twice, and vach, Germ. a guard.] A guard at night performed by the whole army; which either at a siege or lying before an enemy, every evening draws out from its tents or huts, and continues all night in arms. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. The warfare of recent times has often given occasion for the use of this word, or of the verb bivouac; as, the enemy bivouached in front of our camp.

BI'PAROUS. adj. [from binus and pario, Lat.] Bringing forth two at a birth.

BI'PARTITE.† adj. [from binus and partior, Lat.] Having two correspondent parts: divided into two.

That's a remarkable instance in Senertus, of a monster born at Emmians with two hearts, and two heads; the diversity of whose appetites, perceptions, and affections, testified that it had two souls within that bipartite habitation.

Glaucide, Pre-est. of Souls, ch. 2.

His [Alexander's] empire was bipartite into Asia and Syria.

Chambers, Poetical, p. 159.

BIPARTITION. n. s. [from bipartite.] The act of dividing into two; or of making two correspondent parts.

BI'PED.† n. s. [bipede, Fr. bipes, Lat.] An animal with two feet.

No serpent, or fishes oviparous, have any stones at all; neither biped nor quadruped oviparous have any exteriorly. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BI'PEDAL. adj. [bipedalis, Lat.] Two feet in length; or having two feet.

BIPE'NNATED. adj. [from binus and penna, Lat.] Having two wings.

All bipennated insects have poises joined to the body. Derham.

BIPE'TALOUS. adj. [of bis, Lat. and κλάσος.] Consisting of two flower leaves. Dict.

BI'QUADRATE. } n. s. [In algebra.] The fourth
BQUADRA'TICK. } power, arising from the multiplication of a square number or quantity by itself.

Harris.

BI'QUADRA'TICK.* adj. Relating to the fourth power in algebra.

Thus a biquadratic equation may be formed, whereby the point h shall be found, and thence the point D, whose distance from A is to h e as the excentricity of the earth's orbit to half its axis. Philos. Trans. llii. 528.

BIRCH Tree. [birc, Sax. betula, Lat.] The leaves are like those of the poplar; the shoots are very slender and weak; the katkins are produced at remote distances from the fruits, on the same tree; the fruit becomes a little squamose cone; the seeds are winged, and the tree casts its outer rind every year. Miller.

BIRCH WINE.* n. s. Wine made of the vernal juice of birch; once in great repute.

She boasts no charms divine,
Yet she can carve and make birch wine.

T. Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

BIRCHEN.† adj. [Sax. bircene.] Made of birch.

By this hand, I'll cry brooms in, birchen brooms.

Bacon, and Fl. Loyal Subject.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears.

Pope.

BIRD. n. s. [byrd, or byub, a chicken, Saxon.] A general term for the feathered kind; a fowl. In common talk, fowl is used for the larger, and bird for the smaller kind of feathered animals.

The poor wretch,

The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.

Shakspeare.

Sh' had all the regal makings of a queen;

As holy oil, Edward confessor's crown,

The rod and bird of peace, and all such emblems,

Laid nobly on her.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,

Two birds of gayest plume before him drove.

Milton, P. L.

Hence men and beasts the breath of life obtain,

And birds of air, and monsters of the main.

Dryden.

There are some birds that are inhabitants of the water, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish days.

Locke.

TO BIRD. v. n. [from the noun.] To catch birds.

I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house, to breakfast; after we'll bird together.

Shakspeare.

BIRDBOLT.† n. s. [from bird and bolt, or arrows.] An arrow, having a ball of wood at the end of it, and sometimes an iron point projecting before the ball, formerly used for shooting at birds.

To be generous and of free disposition, is to take those things for birdbolt, that you deem cannon bullets.

Shakspeare.

BIRDCAGE. n. s. [from bird and cage.] An enclosure with interstitial spaces made of wire or wicker in which birds are kept.

Birds caught him the pulley, and tops the centrifugal force.

L'Estrange.

BIRDER.† n. s. [from bird.] A birdcatcher.

Minshew.

BIRD-EYE.* adj. [from bird and eye.] A word often applied to pictures of places; as, a bird-eye view of them, that is, seen from above, as by a bird.

Viewing from the Pegasus of his pulpit the free, moral, happy, flourishing, and glorious state of France, as in a bird-eye landscape of a promised land, he [Dr. Price] breaks out into the following rapture.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

BIRD-EYED.* adj. [from bird and eye.] Having, as it were, the eye of a bird; quick.

'Slud, 'tis the horse-start out o' the brown study—

Rather the bird-ey'd stroke, Sir.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Rebels.

BIRD-FANCY.* n. s. [from bird and fancy.] One who delights in birds.

BIRDING-PIECE. n. s. [from bird and piece.] A fowling piece; a gun to shoot birds with.

I'll creep up into the chimney.—There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces; creep into the kill hole.

Shakspeare.

BIRDLIKE.* adj. [from bird and like.] Resembling a bird.

For when I see, how they do mount on high,
Waving their out-stretch'd wings at liberty;
Then do I think, how bird-like in a cage
My life I lead, and wish I can never escape.

Nichols, Misc. for Magistrates, p. 655.

BIRDLIME. n. s. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous substance, which is spread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are ensnared.

Birdlime is made of the bark of holly; they pound it into a tough paste, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is washed in a running stream, till no notes appear, and put up to ferment, and scummed, and then laid up for use; at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut oil, over the fire. But the bark of our lantern, or way-faring shrub, will make very good birdlime.

Chambers.

Holly is of so viscous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

With stores of gather'd glue, contrive
To stop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or Idem pitch produce
A more tenacious mass of clammy juice.

Dryden.

I'm ensnar'd;

Heaven's birdlime wrap me round, and glues my wings.

Dryden.

The woodpecker, and other birds of this kind, because they prey upon flies which they catch with their tongue, have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, as if it were a natural birdlime, or liquid glue.

Grew.

BIRDLIMED.* adj. [from birdlime.] Figuratively, spread to ensnare.

I love not those "viscosa beneficia," those birdlimed kindnesses, which Pliny speaks of.

Hopell, Letters, i. v. 18.

BIRDMAN. n. s. [from bird and man.] A birdcatcher; a fowler.

As a fowler was bending his net, a blackbird asked him what he was doing; why, says he, I am laying the foundations of a city; and so the birdman drew out of sight.

BIRTH.† n. s. [beorn, Sax. from bepan, to bear. The Icelandick byrthur is, in like manner, from bera. It is pronounced, in some places, as if written beareth.]

1. The act of coming into life.

But thou art fair and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great.

Shakspeare, King John.

In Spain, our springs like old men's children be,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth.

Dryden.

2. Extraction; lineage.

Most virtuous virgin, born of heavenly birth.

Spenser, F. Q.

All truth I shall relate; nor first can I

Myself to be of Grecian birth deny.

Denham.

3. Rank which is inherited by descent.

He doth object, I am too great of birth.

Shakspeare.

B I R

- Be just in all you say, and all you do;
 Whoever be your birth, you're sure to be
 A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.
4. The condition or circumstances in which any man is born.
 High in his chariot then Hales came,
 A foe by birth to Troy's unhappy name. Dryden.
5. Thing born; production; used of vegetables, as well as animals.
 The people fear me; for they do observe
 Unfather'd heirs and loathly births of nature. Shakspeare.
 That poets are far rarer births than kings,
 Your noblest father prov'd. B. Jonson, Epigrams.
 Who of themselves
 Abhor to join: and, by imprudence mix'd,
 Produce prodigious births of body or mind. Milton, P. L.
 She, for this many thousand years,
 Seems to have practis'd with much care,
 To frame the race of woman fair;
 Yet never could a perfect birth.
 Produce before, to grace the earth. Wallr.
 His eldest birth
 Flies, mark'd by heaven, a fugitive o'er earth. Prior.
 The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,
 And wealthy births, confess the flood's embrace. Blackmore.
 Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.
6. The act of bringing forth.
 That fair Syrian shepherdess,
 Who after years of barrenness,
 The highly favour'd Joseph bore
 To him that serv'd for her before;
 And at her next birth, much like thee,
 Through pangs fled to felicity. Milton, Ode.
7. The ~~seamen~~ call a due or proper distance between ships lying at an anchor, or under sail, a birth. Also the proper place aboard for the mess to put their chests, &c. is called the birth of that mess. Also a convenient place to moor a ship in, is called a birth. Harris.
- BIRTHDAY. n. s. [from birth and day.]
 1. The day on which any one is born.
 Orient light,
 Exhaling first from darkness, they beheld
 Birthday of heaven and earth. Milton, P. L.
 2. The day of the year in which any one was born, annually observed.
 This is my birthday; as this very day
 Was Cassius born. Shakspeare.
 They tell me, 'tis my birthday, and I'll keep it
 With double pomp of sadness:
 'Tis what the day deserves, which gave me breath. Dryden.
 Your country dames,
 Whose cloaths returning birthday claims. Prior.
- BIRTHDOM. n. s. [This is erroneously, I think, printed in Shakspeare, birthdoom. It is derived from birth and dom. See DOM; as kingdom, dukedom.] Privilege of birth.
 Let us rather
 Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men,
 Bestride our downfaln birthdom. Shakspeare.
- BIRTHNIGHT. n. s. [from birth and night.]
 1. The night on which any one is born.
 The angelick song in Bethlehem field,
 On thy birthnight, that sung the Saviour born. Milton, P. R.
 2. The night annually kept in memory of any one's birth.
 A youth more glittering than a birthnight beau. Pope.
- BIRTHPLACE. n. s. [from birth and place.] Place where any one is born.
 My birthplace huge I, and my love's upon
 This enemy's town. Shakspeare.

B I S

- A degree of stupidity beyond even what we have been charged with, upon the score of our birthplace and climate. Swift.
- BIRTHRIGHT. n. s. [from birth and right.] The rights and privileges to which a man is born; the right of the first born.
 Thy blood and virtue
 Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness
 Shakes with thy birthright. Shakspeare.
 Thou hast been found
 By merit, more than birthright, Son of God. Milton.
 I lov'd her first, I cannot quit the claim,
 But will preserve the birthright of my passion. Olway.
 While no baseness in this breast I find,
 I have not lost the birthright of my mind. Dryden.
 To say, that liberty and property are the birthright of the English nation, but that if a prince invades them by illegal methods, we must upon no pretence resist, is to confound governments. Addison.
- BIRTHSONG. n. s. [from birth and song.] A song sung at the nativity of a person.
 An host of heavenly quisters do sing
 A joyfull birth-song to heaven's late-born king. Fitz-geffry, Blessed Birthday, (1634) p. 45.

- BISEGMENT. n. s. [from bis and segment.] One of the parts of a line divided into two equal halves. Dict.
- BISHOP. n. s. [from episcopus, Lat. the Saxons formed biscop, which was afterwards softened into bishop.] One of the head order of the clergy.
 A bishop is an overseer, or superintendent, of religious matters in the Christian church. Ayliffe, Parerg.
 You shall find him well accompany'd
 With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops. Shakspeare.
 Their zealous superstition thinks, or pretends, they cannot do God a greater service than to destroy the primitive, apostolical, and anciently universal government of the church by bishops. K. Charles.
 In case a bishop should commit treason and felony, and forfeit his estate with his life, the lands of his bishoprick remain still in the church. South.

On the word bishop, in French evêque, I would observe, that there is no natural connexion between the sacred office, and the letters or sound; for evêque, and bishop, signify the same office, though there is not one letter alike in them. Watts, Log.

Bi'shop. n. s. A cant word for a mixture of wine, oranges, and sugar.

Fine oranges.

Well roasted, with sugar and wine in a cup,
They'll make a sweet bishop when gentle folks sup. Swift.

To Bi'shop. v. a. [Sax. biscepod, confirmed by the bishop.] To confirm; to admit solemnly into the church.

They are prophane, imperfect, oh! too bad,
To be counted children of poetry.

Except confirm'd and bishoped by thee. Donne, Poems, p. 172.

Bi'shoplike.* adj. [from bishop.] Both old words
Bi'shoply. adj. in our language.] Belonging to or becoming a bishop.

He had nothing directly to prove that Peter did excel the other apostles in bishoplike authority. Fulke's Retentive, p. 249.

To you I commit this business, that both by bishoply censure, and kingly authority, filthy lives may be cast out of the church. Weever, Fun. Monuments.

Bi'shoprick. n. s. [biscoprice, Saxon; literally, as Mr. Malone also observes, the kingdom of a bishop; the Sax. puce signifying a kingdom.] The appurtenances of a bishop are all of princely denomination; his diocese is his kingdom; his mansion, his palace; his seat his throne; and he has also his chancellor.] The diocese of a bishop; the district over which the jurisdiction of a bishop extends.

It will be fit, that, by the king's supreme power in causes ecclesiastical, they be subordinate under some bishop, and bishoprick of this realm. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

A virtuous woman should reject marriage, as a good man does a bishoprick; but I would advise neither to persist in refusing. Addison, Spectator.

Those pastors had episcopal ordination, possessed preferments in the church, and were sometimes promoted to bishopricks themselves. Swift, Sent. of a Ch. of Eng. Man.

Bi'shopsweed. n. s. [ammi, Lat.] The name of a plant,

Bi'shopswort.* n. s. [Sax. biscep-pýrt.] The name of a plant.

Bisk. n. s. [bisque, Fr.] Soup; broth made by boiling several sorts of flesh.

A prince, who in a forest rides astray,

And, weary, to some cottage finds the way,

Talks of no pyramids, or towers, or bisks of fish,

But hungry sips his cream serv'd up in earthen dish. King.

Bi'sket. See Biscuit.

Bi'smuth. n. s. The same as marcasite; a hard, white, brittle, mineral substance, of a metalline nature, found at Misnia; supposed to be a recrementitious matter thrown off in the formation of tin. Some esteem it a metal sui generis; though it usually contains some silver. There is an artificial bismuth made, for the shops, of tin. Quincy.

Bi'son.* n. s. [Fr. bison, Gr. βίσων.] The bison; a kind of hulk-backt, rough-maned, broad-faced, and great-eyed, wild ox; that will not be taken as long as he can stand, nor be tamed after he is taken.

Cotgrave.

The bison seems to be inaccurately placed for the pygarg, in the margin of the Bible, Deut. xiv. 5.

Bissextile. n. s. [from bis, and sextilis, Lat.] Leap year; the year in which the year, arising from six odd hours in each year, is intercalated.

The year of the sun consisteth of three hundred and sixty-five days and six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted, will, in time, deprave the compute; and this was the occasion of bissextile, or leap year. Brown.

Towards the latter end of February is the bissextile or intercalary day; called bissextile, because the sixth of the calends of March is twice repeated. Holder on Time.

Bi'sson. adj. [derived by Skinner from by, for besides, and Teut. sinn, sight. In our old lexicography, it is beasom. "Blind or beasom-born, coecigenus." Huloet. So it is, in the old copies of Shakspeare, "beasom conspicuities." Coriolanus; which Theobald changed to bisson; for which other commentators also rightly contend. For though beezen, or beesen is still in use, in some parts of the North of England, for blind; it is only a corruption of the Sax. byen, blind, which however they have not noticed.] Blind.

Buc who, oh! who hath seen the mobled queen,
Run barefoot up and down, threatening the flames

With bisson rheum? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

What harm can your bisson conspectuities glean out of this character? Shakspeare, Coriol.

Bi'stre. n. s. [French.] A colour made of chimney soot boiled, and then diluted with water; used by painters in washing their designs. Trevour.

Bi'stort. n. s. [bistorta, Lat.] The name of a plant called also snakeroot; which see.

Bi'stoury. n. s. [bistouri, Fr.] A surgeon's instrument, used in making incisions, of which there are three sorts; the blade of the first turns like that of a lancet; but the straight bistoury has the blade fixed in the handle; the crooked bistoury is shaped like a half moon, having the edge on the inside.

Chambers.

Bisulcous. adj. [bisulcus, Lat.] Clovenfooted.

For the swine, although multiparus, yet being bisulcous, and only clovenfooted, are farrowed with open eyes, as other bisulcous animals. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BIT. n. s. [bitol, Saxon.] Signifies the whole machine of all the iron appurtenances of a bridle, as the bit-mouth, the branches, the curb, the sevil holes, the tranchevil, and the cross chains; but sometimes it is used to signify only the bit-mouth in particular.

Farrier's Dict.

They light from their horses, pulling off their bit, that they might something refresh their mouths upon the grass. Sidney.

We have strict statutes, and most biting laws,

The needful bites and curbs of headstrong steeds. Shakspeare.

He hath the bit between his teeth, and away he runs.

Stillingfleet.

Unus'd to the restraint

Of curbs and bites, and fleetier than the winds. Addison.

The winning way we'll follow; We'll bit, that men may bite fair.

Beaumont and El. Wildgoose Chase.

He falls; his arms upon his body sound, And with his bloody teeth he bites the ground. Dryden.
There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone, who has now indeed recovered. Taller, No. 62.

Their foul mouths have not opened their lips without a fallity; though they have shewed their teeth as if they would bite off my nose. Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

2. To give pain by cold.

Here feel we the icy phang, And churlish chiding of the winter's wind; Which when it bites and blow, upon my body, Even till I shrink with cold, I smile. Shakspeare.
Full fifty years harness'd in rugged steel, I have endur'd the biting winter's blast, And the severer heats of parching summer. Rouse, Amb. Stepm.

3. To hurt or pain with reproach.

Each poet with a different talent writes; One praises, one instructs, another bites. Roscommon.

4. To cut; to wound.

I've seen the day, with my good biting faulchion, I would have made them skip. Shakspeare

5. To make the mouth smart with an acrid taste, from the old usage of it, in the general sense, to cause to smart.

No ointment that would cleanse or bite. Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 633.

It may be the first water will have more of the scent, as more fragrant; and the second more of the taste, as more bitter, or biting. Bacon.

6. To cheat; to trick; to defraud: a low phrase.

Asleep and naked as an Indian lay, An honest factor stole a gem away: He pledg'd it to the knight; the knight had wit, So kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit. Pope.
If you had allowed half the fine gentlemen to have conversed with you, they would have been strangely bit, while they thought only to fall in love with a fair lady. Pope.

BITE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The seizure of any thing by the teeth.

Does he think he can endure the everlasting burnings, or arm himself against the bites of the never-dying worm? South.
Nor so, days parching heat, that splits the rocks, Are half so harmful as the greedy flocks; Their venom'd bite, and scurs indented on the stocks. Dryden, Virgil's Georgicks.

2. The act of a fish that takes the bait.

I have known a very good fisher angle diligently four or six hours for a river carp, and not have a bite. Walton's Angl. r.

3. A cheat; a trick; a fraud: in low and vulgar language.

Let a man be ne'er so wise, He may be caught with sober lies; For take it in its proper light, 'Tis just what coxcombs call a bite. Swift.

4. A sharper; one who commits frauds.

BITTER.† adj. [biter, Saxon, from the Goth. bitars.]

1. Having a hot acrid, biting taste, like wormwood.

Bitter things are apt rather to kill than engender putrefaction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Though a man in a fever should, from sugar, have a bitter taste, which, at another time, produces a sweet one; yet the idea of bitter, in that man's mind, would be as distinct from the idea of sweet, as if he had tasted only gall. Locke.

2. Sharp; cruel; severe.

Friends now fast sworn, Unseparable, shall within this hour, On a dissension of a doit, break out To bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.

B I T

Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them.

Colossians, iii. 19.

The word of God, instead of a bitter, teaches us a charitable zeal.

Spratt.

3. Calamitous; miserable.

I will make it as the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day.

Amos, viii. 10.

Noble friends and fellows, whom to leave

Is only bitter to me, only dying;

Go with me, like good angels, to my end.

Shakspeare.

A dire induction am I witness to;

And will to France, hoping the consequence

Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.

Shakspeare.

And shun the bitter consequence; for know,

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command

Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die.

Milton, P. L.

Tell him, that if I bear my bitter fate,

'Tis to behold his vengeance for my son.

Dryden.

4. Painful; inclement.

The fowl the borders fly,

And shun the bitter blast, and wheel about the sky.

Dryden.

5. Sharp; reproachful; satirical.

Go with me,

And, in the breath of bitter words, let's smother

My damned son.

Shakspeare.

6. Mournful; afflicted.

Wherefore is light given unto him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul?

Job, iii. 20.

7. In any manner, unpleasing or hurtful.

Bitter is an equivocal word; there is bitter wormwood, there are bitter words, there are bitter enemies, and a bitter cold morning.

Watts, Logic.

BITTER. * n. s.

1. Any thing bitter.

A little bitter mingled in our cup leaves no relish of the sweet.

Locke.

2. [In medicine.] A bitter plant, bark, or root; as, an infusion of bitters.

BITTERFUL. * adj. [from bitter and full.] Full of bitterness. Obsolete.

BITTERLY. † adv. [Sax. biteþlice.]

1. With a bitter taste.

2. In a bitter manner; sorrowfully; calamitously.

The mighty man shall ery there bitterly.

Zeph. i. 14.

I so lively acted with my tears,

That my poor mistress, moved therewithal,

Wept bitterly.

Shakspeare.

Bitterly hast thou paid, and still art paying

That rigid score.

Milton, S. A.

3. Sharply; severely.

His behaviour is not to censure bitterly the errors of their zeal.

Spratt.

BITTERN. n. s. [butour, Fr.] A bird with long legs, and a long bill, which feeds upon fish; remarkable for the noise which he makes, usually called bumping. See BITTOUR.

The poor fish have enemies enough, besides such unnatural fishermen as otters, the cormorant, and the bittern.

So that scarce

Walton.

The bittern knows his time, with bill ingulphed,

To shake the sounding marsh.

Thomson.

BITTERN. n. s. [from bitter.] A very bitter liquor, which drains off in making of Epsom salt, and used in the preparation of Epsom salt.

Quincy.

BITTERNESS. † n. s. [Sax. biteþneþe.]

1. A bitter taste.

Vol. I.

B I T

The idea of whiteness, or bitterness, is in the mind, exactly answering that power which is in any body to produce it there.

Locke.

2. Malice; grudge; hatred; implacability.

The bitterness and animosity between the commanders was such, that a great part of the army was marched.

Clarendon.

3. Sharpness; severity of temper.

His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,

Shall we be thus afflicted in his wrecks,

His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness?

Shakspeare.

Pierpoint and Crew appeared now to have contracted more bitterness and sourness than formerly, and were more reserved towards the king's commissioners.

Clarendon.

4. Satire; piquancy; keenness of reproach.

Some think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat piquant, and to the quick: men ought to find the difference between saltness and bitterness.

Bacon.

5. Sorrow; vexation; affliction.

There appears much joy in him, even so much, that joy could not show itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness.

Shakspeare.

They shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born.

Zech. xii. 10.

Most pursue the pleasures, as they call them, of their natures, which begin in sin, are carried on with danger, and end in bitterness.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

I oft, in bitterness of soul, deplor'd

My absent daughter, and my dearer lord.

Pope, Odys. ev.

BITTERSWEET. n. s. [from bitter and sweet.] The name of an apple, which has a compound taste of sweet and bitter.

It is but a bittersweet at best, and the fine colours of the serpent do by no means make amends for the smart and poison of his sting.

When I express the taste of an apple, which we call the bittersweet, none can mistake what I mean.

Watts.

BITTERVETCH. n. s. [ervum, Lat.] A plant.

BITTERWORT. n. s. [gentiana, Lat.] An herb.

BITTOUR. † n. s. [bulour, Fr. bittore, Ital. from the Lat. bootaurus, Minshew thinks, because "boat ut taurus," he makes a noise like a bull.] The name of a bird, commonly called the bittern; but perhaps as properly bittour. It is, in some places, called a butter-bump. See BITTERN.

Then to the waters brink she laid her head;

And, as a bittour bumps within a reed,

To thee alone, O lake, she said, I tell.

Dryden.

BITUMEN. n. s. [from bitumen.] Bitumen. See BITUMEN.

Mix with these

Idean pitch, quick sulphur, silver's spume,

Sea onion, hellebore, and black bitume.

May.

BITUMED. * adj. [from bitume.] Smeared with pitch.

Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatches, caulked and bitumed ready.

Shakspeare, Penciles.

BITUMEN. n. s. [Lat.] A fat unctuous matter dug out of the earth, or scummed off lakes, as the Asphaltis in Judaea, of various kinds: some so hard as to be used for coals; others so glutinous as to serve for mortar.

Savary.

It is reported, that bitumen mingled with lime, and put under water, will make as it were an artificial rock, the substance becometh so hard.

Bacon.

The fabrick seem'd a work of rising ground,

With sulphur and bitumen cast between.

Dryden.

Bitumen is a body that readily takes fire, yields an oil, and is soluble in water.

Woodward.

* BITUMINOUS. † adj. [Fr. bitumineux, from bitumen.] Having the nature and qualities of bitumen; compounded of bitumen.

Naphtha, which was the bituminous mortar used in the walls of Babylon, grows to an entire and very hard matter, like a stone.

Bacon.

B L A

The fruitage fair to sight, like that which grew Near that bituminous lake, where Sodom flamed. Milton, P. L.

BIVA'VE. adj. [from binus and valve, Lat.] Having two valves or shutters; a term used of those fish that have two shells, as oysters: and of those plants whose seed pods open their whole length, to discharge their seeds, as peas.

In the cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve, larger than could be introduced in at those holes. Woodward.
BIVA'LVULA. adj. [from bivalve.] Having two valves.

Dict.

BI'VIOUS.* adj. [Lat. bivius.] That leadeth different ways.

In bivious theorems, and Janus-faced doctrines, let virtuous considerations state the determination.

Brown, Christ. Mor. ii. 3.

To BI'VOUAC.* v. n. [Gr. vin.] To continue under arms all night. See BIOVAC.

BI'AWORT. n. s. An herb.

Dict.

BI'ZANTINE. n. s. [more properly spelt byzantine; from Byzantium.] A great piece of gold valued at fifteen pounds, which the king offereth upon high festival days; it is yet called a bizantine, which anciently was a piece of gold coined by the emperours of Constantinople. Camden.

To BLAB. v. a. [blabber, Teut.]

1. To tell what ought to be kept secret; it usually implies rather thoughtlessness than treachery; but may be used in either sense.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day,

Is crept into the bosom of the sea.

Shakspeare.

Thy dues be done, and none left out,

Ere the blabbing eastern scout,

The nice morn on the Indian steep,

From her cabin'd loophole peep.

Milton, Comus.

Nature has made man's breast no windores,

To publish what he does within doors;

Nor what dark secrets there inhabit,

Unless his own rash folly blab it.

Hudibras.

Sorrow nor joy can be disguis'd by art,

Our foreheads blab the secrets of our heart.

Dryden.

It is unlawful to give any kind of religious worship to a creature; but the very induces of the fathers cannot escape the index expurgatorius, for blabbing so great a truth

Stillfleet.

Nor whisper to the tattling reeds

The blackest of all female deeds;

Nor blab it on the lonely rocks,

Where echos sits, and list'ning mocks.

Swift.

2. To tell: in a good sense: not used.

That delightful engine of her thoughts,

That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,

Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage.

Shakspeare.

To BLAB. v. n. To tattle; to tell tales.

Your mute I'll be;

When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see. Shakspeare.

BLAB. n. s. [from the verb.] A telltale; a thoughtless babbler; a treacherous betrayer of secrets.

The secret man heareth many confessions; for who will open himself to a blab, or babbler?

Bacon.

To have reveal'd

Secrets of man, the secrets of a friend,

Contempt and scorn of all, to be excluded

All friendship, and avoided as a blab.

Milton, S. A.

Whoever shews me a very inquisitive body, I'll shew him a blab, and one that shall make privacy as publick as a proclamation.

L'Estrange.

I should have gone about shewing my letters, under the charge of secrecy, to every blab of my acquaintance.

Swift.

BLA'BBER. † n. s. [from blab.] A tatter; a telltale.

Sherwood.

To BLA'BBER. † v. n.

1. To whistle to a horse.

Skinner.

B L A

2. To falter; to fib; to tell tales; Minshieu and Cotgrave; both of whom derive it from the old Fr. baboyer; but it is from the Teut. blabber, to talk foolishly.

BLA'BBERLIPPED. Skinner. See BLOBBERLIPPED.

BLACK. † adj. [blac, Sax.]

1. Of the colour of night.

In the twilight in the evening, in the black and dark night.

Proverbs, vii. 9.

Aristotle has problems which enquire why the sun makes man black, and not the fire; why it whitens wax, yet black, the skin?

Brown.

2. Dark.

The heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain.

1 Kings, xviii. 45.

3. Cloudy of countenance; sullen.

She hath abated me of half my train;

Look'd black upon me.

Shakspeare.

4. Horrible; wicked; atrocious.

Either my country never must be freed,

Or I consenting to so black a deed.

Dryden.

5. Obscure; mysterious. To this definition of black belongs the application of it to necromancy, as Minshieu terms "the black art;" which is yet an expression not omitted in enumerating the many things which a conjurer is supposed to know!

Deceitful magick told the Earl of Gowry, the Earl of Gowry should be king of Scotland;—the enigmatical black art bears Fairfax in hand, that the Viscount of—— shall be king of England. Archdeacon Arncliffe's Tab. of Moderation, p. 107.

6. Dismal; mournful.

A dire induction am I witness to;

And will to France, hoping the consequence

Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.

Shakspeare.

7. Black and Blue. The colour of a bruise; a stripe.

Mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

And, wing'd with speed and fury, flew

To rescue knight from black and blue.

Hudibras.

BLACK-BROWED. adj. [from black and brow.] Having black eyebrows; gloomy; dismal; threatening.

Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd night,

Give me my Romeo.

Shakspeare.

Thus when a black-brow'd gust begins to rise,

White foam at first on the curl'd ocean fries,

Then roars the main, the billows mount the skies.

Dryden.

BLACK-BRYONY. n. s. [tamnus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLACK-CATTLE. Oxen, bulls, and cows.

The other part of the grazier's business is what we call black-cattle, produces hides, tallow, and beef, for exportation.

Swift.

BLACK-EARTH. n. s. It is every where obvious on the surface of the ground, and what we call mould.

Woodward.

BLACK-EYED.* adj. [from black and eye.] Having black eyes.

I must resign

My black-ey'd maid, to please the powers divine.

Dryden, Iliad 1.

BLACK-FACED.* adj. [from black and face.] Having a dark or black face.

This black-fac'd night, desire's soul nurse.

Shakspeare, Ven. and Adonis.

BLACK-GUARD. † adj. [from black and guard.] A cant word amongst the vulgar; by which is implied a dirty fellow; of the meanest kind, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites only the modern authority of Swift. But the introduction of this word into our language belongs not to the vulgar, and is more than a century prior to the time of Swift. Mr. Malone agrees with me, in exhibiting the two first of the following examples. The black guard is evidently designed to imply a fit attendant on the devil.

* They are taken for no better than rakehells or the devil's black-guard. Stanbury's Descript. of Ireland, ch. 8.

As the blessed angels are ministering spirits, so the devil and his black-guard are the meanes and instruments which God hath used and employed in all times,—eather for the tryal of the godly, or chastisement of the wicked.

Howard's Defensative, &c. (1583.)

One o' the black-guard had his hand in my vestry, and was groping of me as nimbly as the Christmas cut-purse.

Johnson, Masques at Court.

I was alone among a coachfull of women, and those of the electors duchesse chamber forsooth, which you would have said to have been of the black-guard.

Moryson's Itinerary, part 1. p. 13.

Let a black-guard boy be always about the house, to send on your errands, and go to market for you on rainy days. Swift.

BLACK-JACK.* n. s. The leathern cup of elder tunes. See JACK.

He runs to the black-jack, fills his flaggon, spreads the table, and serves up dinner. Milton, Colasterion.

I drink my porter out of a leathern black-jack. Student, ii. 258.

BLACK-LEAD. n. s. [from black and lead.] A mineral found in the lead mines, much used for pencils; it is not fusible, or not without a very great heat.

You must first get your black-lead sharpened finely, and put fast into quills, for your rude and first draught. Peachment.

BLACK-MAIL. n. s. A certain rate of money, corn, cattle, or other consideration, paid to men allied with robbers, to be by them protected from the danger of such as usually rob or steal. Cowel.

BLACK-MOUTHED.* adj. [from black and mouth.] Using foul language; scurrilous.

He will readily grant, that if the dead rise not, then his preaching is vain, and their faith is also vain; then Christian religion is all artifice and delusion; the dream of enthusiasts, the project of politicians, the craft of priests, or whatever else the most black-mouth'd atheists charged it with.

Killingbeck's Serm. p. 118.

BLACK-MONDAY.* n. s. A day recorded in the history of this country by that name.

Black-Monday is Easter-Monday, and was so called on this occasion: In the 34th of Edw. III. the 14th of April, and the morrow after Easter-day, king Edward, with his host, lay before the city of Paris, which day was full dark of mist and hail, and so bitter cold, that many men died on their horses' backs with the cold. Wherefore, unto this day, it hath been called the Black-Monday.

Stowe, Hist. of Eng.

It was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on Black-Monday last. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

BLACK-PEOPLED.* adj. [from black and people.] Having people of a black colour.

The admiring queen, wing'd with thy fame,
From her black-peopled empire came.

Sandys, Christ's Passion, p. 23.

BLACK-PUDDING. n. s. [from black and pudding.] A kind of food made of blood and grain.

Through they were lin'd with many a piece
Of ammunition bread and cheese,
And fat blackpuddings, proper food
For warriors that delight in blood.

Hudibras.

BLACK-ROD. n. s. [from black and rod.] The usher belonging to the order of the garter; so called from the black rod he carries in his hand. He is of the king's chamber, and likewise usher of the parliament.

Cowel.

BLACK-VISAGED.* adj. [from black and visage.]

Having a black appearance.

Hurry amain from our black-visag'd shows;
We shall affright their eyes.

Marston's Antonio and Melida, Prol.

BLACK.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A black colour.

Black is the badge of hell,
The hue of dungeons, and the scowl of night. Shakspeare.

For the production of black, the corpuses must be less than any of those which exhibit colours. Newton.

2. Mourning.

We never bethink ourselves, or consult of moderate diet, but in blacks and mourning, when our folly and intemperance hath cast us into some disease.

Hales's Sermons, at the Close of his Remains, p. 21.

How like a silent stream shaded with night,
And gliding softly with our windy sighs,
Moves the whole frame of this solemnity!
Tears, sighs, and blacks, filling the similitude.

Massinger's and Field's Fatal Dowry.

Rise, wretched widow, rise; nor, undeplor'd,
Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:
But rise, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

3. A blackamoor.

4. That part of the eye which is black.

It suffices that it be in every part of the air, which is as big as the black or sight of the eye. Digby.

5. A stain.

Defiling her white lawn of chastity
With ugly blacks of lust. Rowley, All's Lost by Lust.

To BLACK.† v. a. [Sax. blacian.] To make black; to blacken.

Blacking over the paper with ink, not only the ink would be quickly dried up, but the paper, that I could not burn before, we quickly set on fire. Boyle.

Then in his fury black'd the raven o'er,
And bid him prate in his white plumes no more. Addison.

BLA'CKAMOOR. n. s. [from black and Moor.] A man by nature of a black complexion; a negro.

They are no more afraid of a blackamoor, or a lion, than of a nurse, or a cat. Locke.

BLA'CKBERRIED Heath. [empetrum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLA'CKBERRY.† n. s. [Sax. blacbeþian.] The fruit of the bramble.

The policy of these crafty sneering rascals, that stale old mouse-eaten cheese Nestor, and that same dogfox Ulysses, is not proved worth a blackberry. Shakspeare.

Then sad he sung the Children in the Wood;

How blackberries they pluck'd in deserts wild,
And fearless at the glittering fauchion smil'd. Gay.

BLA'CKBERRY Bush. n. s. [rubus, Lat.] A species of bramble.

BLA'CKBIRD. n. s. [from black and bird.] The name of a bird.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A schoolboy ran unto't, and thought
The crib was down, the blackbird caught. Swift.

BLA'CKCOCK.* n. s. The heath-cock: the black-gam, common in the North of England and in Scotland.

After dinner, we went out with guns, to try if we could find any blackcock. Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

To BLA'CKEN.† v. a. [Sax. blacian.]

1. To make of a black colour.

Bless'd by aspiring winds, he finds the strand
Blacken'd by crowds.

Prior.

While the long fun'erals blacken all the way.

Pope.

2. To darken; to cloud.

That little cloud that appear'd at first to Elijah's servant, no bigger than a man's hand, but presently after grew, and spread, and blackened the face of the whole heaven. South.

3. To defame; or make infamous.

B L A

Let us blacken him, let us blacken him, what we can, said that miscreant Harrison, of the blessed king, upon the wording and drawing up his charge against his approaching trial. South.

The morals blacken'd, when the writings 'scape,
The libell'd person, and the pictur'd shape. Pope.

To BLA'CKEN. v. n. To grow black or dark.

The hollow sound
Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around,
Air blacken'd, roll'd the thunder, groan'd the ground. Dryden.

BLA'CKENER.* n. s. [from blacken.] He who blackens any thing. Sherwood.

BLA'CKISH.† adj. [from black.] Somewhat black.
As the stream of brooks they pass away; which are blackish
by reason of the ice, and wherein the snow is hid. Job vi. 16.
Part of it all the year continues in the form of a blackish
oil. Boyle.

BLA'CKLY.* adv. [from black.]

1. Darkly, in colour.
Lastly stood War, in glittering arms yclad,
With visage grim, stern looks, and blackly hued.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Magistrates.

2. Atrociously.
Deeds so blackly grim and horrid.
Filtham's Resolves, B. ii. R. 31.

BLA'CKMOOR. n. s. [from black and Moore.] A negro.

The land of Chus makes no part of Africa; nor is it the habitation of blackmoors; but the country of Arabia, especially the Happy and Stony. Brown, Vulg. Err.
More to west
The realm of Bæchus to the blackmoor sea. Milton, P. R.

BLA'CKNESS. n. s. [from black.]

1. Black colour.
Blackness is only a disposition to absorb, or stifle, without reflection; most of the rays of every sort that fall on the bodies. Locke.

There would emerge one or more very black spots, and, withiu those, other spots of an intenser blackness. Newton.
His tongue, his prating tongue, had chang'd him quite,
To sooty blackness from the purest white. Addison.

2. Darkness.
His faults in him seem as the spots of heav'n,
More fiery by night's blackness. Shakspeare.

3. Atrociousness; horribleness; wickedness.
BLA'CKSMITH. n. s. [from black and smith.] A smith that works in iron; so called from being very smutty.

The blacksmith may forge what he pleases. Howell.
Shut up thy doors with bars and bolts; it will be impossible for the blacksmith to make them so fast, but a cat and a whore-master will find a way through them. Spectator.

BLA'CKTAIL. n. s. [from black and tail.] A fish; a kind of perch, by some called ruffs, or popes. See POPE. Dict.

BLA'CKTHORN.† n. s. [from black and thorn.] The same with the sloe. See PLUM, of which it is a species.

Love shall, in that tempestuous shower,
Her brightest blossoms like the blackthorn show:
Weak friendship prospers by the power
Of fortune's sun: I'll in her winter grow.
Habington's Castara, p. 98.

BLA'DDER. n. s. [bladdre, Saxon; blader, Dutch.]

1. That vessel in the body which contains the urine.
The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatible for receiving and containing the urine, till an opportunity of emptying it. Ray.

2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore,
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass
Was nothing left, but like an empty bladder was. Spenser, F. Q.

B L A

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys, that swim on bladders,
These many summers, in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride
At length broke under me. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLA'DDER-NUT. n. s. [staphylodendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLA'DDER-SENA. n. s. [colutea, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLA'DDERED.* adj. [from bladder.] Swoln like a bladder.

They affect greatness in all they write, but it is a bladder'd greatness, like that of the vain man whom Seneca describes;—an ill habit of body, full of humours, and swelled with dropsy. Dryden, Dedie. of the Æneid.

BLADE.† n. s. [blæb, bleb, Sax. part. from blepan, or blopan; French, bled, low Lat. bladus.] The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blude of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blude of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes, t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use. Swift.

Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE.† n. s. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle. It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He sought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. Spenser, F. Q.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her sabre with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage. Fuller pluns upon the word, always fond of an opportunity to be facetious.

Sure I am, however at this time they might turn edge, they had been formerly true blades for his holiness, [the pope].

Fuller, Hist. of the Holy War, p. 234.

You'll find yourself mistaken, Sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L' Etrange.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I pri'thee, this troublesome blade. Prior.

BLADE of the Shoulder.} n. s. The bone called by BLADEBONE.} anatomists the scapula, or scapular bone.

He fell most furiously on the broiled relics of a shoulder of mutton, commonly called a bladebone Pope.

To BLADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish, or fit with a blade.

BLA'DED. adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the watery glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass. Shakespeare.
As where the lightning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dryden.

BLA'DESMITH. n. s. [from blade and smith, faber gladiatorum.] A sword cutler. Huloet.

BLAIN. n. s. [blegene, Sax. bleyne, Dutch, from the Iceland. blina, a pustule.] A pustule; a botch; a blister.

It shall become small dust in all the land of Egypt, and shall be a boil breaking forth with blains upon man and beast. Exod. ix. 9.

Itches, blains,
Sow all the Athenian bosoms, and the crop
Be general leprosy. Shakespeare.
Botches and blains must all his flesh imboss,
And all his people. Milton, P. L.

Whene'er I hear a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd;
Which breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow filth my linen stains. Swift.

BLA'MABLE. adj. [old Fr. blasmable.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLA'MABLENESS. n. s. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

Scripture—mentioneth its sometimes freer use, than at other, without the least blamableness.

Whitlock, Manners of the English, p. 503.

If he had not freedom of will to determine himself towards good and evil, as he pleased, he must then be under a fatal necessity of doing whatsoever he should happen to do; and then as he could give no proof of his temper and inclination, so there could be no such thing as acceptableness to God when he did well, nor blamableness when he did otherwise.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference, P. III.

BLA'MABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Culpably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

To BLAME. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault: it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare.

Porphyrius, you too far did tempt your fate;
'Tis true, your duty to me it became;
But praising that, I must your conduct blame. Dryden.

Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.

Tomorous he blam'd of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Knolles, History of the Turks.

4. To blemish; to bring reproach upon.

When he saw his faire Priscilla by,
He deeply sigh'd, and groan'd inwardly,
To think of this ill state in which she stood;
To which she for his sake had weepingly
Now brought herself, and blam'd her noble blood. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 11.

BLAME. n. s. [old Fr. blasme.]

1. Imputation of a fault. *

In arms, the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame or misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are content to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

3. Hurt. Not now in use.

Therewith upon his crest,
With rigour so outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest.
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Spenser, F. Q.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun, Dr. Johnson says: To blame, in French, à tort; culpable; worthy of censure. But it is an adverbial mode of speech; so, to seek means without knowledge; and thus, to blame means without excuse. See To SEEK, adv.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift. Shakespeare.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but, whether they were to blame in the manner? Stillingfleet.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLA'MEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the cause of these timeless deaths
As blamful as the executioner? Shakespeare.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blamful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakespeare.

Thy blamful lines, bespotted so with sin,
Mine eyes would cleanse, ere they to read begin.
• Drayton, Epist. Matilda to K. John.

BLA'MELSS. adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom, x. 5.

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r. Dryden.

Such a lessening of our coin will deprive great numbers of blameless men of a fifth part of their estates. Locke.

2. Sometimes it is used with of.

We will be blameless of this thine oath. Joshua, ii. 17.

BLA'MELESSLY. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertuacy, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammond.

BLA'MELESSNESS. n. s. [from blameless.] Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved, with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelessness of the inferior agent. Hammond.

BLA'MER. n. s. [from blame.] One that blames or finds fault; a censorer.

In me you've hallowed a pagan muse,
And denizond a stranger, who, mistaught
By blamers of the times they marr'd, hath sought Virtues in corners. Donne, Poems, p. 159.

BLA'MEWORTHY. adj. [from blame and worthy.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of blame or censure.

B L A

Or esteemeth such an one blame-worthy.

Martin on the Murrage of Priests, (1554), sign. Kk. iii. 6.

Although the same should be blame-worthy, yet this age hath forborn to incur the danger of any such blame.

Hooker. That the sending of a divorce to her husband was not blame-worthy, he affirms because the man was heinously vicious.

Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, ii. 22.

The disturbance and fear, which often follow upon a man's having done an injury, arise from a sense of his being blame-worthy.

BLAMEWORTHINESS. * n. s. [from blame-worthy.] What is deserving blame.

Praise and blame express what actually are; praiseworthiness and blameworthiness, what naturally ought to be the sentiments of other people with regard to our character and conduct.

TO BLANCH. † v. a. [blanchir, Fr.]

1. 'To whiten; to change from some other colour to white.

You can behold such sights,

And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,

When mine are blanch'd with fear. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

A way of whitening wax cheaply may be of use; and we have set down the practice of tradesmen who blanch it. Boyle.

And sin's black dye seems blanch'd by age to virtue. Dryden.

2. 'To strip or peel such things as have husks.

Their suppers may be bisket, raisins of the sun, and a few blanch'd almonds. Wiscman.

3. 'To slur; to balk; to pass over; to shift away. Not now in use, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites the authority only of Bacon. Other good authors use it; and probably the modern vulgar expression, "to blink (i. e. to evade) the question," is a corruption of to blanch the question.

The judges thought it dangerous to admit ifs and ands, to qualify treason; whereby every one might express his malice, and blanch his danger. Bacon, Hen. V. 11.

You are not transported in an action that warms the blood and is appearing holy, to blanch, or take for admitted, the point of lawfulness. Bacon, Holy War.

The doctors of that church have their colourable pretences, wherewith to blanch over these errors.

Bp. Sanderson's Sermons, p. 242.

I suppose you will not blanch Paris in your way.

Sir II. Wotton, Lett. to Milton.

A man horribly cheats his own soul, who upon any pretence, or under any temptation whatsoever, forsakes or blanches the true principles of religion.

Goodman's Wint. Ev. Conference, P. 3.

TO BLANCH. * n. 'To evade; to shift; to speak soft.

Optimi consulari mortui; books will speak plain, when counsellors blanch. Bacon.

BLANCHER. n. s. [from blanch.] A whitener. Dict.

BLAND. adj. [blandus, Lat.] Soft; mild; gentle.

In her face excuse

Came prologue, and apology to prompt;

Which, with bland words at will, she thus address'd.

Milton, P. L.

An even calm

Perpetual reign'd, save what the zephyrs bland

Breath'd o'er the blue expanse.

Thomson.

TO BLAND. * [Mr. Mason introduces this word as a verb from the adjective; but the word, in the example, is the adjective itself used adverbially. Mr. Mason has garbled the passage, by giving only the line in which bland occurs. Such a verb, however, would be useful, as meaning to soothe.]

Loath that foul blot, that hellish fierbrand,

Disloyal lust, fair beauty's foulest blame,

That base affection, which your ears would bland

Commend to you by love's abused name.

* Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Beauty.

BLANDA'TION. * n. s. [from blanditia, Lat.] A piece of flattery.

B. L. A

One had flattered Longchamp, Bishop of Ely, with this blaudation. Canden, Remains.

BLANDILOQUENCE. * n. s. [Lat. blandiloquentia.] This word is found in our lexicography of a century since, and is admitted into foreign dictionaries which illustrate our language. Fair and flattering speech; courteous language; compliment.

Gloss. Anglicana Nova, (1707).

TO BLANDISH. † v. a. [blandir, Fr. from blandior, Lat.]

'To smooth; to soften. I have met with this word in no other passage than that of Milton, Dr. Johnson says. He might have found it, however, in our old lexicography. Bullokar's and Sherwood's dictionaries both give it: It is indeed one of our most ancient verbs.

Thou wert wont to hurtlen and dispisen her with many words, when she was blandishyng and present, &c.

Chaucer, Boeth. l. 2. pros. prima.

In this psalme he spekith of Christ and his followis blandishyng to us. Lewis, Hist. Tr. of the Bible, p. 13.

She, blandishing, by Dunsmore drives along.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. xiii.

Must'ring all her wiles,

With blandish'd parleys, feminine assaults,

Tongue-batteries, she surceas'd not day nor night,

To storm me over-watch'd, and wear'd out. Milton, S. A.

BLANDISHER. * n. s. [old Fr. blandisseur.] One who blandishes. Cotgrave and Sherwood.

BLANDISHING. * n. s. [from blandish.] Expression of kindness; blandishment.

Flat enemies are honest harmless things,

Because they tell us what we have to fear;

But double-hearted friends, whose blandishings

Tickle our ears but sting our bosoms, are

Those dangerous Syrens, whose sweet maiden face

Is only mortal treason's burnish'd glass.

Beaumont's Psycho, C. 6. st. 3.

BLANDISHMENT. † n. s. [old Fr. blandissement.]

1. Act of fondness; expression of tenderness by gesture.

The little babe up in his arms he bent,

Who, with sweet pleasure and bold blandishment,

'Gan smile. Spenser, F. Q.

Each bird and beast behold

Approaching two and two; these cowl'ing low

With blandishment.

Milton, P. L.

2. Soft words; kind speeches.

He was both well and fair spoken, and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to effect or persuade any thing that he took to heart. Bacon.

3. Kind treatment; caress.

Him Dido now with blandishment detains;

But I suspect the town where Juno reigns. Dryden.

In order to bring those infidels within the wide circle of whiggish community, neither blandishments nor promises are omitted. Swift.

BLANK. † adj. [blanc, Fr. derived by Menage from Albianus, thus: Albianus, albianicus, bianicus, bianco, blanicus, blancus, blanc; by others, from blanc, which, in Danish, signifies shining; in conformity to which, the Germans have blancher, to shine, Dr. Johnson says; and they have also the adjective blanc, white; the Saxons, blæcan; and the English, blach, to whiten.]

1. White.

To the blanc moon

'Her office they prescrib'd: to th' other five

Their planetary motions.

Milton, P. L.

2. Without writing; unwritten; empty of all marks.

Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters,

Where, when they know that men are rich,

They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold. Shakspeare,

Upon the debtor side, I find innumerable articles; but, upon the creditor side, little more than blank paper. Addison.

3. Pale; confused; crushed; dispirited; subdued; depressed.

There without such bow, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, he thus began. Milton, P. L.

Adam, soon as he heard
The fatal trespass done by Eve, amaz'd,
Astounded stood, and blank, while horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton, P. L.

But now no face divine contentment wears;
'Tis all blank sadness, or continual fear. Pope.

4. Without rhyme; where the rhyme is blanched, or missed. See To BLANCH, to balk.

The lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for it. Shakspeare.

Long have your ears been fill'd with tragick parts;
Blood and blank verse have harden'd all your hearts.

Addison, Prolog. to the Drummer.

Our blank verse, where there is no rhyme to support the expression, is extremely difficult to such as are not masters in the tongue. Addison on Italy.

BLANK. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A void space on paper.

I cannot write a paper full as I used to do; and yet I will not forgive a blank of half an inch from you. Swift.

2. A lot, by which nothing is gained; which has no prize marked upon it.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears. Shakspeare.

In fortune's lottery lies
A heap of blanks, like this, for one small prize. Dryden.

The world the coward will despise,
When life's a blank, who pulls not for a prize. Dryden.

3. A paper from which the writing is effaced.

She has left him
The blank of what he was;
I tell thee, cunnie, she has quite unmann'd him. Dryden.

4. A paper unwritten; any thing without marks or characters.

For him, I think not on him; for his thoughts,
Would they were blanks, rather than fill'd with me. Shakspeare.

Omission to do what is necessary,
Seal a commission to a blank of danger. Shakspeare.

For the book of knowledge fair,
Presented with an universal blank

Of nature's works, to me expung'd and ras'd. Milton, P. L.

Life may be one great blank, which, though not blotted with sin, is yet without any characters of grace or virtue. Rogers.

5. The point to which an arrow is directed; so called, because, to be more visible, it was marked with white. Now disused.

Slender,
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank,
Transports its poison'd shot. Shakspeare.

6. Aim; shot. Not used.

The harlot king
Is quite beyond my aim; out of the blank
And level of my brain. Shakspeare.

I have spoken for you all my best,
And stood within the blank of his displeasure,

For my free speech. Shakspeare.

7. Object to which any thing is directed.

See better, Lear, and let me still remain
The true blank of thine eye. Shakspeare.

To BLANK. v. a. [from blank; blanchir, Fr.]

1. To damp; to confuse; to dispirit.

Each opposite, that blanks the face of joy,
Meet what I would have well, and it destroy. Shakspeare.

Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive
Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him
Of all these boasted trophies won on me,
And with confusion blank his worshippers. Milton, S. A.

If the atheist, when he died, should find that his soul remains,
How will this man be amazed and blanked? Tillotson.

2. To efface; to annul.

All former purposes were blanked, the governour at a bay, and all that charge lost and cancelled. Spenser on Ireland.

BLANKET. n. s. [blanchette, Fr.]

1. A woollen cover, soft, and loosely woven, spread commonly upon a bed, over the linen sheet, for the procurement of warmth.

Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the Bark,
To cry, hold! hold! Shakspeare.

The abilities of man must fall short on one side or other, like too scanty a blanket when you are a-bed; if you pull it upon your shoulders, you leave your feet bare; if you thrust it down upon your feet, your shoulders are uncovered. Temple.

Himself among the storied chiefs he spies,
As from the blanket high in air he flies. Pope.

2. A kind of pear, sometimes written blanquet.

To BLANKET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a blanket.

My face I'll grime with filth;
Blanket my loins; tie all my hair in knots. Shakspeare.

2. To toss in a blanket, by way of penalty or contempt.

I'll send for him to my lodging, and have him blanketed when thou wilt, man. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Let 'em be cudgell'd out of doors by our grooms. We'll have our men blanket 'em i'the hall. B. Jonson, Epicoene.

BLANKETING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Tossing in a blanket.

Ah, oh! he cry'd, what street, what lane, but knows
Our purgings, pumpings, blanketings, and blows? Pope.

BLANKLY. adv. [from blank.] In a blank manner; with whiteness; with paleness; with confusion.

To BLARE. v. n. [blaren, Dutch, blaor Gael. a cry.

In Lincolnshire, to blare is to low as oxen. In Suffolk, blare; which means also, to cry like a child.] To bellow; to roar. Skinner.

To BLASPHEME. v. a. [blasphemo, low Lat., old Fr. blasphemer.]

1. To speak in terms of impious irreverence of God.

Thou didst blaspheme God and the king 1 Kings, xxi. 10.
The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you. Rom. ii. 24.

2. To speak evil of.

The truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accus'd,
And does blaspheme his breed. Shakspeare.

Those who from our labours heap their board,
Blaspheme their feeder, and forget their lord. Pope.

To BLASPHEME. v. n. To speak blasphemy.

Liver of blaspheming Jew. Shakspeare.
I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme. Acts, xvii. 17.

BLASPHEMER. n. s. [from blaspheme.] * A wretch that speaks of God in impious and irreverent terms.

Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious. 1 Timothy, i. 13.

Even that blasphemer himself would inwardly reverence his reprover, as he in his heart really despises him for his cowardly base silence. South.

Deny the curst blasphemer's tongue to rage,
And turn God's fury from an impious age. Tickell.

Should each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
Because the insult's not to man, but God. Pope.

BLASPHEMING.* n. s. [from blaspheme.] The act of blasphemy.

Those desperate atheisms, those Spanish renouancings, and Italian blasphemings, have now so prevailed in our Christian camps, that, if any restrain them, he shall be upbraided as no soldier. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

BLASPHEMOUS. adj. [from blaspheme.] It is usually spoken with the accent on the first syllable, but used by Milton with it on the second, Dr. Johnson says. Milton adopted the accent from the elder poets; for Sidney and Spenser both use it on the second syllable; or it might be the common accent in Milton's time. Sherwood, his contemporary, gives the adjective, in his dictionary, thus; blasphemous or blasphematory. Spenser also accents blasphemy on the second syllable.] Impiously irreverent with regard to God.

O man, take heed how thou the gods dost move,
To cause full wrath, which thou can'st not resist;
Blasphemous words the speaker vain do prove. Sidney, b. ii.

And dar'st thou to the Son of God propound,
To worship thee accurst; now more accurst
For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,
And more blasphemous? Milton, P. R.

A man can hardly pass the streets, without having his ears grated with horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses. Tillotson.

That any thing that wears the name of a christian, or but of man, should venture to own such a villainous, impudent, and blasphemous assertion in the face of the world, as this! South.

BLASPHEMOUSLY. adv. [from blaspheme.] Impiously; with wicked irreverence.

Where is the right use of his reason, while he would blasphemously set up to controul the commands of the Almighty? Swift.

BLASPHEMY. n. s. [from blaspheme.]

Blasphemy, strictly and properly, is an offering of some indignity, or injury, unto God himself, either by words or writing. Ayliff.

But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy, ere bid you fly;
But fly you must. Shakespeare.

Intrinsic goodness consists in accordiance, and sin in contrariety, to the secret will of God; or else God could not be defined good,
so far as his thoughts and secrets, but only superficially good, as far as he is pleased to reveal himself, which is perfect blasphemy to imagine. Hammond.

BLAST. n. s. [from blæyt, Sax. blasen, Germ. to blow.]

1. A gust or puff of wind.

They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them;
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakespeare.

Welcome, then,
Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace;
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst,
Owe nothing to thy blasts. Shakespeare.

Perhaps thy fortune doth controul the winds,
Doth loose or bind their blasts in secret cave. Fairfax.

Three ships were hurry'd by the southern blast,
And on the secret shelves with fury cast. Dryden.

2. The sound made by blowing any instrument of wind musick.

In peace there's nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillness and humility;
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tyger. Shakespeare.

He blew his trumpet — the angelick blast
Fill'd all the regions. Milton, P. I.

The Veline fountains, and sulphureous Nar,
Shake at the baleful blast, the signal of the war. Dryden.

Whether there be two different goddesses called Fame, or one goddess sounding two different trumpets, it is certain, villainy has as good a title to a blast from the proper trumpet, as virtue has from the former. Swift.

3. The stroke of a malignant planet; the infection of any thing pestilential: from the verb To blast.

By the blast of God they perish. Joh. iv. 9.

To BLAST. † v. a. [Sax. blæytan, pret. blæyt.]

1. To strike with some sudden plague or calamity.
You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes! infect her beauty,
You fennel'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun,
To fall and blast her pride. Shakespeare.

Oh! Portius, is there not some chosen curse,
Some hidden thunder in the store of heaven,

Red with uncommon wrath, to blast the man,
Who owes his greatness to his country's ruin! Addison.

2. To make to wither.

Upon this blasted heath you stop our way. Shakespeare.
And behold seven thin ears, and blasted with the east wind, sprung up after them. Genesis.

She that like lightning shin'd, while her face lasted,
The oak now resembles, which lightning had blasted. Waller.

To his green years your censures you would suit,
Not blast that blossom, but expect the fruit. Dryden.

Agony unmix'd, incessant gall
Corroding every thought, and blasting all Love's paradise. Thomson.

3. To injure; to invalidate; to make infamous. [So, in the old French, blastanger is to insult, to blame, to condemn; and blastange, or blastinge, the substantive of the same import. V. Roquefort, Gloss. de la Lang. Rom.]

He shews himself weak, if he will take my word, when he thinks I deserve no credit; or malicious, if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to blast it. Stillingfleet.

4. To cut off; to hinder from coming to maturity.

This commerce, Jehoshaphat king of Judea endeavoured to renew; but his enterprize was blasted by the destruction of vessels in the harbour. Arbutnot.

5. To confound; to strike with terrour.

Trumpeters,
With brazen din, blast you the city's ears;
Make mingle with your rattling tabourines. Shakespeare

BLASTER.* n. s. [from blast.] One who strikes us with a blast.

I am no blaster of a lady's beauty.
Beaumont, and Fl. Rule a Wife.

roar. Colcs.

BLATERO'ON.* n. s. [from the Teut. verb, blateren, to prate, to talk idly.] A babler.

I trusted T. P. with a weighty secret, conjuring him that it should not take air and go abroad; which was not done according to the rules and religion of friendship, but it went out of him the very next day. — I will endeavour to lose the memory of him: — I hate such blatero'ons.

Howell, Letters, ii. 75.
To BLATTER. † v. n. [Lat. blatero, Teut. blateren, to talk idly. In the North of England, to blather is to talk nonsense.] To roar; to make a senseless noise. It is a word not now used.

durance, however envy list to blatter against him.

Spenser on Ireland.
BLAY. n. s. [alburnus.] A small white river fish;
called also a bleak.

BLAZE. † n. s. [Goth. blys, a flame; blaze, a torch,
Saxon.]

1. A flame; the light of the flame: blaze implies more the light than the heat.

— The main blaze of it is past; but a small thing would make it flame again. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

As for the blazes, if in any part of this kingdom any such be now used at this time, [Christmas,] I know no other beginning or occasion of them than that flames of fire may have been used as expressions of joy among us, as bonfires have always been. Hammond on the Festivals of the Church.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight.
What groans of men shall fill the martial field!
How fierce a blaze his flaming pile shall yield!
What funeral pomp shall floating Tiber see!

Dryden.

2. Publication; wide diffusion of report.

For what is glory but the blaze of fame,
The people's praise, if always praise unmixt?

Milton, P. R.

3. Blaze is a white mark upon a horse, descending from the forehead almost to the nose. [Germ.

Farrier's Dict.

To BLAZE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flame; to shew the light of the flame.

Thus you may long live an happy instrument for your king and country; you shall not be a meteor, or a blazing star, but stella fixa; happy here, and more happy hereafter.

Bacon.

The third fair morn now blaz'd upon the main,
Then glossy smooth lay all the liquid plain.

Pope.

2. To be conspicuous.

To BLAZE. v. a.

the country people to some noblemen theabouts, they came thither.

Sidney.

My words, in hopes to blaze a stedfast mind,
This marble chose, as of like temper known.

Sidney.

Thou shalt live, till we can find a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends,
Beg pardon of thy prince, and call thee back.

Shakespeare.

When beggars die, there are no comets seen;
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.

Shakespeare.

But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter.

Mark, i. 45.

Such music worthiest were to blaze
The peerless highth of her immortal praise,
Whose lustre leads us.

Milton, Arcades.

Far beyond
The sons of Anak, famous now and blaz'd,
Fearless of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about.

Milton, S. A.

Whose follies, blaz'd about, to all are known,
And are a secret to himself alone.

Granville.

But, mortals, know, 'tis still our greatest pride
To blaze those virtues which the good would hide.

Pope.

2. To blazon; to give an account of ensigns armorial in proper terms. This is not now used.

Braggadocchio — did shew his shield,
Which bore the sun brode blaz'd in a golden field.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 14.

This, in ancient times, was called a tierce; and you should then have blaz'd it thus: he bears a tierce, sable, between two tierces, or.

Peacham.

BLAZER. n. s. [from blaze.] One that spreads reports.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd,
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime;
His larum-bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time;
Early and late it rung, at evening and at prime.

Spenser, F. Q.

To BLAZON. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]

1. To explain, in proper terms, the figures on ensigns armorial.

King Edward gave to them the coat of arms, which I am not herald enough to blazon into English.

Addison.

She blazons in dread smiles her hideous form
So lightning gilds the unrelenting storm.

Garth.

3. To display; to set to show.

VOL. I.

O thou goddess,

Thou divine nature! how thyself thou blazon'st
In these two princely boys! they are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

4. To celebrate; to set out.

One that excels the quirk of blazoning pens,
And in the essential vesture of creation,
Does bear all excellency.

Shakespeare, Othello.

5. To blaze about; to make publick.

What's this but libelling against the senate,
And blazoning our injustice every where?

Tit. Androm.

BLAZON. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The art of drawing or explaining coats of arms.

Proceed unto beasts that are given in arms, and teach me what I ought to observe in their blazon.

Peacham.

2. Show; divulgation; publication.

But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

3. Celebration; proclamation of some quality.

I am a gentleman — I'll be sworn thou art;
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, action, and spirit;
Do give thee five-fold blazon.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Men can over their pedigrees, and obtrude the blazon of their exploits upon the company.

Collier.

BLAZONER.* [old Fr. blasonneur.] A herald; also an evil speaker.

Cotgrave.

May, Lucan, B. 9.

BLEAR. * adj. [blaer, a blister, Dutch.]

1. Dim with rheum or water; sore with rheum.
 It is a tradition that blear eyes affect sound eyes. Bacon.
 It is no more in the power of calumny to blast the dignity of an honest man, than of the blear eyed owl to cast scandal on the sun. L'Estrange.

His blear eyes ran in gutters to his chin;
 His beard was stubble, and his cheeks were thin. Dryden.
 When thou shalt see the blear ey'd fathers teach
 Their sons this harsh and mouldy sort of speech. Dryden.

2. Dim; obscure in general; or that which makes dimness.

Thus I turn
 My darling spells into the spongy air,
 Of power to cheat the eye with blear illusion,
 And give it false presentments. Milton, Comus.

BLEAR-EYED. * adj. [from blear and eye.]

 This may stand for a pretty superficial argument, to blear
 our eyes, and lull us asleep in security. Raleigh.

BLEAREDNESS. † n. s. [from bleared.] This is an old substantive, which was once written blear-eyedness.

See Minsheu; and Sherwood, in blearedness.
 The state of being bleared, or dimmed with rheum.

The defluxion falling upon the edges of the eyelids, makes a blearedness. Wiseman.

To BLEAT. † v. n. [blætan, Sax. bleten, Teut. per- haps from the Lat. balatus.] To cry as a sheep.

We were as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk ' the sun,
 And bleat the one at the other. Shakspeare.

You may as well use question with the wolf,
 Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb.
Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.

While on sweet grass her bleating charge does lie,
 Our happy lover feeds upon her eye. Roscommon.

 Why abodest thou among the sheepfolds, to hear the bleat- ings of the flocks? Judges, v. 16.

BLEB. † n. s. [blaen, to swell, Germ.] A blister,
Skinner. In the north of England, a bleb means a bubble. See BLOB.

Experiments — of producing cold by the dissolution of several salts; of freezing water without blebs; of a membraneous substance separable from the body by freezing.

Sprat, Hist of the R. Society, p. 224.
 Thick pieces of glass, fit for large optick glasses, are rarely to be had without blebs. Philos. Transactions, No. 4.

BLEB. preferite and particip. [from To bleed.]

BLEE. * n. s. [Sax. bleo, colour.] Colour; complexion. Obsolete. "Bright of blee," which occurs in Chaucer, (Lam. of M. Magdaleine, v. 391.) is frequent in our old ballads.

To BLEED. v. n. pret. I bled; I have bled. [blesan,
Saxon.]

1. To lose blood; to run with blood.
 I bled inwardly for my lord. Shakspeare.

Bled, bleed, poor country!
 Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure;
 For goodness dare not check thee! Shakspeare.

Many, upon the seeing of others bled, or strangled, or tortured, themselves are ready to faint, as if they bled. Bacon.

2. To die a violent death.
 The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day;
 Had he thy reason, would he skip and play? Pope.

3. To lose blood medicinally; as, he bled for a fever.

4. To drop, as blood. It is applied to any thing that drops from somebody on incision, as blood from an animal.

For me the balm shall bleed and amber flow,
 The coral redden, and the ruby glow. Pope.

To BLEED. v. a. To let blood; to take blood from.

That from a patriot of distinguish'd note,
 Have bled and purg'd me to a simple vote. Pope.

BLEIT. } adj. Bashful. It is used in Scotland, and BLATE. } the bordering counties.

To BLEMISH. † v. a. [from blame, Junius; from
'bleme, white, Fr. Skinner; or rather from an old
Fr. verb blesmer. See BLEMISH, in Kelham, Norm.
Dict. blesmys, v. a. broken.]

1. To mark with any deformity.

B L E

Likelier that my outward face might have been disguised, than that the face of so excellent a mind could have been thus blemished. Sidney.

2. To defame; to tarnish, with respect to reputation.

Not that my verse would blemish all the fair; But yet if some he bad, 'tis wisdom to beware. Dryden.

Those, who, by concerted defamations, endeavour to blemish his character, incur the complicated guilt of slander and perjury. Addison.

BLEMISH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A mark of deformity; a scar; a diminution of beauty.

As he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again. Leviticus, xxiv. 20.

Open it so from the eyelid, that you divide not that; for, in so doing, you will leave a remediless blemish. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. Reproach; disgrace; imputation.

That you have been earnest, should be no blemish or discredit at all unto you. Hooker.

And if we shall neglect to propagate these blessed dispositions, what others can undertake it, without some blemish to us, some reflection on our negligence? Spral.

None more industriously publish the blemishes of an extraordinary reputation, than such as lie open to the same censures; raising applause to themselves, for resembling a person of an exalted reputation, though in the blameable parts of his character. Addison.

3. A soil; turpitude; taint; deformity.

First shall virtue be vice, and beauty be counted a blemish, Ere that I leave with song of praise her praise to solemnize. Sidney.

Live thou, and to thy mother dead attest, That clear she died from blemish criminal. Spenser, F. Q.

Is conformity with Rome a blemish unto the church of England, and unto churches abroad an ornament? Hooker.

Not a hair perish'd:

On their sustaining garments not a blemish, But fresher than before. Shakspeare.

Evadne's husband! 'Tis a fault

To love, a blemish to my thought. Waller.

That your duty may no blemish take,

I will myself your father's captive make. Dryden.

Each a birth as this is capable of making a beauty, as well as a blemish, the subject of derision. Addison.

BLEMISHLESS. \ adj.* [from blemish and less.] Without blemish or spot.

A life in all so blemishless. Filliam's Lusoria, xxxvii.

BLEMISHMENT. \ n. s.* [old Fr. blemissement, Kelham's Norm. Dict.] Disgrace.

The one seeketh the reformation of him, whom he impeacheth; the other worketh, as much as may be, his ignominy and blemishment. Bp. Morton's Discharge, p. 193.

For dread of blame, and honour's blemishment.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 36.

To BLEND. † v. n. To shrink; to start back; to give way; not used, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites the authority only of Shakspeare. It is not, however, peculiar to him; and an excellent writer of modern times authorises its present use. Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. It resembles to blink so nearly, as to shew that it is a corruption of that word. Iceland. blinka, Germ. blinkeln, Dan. blinke n. to twinkle with the eye; hence to blink, and in our northern language blend; whence to blend, to start as quickly as the twinkle of an eye. Teut. blencke. See BLEND.

I'll observe his looks;

I'll tent him to the quick; if he but blend, I know my course. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Patience herself, what goddess ere she be,

Doth lesser blend at sufferance than I do. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

B L E

Hold you ever to our special drift; Though sometimes you do blend from this to that, As cause doth minister. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

I know his people

Are of his own choice men, that will not totter, Nor blend much at a bullet. Beaumont and Fl. Pilgrim.

[They] were not afraid steadily to look in the face of that aring and dazzling influence, at which the eyes of eagles bleached. Burke, Speech on American Taxation

To BLEND. v. a. To hinder; to obstruct. Not used.

The rebels besieged them, winning the even ground on the top, by carrying up great trusses of hay before them, to blend the defendants sight, and dead their shot. Carew.

BLEND. \ n. s.* [Teut. blencke.] A start.

These blendes gave my heart another youth.

Shakspeare, Sonn. 110.

BLENDER. \ n. s.* [from blend.] That which may frighten, or cause to start.

The good husbände, when he hath sowed his ground, setteth up cloughtes, or thredes, which some call shayles, some blendhars, or other like shews, to feare away birdes.

Sir T. Elyot's Governour, fol. 72.

I feel the old man's master'd by much passion, And too high rackt, which makes him o'ershoot all His valour should direct at, and hurt those That stand by but as blendhars.

Beaumont and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage, ii. 1.

To BLEND. † v. q. preter. I *blend*d; anciently, blent. [blendan, Saxon.]

1. To mingle together.

'Tis beauty truly blend, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning hand hath laid on.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

The mistion taught by the ancients is too slight or gross; for bodies mixed according to their hypothesis, would not appear such to the acute eyes of a lynx, who would discern the elements, if they were no otherwise mingled, than but *blend*d but not united. Boyle.

He had his calmer influence, and his mien Did love and majesty together blend.

Dryden.

The grave, where even the great find rest,

And *blend*d lie the oppressor and the oppress'd. Pope.

2. To confound.

The moon should wander from her beaten way, the times and seasons of the year blend themselves by disorderd and confused mixture. Hooker.

Then shall the new year's joy forth freshly send, Into the glooming world, his gladsome ray; And all these storms, which now his beauty blend, Shall turne to calms, and tymely cleare away.

Spenser, Sonn. lxii.

3. To pollute; to spoil; to corrupt. This signification was anciently much in use, but is now wholly obsolete.

Regard of worldly muck doth foully blend,

And low abase, the high heroick spirit. Spenser, F. Q.

The whilst thy Kingdom from thy head is rent,

And thy throne royal with dishonour blend.

Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

4. To blind. [Sax. blendian.] The first of the following examples has been given by Dr. Johnson under the preceding definition; but it clearly belongs to this; of which definition, however, no notice occurs in Dr. Johnson's work.

Which when he saw, he burnt with jealous fire;

The eye of reason was with rage *blend*d. Spenser, F. Q.

O horrible enchantment, that did him so blend!

What hath thy eye-sight *blend*d? Spenser, F. Q. Fairfax, Tasso.

BLENDER. † n. s. [from To blend.] The person that mingles. Sherwood.

BLENT. The obsolete participle of blend. See BLEND.

To BLESS. † v. a. preterite and participle, blessed or blest. [bleſſian, Saxon.]

1. To make happy; to prosper; to make successful.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain of heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice blest;
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes. Shakspeare.

Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blest time: for, from this instant,
There's nothing serious in mortality. Shakspeare.

This kingdom enjoyed the greatest calm, and the fullest measure of felicity, that any people, in any age, for so long time together, have been blest with. Clarendon.

Happy this isle, with such a hero blest;
What virtue dwells not in his loyal breast? Waller.

In vain with folding arms the youth assay'd
To stop her flight, and strain the flying shade;
But she return'd no more, to bless his longing eyes. Dryden.

O hospitable Jove! we thus invoke,
Bless to both nations this auspicious hour. Dryden.

2. To wish happiness to another; to pronounce a blessing upon him.

And this is the blessing wherewith Moses the man of God
blest the children of Israel, before his death. Deut. xxxiii. 1.

3. To consecrate by a prayer.

He blest, and brake, and gave the loaves. St. Matt. xiv. 19.

4. To praise; to glorify for benefits received; to celebrate.

Unto us there is one only guide of all agents natural, and he both the creator and worker of all in all, alone to be blest, adored, and honoured by all for ever. Hooker, i. § 3.

But blest be that great pow'r, that bath us blest'd
With longer life than earth and heav'n can have. Davies.

5. It seems, in one place of Spenser, to signify the same as to wave; to brandish; to flourish. This signification is taken from an old rite of our Romish ancestors, who blessing a field directed their hands in quick succession to all parts of it, Dr. Johnson says. But this is certainly a mistaken account here. Spenser means by the verb bless, to blaze, from the Goth. blys. See BLAZE and BRAND. The ancients formed their swords in imitation of a flaming fire. Milton describes Hell as illuminated by the sudden blaze of the drawn and brandished swords of the fallen angels. See also G. Douglas, Gloss. blesis for blazes.

Whom when the prince to battle new address,
And threat'ning high his dreadful stroke did see,
His sparkling blade about his head he blest,
And smote off quite his right leg by the knee. Spenser, F. Q.

BLESS us. * interj. An exclamation of surprise.

Cries the stall-reader, Bless us! what a word on
A title-page is this. Milton, Sonn. xi.

BLESSED. † particip. adj. [from 'To bless.']

1. Happy; enjoying felicity.

This accident of Clitophon's taking, had so blesseedly procured their meeting. Sidney.

BLESSEDNESS. † n. s. [from blest.]

1. Happiness; felicity.

Many times have I, leaning to yonder palm, admired the blestness of it, that it could bear love without the sense of pain. Sidney.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blestness of being little. Shakspeare.

2. Sanctity.

Earthlier happy is the rose distill'd,
Than that, which, withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows, lives, and dies in single blestness. Shakspeare.

3. Heavenly felicity.

It is such an one, as, being begun in grace, passes into glory,
blestness, and immortality. South.

4. Divine favour.

Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.
Cometh this blestness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? Rom. iv. 8, 9.

BLESSER. n. s. [from bless.] He that blesses, or gives a blessing; he that makes any thing prosper.

When thou receivest praise, take it indifferently, and return it to God, the giver of the gift, or blesser of the action.
Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

BLESSING. † n. s. [Sax. blætun.]

1. Benediction; a prayer by which happiness is implored for any one.

Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but, contrariwise, blæsing. 1 Pet. iii. 9.

2. A declaration by which happiness is promised in a prophetick and authoritative manner.

The person that is called, kneeleth down before the chair, and the father layeth his hand upon his head, or her head, and giveth the blæsing. Bacon.

3. Any of the means of happiness: a gift; an advantage; a benefit.

In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blæsing in the midst of the land. Isaiah, xix. 24.
Nor are his blæssings to his banks confin'd,
But free, and common, as the sea and wind. Denham.

Political jealousy is very reasonable in persons persuaded of the excellency of their constitution, who believe that they derive from it the most valuable blæssings of society. Adison.

A just and wise magistrate is a blæsing as extensive as the community to which he belongs: a blæsing which includes all other blæssings whatsoever, that relate to this life. Atterbury.

4. Divine favour.

My pretty cousin,
Blæsing upon you! Shakspeare.

I had most need of blæsing, and Amen
Stack in my throat. Shakspeare.

Honour thy father and mother, both in word and deed, that a blæsing may come upon thee from them. Ecclesi. iii. 8.

He shall receive the blæssings from the Lord. Psalms xxix. 5.

5. The Hebrews, under this name, often understood the presents which friends make to one another; in all probability, because they are generally attended with blæssings and compliments both from those who give, and those who receive. Calmet.

And Jacob said, receive my present at my hand; take, I pray thee, my blæsing that is brought to thee. Genesis, xxxiii. 10.

BLEST. preterite and participle. [from bless.] See BLESSED.

Peace to thy gentle shade, and endless rest!

Blest in thy genius, in thy love too blest! Pope.

BLEW. The preterite from blow.

The rest fled into a strong tower, where, seeing no remedy, they desperately blew up themselves, with a great part of the castle, with gunpowder. Knoles.

BLEYME. n. s. An inflammation in the foot of a horse, between the sole and the bone.

Farrier's Dict.

BRIGHT. † n. s. [The etymology unknown, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably from the Sax. blæt, a blast, and, by corruption, blight.
In the dictionary of Coles a blight is defined a blast.]

7. Mildew; according to Skinner; but it seems taken by most writers, in a general sense, for any cause of the failure of fruits.

I complained to the oldest and best gardeners, who often fell into the same misfortune, and esteemed it some blight of the spring. Temple.

2. Any thing nipping, or blasting.

When you come to the proof once, the first blight of frost shall most infallibly strip you of all your glory. L'Estrange.

To BLIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To corrupt with mildew.

This vapour bears up along with it any noxious mineral streams; it then blasts vegetables, blights corn and fruit, and is sometimes injurious even to men. Woodward.

2. In general, to blast; to hinder from fertility.

My country neighbours do not find it impossible to think of a lame horse they have, or their blighted corn, till they have run over in their minds all beings. Locke.

But lest harsh care the lover's place destroy,
And roughly blight the tenderbuds of joy,
Let reason teach.

Lyttelton.

To BLIN. * v. a. [Sax. blinnan, to stop, or leave off; Welsh, blin, tired, weary, from blino, to tire. This word is yet in use, in the north of England. And B. Jonson, in his Sad Shepherd, uses it as a substantive, "withouten blin," i. e. without ceasing, A. ii. S. 6. This old verb is supposed by some to be the parent of our word blind.] To cease, or stop. Obsolete.

For nathemore for that spectacle bad
Did th' other two their cruel vengeance blin.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 80.

BLIND. † adj. [Goth. blinda, blinds; Sax. blins. Supposed by Mr. Horne Tooke to be the past part. of the old Eng. verb blin, to stop. But blind is also an old German word.]

1. Deprived of sight; wanting the sense of seeing; dark.

The blind man that governs his steps by feeling, in defect of eyes, receives advertisement of things through a staff. Digby.

Those other two equal'd with me in fate,
So were I equal'd with them in renown!

Blind Theophrastus, and blind Mæonides;
And Teresias, and Phineas, prophets old.

Milton, P. L.

2. Intellectually dark; unable to judge; ignorant: with to before that which is unseen.

All authors to their own defects are blind;
Hadst thou, but Janus like, a face behind,
To see the people, what splay mouths they make;
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back.

Dryden.

3. Sometimes of.

Blind of the future, and by rage misled,
He pulls his crimes upon his people's head.

Dryden.

4. Unseen; out of the publick view; private: generally with some tendency to some contempt or censure.

To grievous and scandalous inconveniencies they make themselves subject, with whom any blind or secret corner is judged a fit house of common prayer. Hooker.

5. Not easily discernible; hard to find; dark; obscure; unseen.

There be also blind fires under stone, which flame not out; but oil being poured upon them, they flame out. Bacon.

Where else

Shall I inform my unacquainted feet

In the blind mazes of this tangle'd wood? Milton, Com.

How have we wander'd a long dismal night,

Led through blind paths by each deluding light. Roscommon.

Part creeping under ground, their journey blind,

And climbing from below, their fellows meet.

Dryden.

So mariners mistake the promis'd gust,

And, with full sails, on the blind rocks are lost.

Dryden.

A postern door, yet unobserv'd and free,

Join'd by the length of a blind gallery,

To the king's closet led.

Dryden.

6. Blind Vessels. [with chymists.] Such as have no opening but on one side.

To BLIND. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make blind; to deprive of sight.

You trouble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes!

Shakespeare.

Of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it. Samuel, xii. 3.

A blind guide is certainly a great mischief; but a guide that blinds those whom he should lead, is undoubtedly a much greater. South.

2. To darken; to obscure to the eye.

So whirl the seas, such darkness blinds the sky,
That the black night receives a deeper dye.

Dryden.

3. To darken the understanding.

This my long-suffering and my day of grace
They who neglect and scorn, shall never taste;
But hard be harden'd, blind be blinded more.

Milton, P. L.

4. To obscure to the understanding.

The state of the controversy between us he endeavour'd, with all his art, to blind and confound.

Stirlingfleet.

5. To eclipse.

Thursil her beauty all the rest did blind,
That she alone seem'd worthy of my love.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Eclog. 6.

BLIND. † n. s.

1. Something to hinder the sight.

Hardly any thing in our conversation is pure and genuine; civility casts a blind over the duty, under some customary words. L'Estrange.

2. Something to mislead the eye, or the understanding.

These discourses set an opposition between his commands and decrees; making the one a blind for the execution of the other. Devo of Piety.

3. A hiding place.

So, when the watchful shepherd, from the blind,
Wounds with a random shaft the careless hind.

Dryden, Æneid, 4.

To BLINDFOLD. v. a. [from blind and fold.] To hinder from seeing, by blinding the eyes.

When they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face. Luke.

BLINDFOLD. adj. [from the verb.] Having the eyes covered.

And oft himself he chanc'd to hurt unawares,
Whilst reason, blent through passion, nought desier'd,

But, as a blindfold bull, at random fares,
And where he hits, nought knows, and where he hurts, nought cares.

Spenser, F. Q.

Who blindfold walks upon a river's brim,
When he should see, has he deserv'd to swim?

Dryden.

When lots are shuffled together, or a man blindfold casts a dye, what reason can he have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black? South.

The women will look into the state of the nation with their own eyes, and be no longer led blindfold by a male legislature.

Addison, Freeholder.

BLINDLY. † adv. [Sax. blundlice.]

1. Without sight.

Avarice, pride, falsehood, lie undiscerned and blindly in us, even to the age of blindness. Browne, Chr. Mor. P. 2. sect. 15.

2. Implicitly; without examination.

The old king, after a long debate,
By his imperious mistress blindly led,

Has given Cydaria to Orbellan's bed. Dryden.

How ready zeal for interest and party, is to charge atheism on those, who will not, without examining, submit, and blindly swallow their nonsense. Locke.

3. Without judgement or direction.

How seas and earth, and air, and active flame,
Fell through the mighty void; and, in their fall,

Were blindly gather'd in this goodly ball.

Dryden.

BLINDMAN'S BUFF. † n. s. A play in which some one is to have his eyes covered, and hunt out the rest of the company. Originally written blindman-buff.

I am led up and down like a tame ass; my light's out,
And I grope up and down like blind-man-buff.

Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.

Disguis'd in all the mask of night,
We left our champion on his flight;
At blindman's buff to grope his way,
In equal fear of night and day.

Hudibras.

He imagines I shut my eyes again; but surely he fancies I play at blindman's buff with him; for he thinks I never have my eyes open.

Stillingfleet.

BLINDNESS. † n. s. [Sax. blindneſſe.]

1. Want of sight.

I will smite every house of the people with blindness.

Zechariah, xii. 4.

2. Ignorance; intellectual darkness.

All the rest as born of savage brood,
But with base thoughts are into blindness led,
And kept from looking on the lightsome day.

Spenser.

Nor can we call it choice, when what we chuse,
Folly and blindness only could refuse.

Denham.

When-o'er we would proceed beyond these simple ideas, we fall presently into darkness and difficulties, and can discover nothing farther but our own blindness and ignorance.

Locke.

BLINDNETTLE. n. s. [scrofularia.] A plant.

BLINDSIDE. n. s. [from blind and side.] Weakness;
foible; weak part.

He is too great a lover of himself; this is one of his blind- sides; the best of men, I fear, are not without them.

Swift.

BLINDWORM. n. s. [cecilia, from blind and worm.]

A small viper, called likewise a slow worm; believed not to be venomous.

You spotted snakes, with double tongue,
Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen;
Newts and blindworms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen.

Shakespeare.

The greater slow worm, called also the blindworm, is commonly thought to be blind, because of the littleness of his eyes.

Grew.

To BLINK. † v. n. [blincken, Danish; blinka, Iceland. to twinkle. See To BLEND.]

1. To wink, or twinkle with the eyes.

So politick, as if one eye
Upon the other were a spy;
That to trepan the one to think
The other blind, both strove to blink.

Hudibras.

2. To see obscurely.

What's here! the portrait of a blinking ideot.

Sweet and lovely wall,

Shew me thy chink, to blink through with mine eye.

Shakespeare, Midsum. Night's Dream.

His figure such as might his soul proclaim;

One eye was blinking, and one leg was lame.

Pope.

BLINK. * n. s. [Dan. blink, a glance. See To BLINK.]

A glimpse; a twinkle; a slight view; a glance.

The amorous blinks flee to and fro,
With sugred words that make a show.

Turberville's Songs and Sonets, (1570.)

This is the first blink that ever I had of him: I have heard fame of his wonderfull works, and held it happiness enough for me to have seen his face; and doth he take notice of my person, of my name?

Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 108.

BLINKARD. † n. s. [from blink.]

1. One that has bad eyes.

He that hath such eyes that the liddes cover a great parte of the apple; as, a blinkard, or he that looketh askint.

Burrel's Alvearic.

Brainless blinkards that blow at the cole.

Skelton's Poems, p. 28.

2. Something twinkling.

B L I

In some parts we see many glorious and eminent stars, in others few of any remarkable greatness, and, in some, none but blinkards, and obscure ones.

Hakewill's Apology, p. 237.

BLISS. n. s. [bhjre, Sax. from blidrian, to rejoice.]

1. The highest degree of happiness; blessedness; felicity: generally used of the happiness of blessed souls.

A mighty Saviour hath witnessed of himself, I am the way;
the way that leadeth us from misery into bliss.

Hooker.

Dim sadness did not spare

That time celestial visages; yet, mix'd
With pity, violated not their bliss.

Milton, P. L.

With me

All my redeem'd may dwell, in joy and bliss.

Milton, P. L.

2. Felicity in general.

Condition, circumstance is not the thing;

Bliss is the same in subject or in king.

Pope.

BLISSFUL. adj. [from bliss and full.] Full of joy;
happy in the highest degree.

Yet swimming in that sea of blissful joy,

He nought forgot.

Spenser, F. Q.

The two saddest ingredients in hell, are deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face.

Hammond.

Reaping immortal fruits of joy and love,

Uninterrupted joy, unrivall'd love,

In blissful solitude.

Milton, P. L.

So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,
And steal thyself from life by slow decays.

Pope.

First in these fields I try the silvan strains,

Nor blush to sport in Windsor's blissful plains.

Pope.

BLISSFULLY. † [from blissful.] Happily.

Sherwood.

BLISSFULNESS. † n. s. [from blissful.] Happiness;
fulness of joy.

God is all-sufficient, and incapable of admitting any accesion to his perfect blissfulness.

Bacrow, Sermon, viii.

BLISSLESS. * adj. [from bliss and less.] Without bliss; wanting happiness.

Fruitless for ever may this garden be,
Barren the earth, and blissless whosoever
Imagines not to keep it unmanur'd!

Hudkins, Old Eng. Dram. ii. 109.

To BLISSOM. v. n. To caterwaul: to be lustful. Diet.

BLIST. * In our old language, used for bless'd or blest.

BLIST. * pret. Used for wounded, [from the Fr.
blesser, to cut, wound, or hurt,] by Spenser; and altered from bless, Mr. Mason thinks; asserting however, at the same time, that neither bless nor bliss occur in this sense. Spenser, however, is supported in the usage of blist by a writer soon after his time, which seems to shew that blist is the true word. Obsolete.

The villain —

— With his club him all about so blist,

That he which way to turne him scarcely wist.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 13.

They blist my shoulders with their pines in such sort, as they wholly depriv'd me of my sight and the force of my feet together.

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quixote, i. iii. 1.

BLISTER. n. s. [bluyster, Dutch.]

1. A pustule formed by raising the cuticle from the cutis, and filled with serous blood.

In this state she gallops night by night,
O'er ladies lips, who strait on kisses dream,
Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,

Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are.

I found a great *blist*er drawn by the garlick, but had it cut, which run a good deal of water, but filled again by next night.

Shakespeare.

2. Any swelling made by the separation of a film or skin from the other parts.

Upon the leaves there riseth a tumour like a *blist*er.

To BLISTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To rise in blisters.

Bacon.

If I prove honeymouth, let my tongue blister,
And never to my red look'd anger be
The trumpet any more.

Embrace thy knees with loathing hands,
Which blister when they touch thee.

To BLISTER. v. a.

1. To raise blisters by some hurt, as by a burn, or rubbing.

Look, here comes one, a gentlewoman of mine,
Who falling in the flaws of her own youth,
Hath blister'd her report.

2. To raise blisters with a medical intention.

I blister'd the legs and thighs; but was too late; he died howling.

BLITE. * n. s. [In botany, blitum.] A genus of plants.

BLITHE. † adj. [blīðe, Sax. bleiths, Goth. kind, merciful.] Gay; airy; merry; joyous; sprightly; mirthful.

We have always one eye fix'd upon the countenance of our enemies; and, according to the blithe or heavy aspect thereof, our other eye sheweth some other suitable token either of dislike or approbation.

Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny.

For that fair female troop thou saw'st, that seem'd
Of goddesses, so blithe, so smooth, so gay;
Yet empty of all good.

To whom the wily adder, blithe and glad:

Empress! the way is ready, and not long.

And the milkmaid singeth blithe,

And the mower whets his scythe.

Should he return, that troop so blithe and bold,
Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight.

BLITHEFUL. * adj. [from blithe and full.] Gay.

BLITHELY. † adv. [Sax. blīðelice. Written by one of our oldest poets, blithly.] In a blithe manner.

For many beyn of such manere

That tals and ryms will blithly here.

BLITHENESS. † } n. s. [Sax. blīðnýŕe.] The qual-

BLITHEOMNESS. } lity of being blithe.

BLITHEsome. adj. [from blithe.] Gay; cheerful.

Frosty blasts deface
The blithesome year: trees of their shrivell'd fruits
Are widow'd.

To BLOAT. v. a. [probably from bloxe, which see.]
To swell, or make turgid with wind: it has up, an intensive particle.

His rude essays
Encourage him, and bloat him up with praise,
That he may get more bulk before he dies.

The strutting petticoat smooths all distinctions, levels the mother with the daughter. I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down like bigbellied women.

To BLOAT. v. n. To grow turgid.

If a person of a firm constitution begins to bloat, from being warm grows cold, his fibres grow weak.

BLOAT. adj. Swelled with intemperance; turgid.

The bloat king.

BLOATEDNESS. n. s. [from bloat.] Turgidness;
swelling; tumour.

Lazitude, laziness, bloatedness, and scorbutical spots, are symptoms of weak fibres.

BLOBBER. † n. [from blob; a word used in some counties for a bubble, Dr. Johnson says; but in the example, which he gives, blobber means the sea-animal called a blubber, the urtica marina. See BLUBBER.]

There swimmeth also in the sea a round slimy substance, called a blobber, reputed noisome to the fish.

BLOBBERLIP. n. s. [from blob, or blobber, and lip.]
A thick lip.

They make a wit of their insipid friend,
His blobberlips and beetlebrows commend.

BLOBBLED. } adj. Having welled or thick
BLOBBERLIPPED. } lips.

A blobberlipped shell, seemeth to be a [of mussel. Grew.
His person deformed to the highest deg; flat nosed, and blobberlipped. L'Estrange.

BLOCK. † n. s. [block, Dutch; bloc, Fr.]

1. A heavy piece of timber, rather thick than long.

You can spy a little mote in another man's eye, that cannot see a great block in your own.

Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 201.

2. A mass of matter.

Homer's apothecosis consists of a groupe of figures, cut in the same block of marble, and rising one above another.

3. A massy body.

Small causes are sufficient to make a man uneasy, when great ones are not in the way; for want of a block, he will stumble at a straw.

4. A rude piece of matter: in contempt.

When, by the help of wedges and beetles, an image is cleft out of the trunk of some tree, yet, after the skill of artificers to set forth such a divine block, it cannot one moment secure itself from being eaten by worms.

5. The piece of wood on which hats are formed.

Some old writers use block for the hat itself.

He wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat, it ever changes with the next block.

6. The wood on which criminals are beheaded.

Some guard these traitors to the block of death,

Treason's true bed, and yielder up of breath.

At the instant of his death, having a long beard, after his head was upon the block, he gently drew his beard aside, and said, This hath not offended the king.

I'll drag him thence,

Ev'n from the holy altar to the block.

7. An obstruction; a stop.

Can he ever dream, that the suffering for righteousness sake is our felicity, when he sees us run so from it, that no crime is block enough in our way to stop our flight?

8. A sea term for a pully.

9. A blockhead: a fellow remarkable for stupidity.

The country is a desert, where the good
Gain'd, inhabits not; born's not understood;

There men become beasts and prone to all evils;

In cities, blocks.

What tongueless blocks were they, would they not speak?

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

To BLOCK. v. a. [bloquer, Fr.]

1. To shut up; to inclose, so as to hinder egress; to obstruct.

TO BLOCKADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up by obstruction.

Huge bales of British cloth blockade the door,
A hundred oxen at your levee roar. Pope.

BLO'CKHEAD. n. s. [from block and head.] A stupid fellow; a dolt; a man without parts.

Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will: it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead. Shakspeare.

We idly sit like stupid blockheads.

Our hands committed to our pockets. Hudibras.

A blockhead rubs his thoughtless skull,

And thanks his stars he was not born a fool. Pope.

BLO'CKHEADED. adj. [from blockhead.] Stupid; dull.
Says a blockheaded boy, there are villainous creatures.

L'Estrange.

He cheer'd my sorrows, and, for sums of gold,
The bloodless carcass of my Hector sold.

Dryden, Æneid.

2. Without slaughter.
War brings ruin where it should amend;
But beauty, with a bloodless conquest, finds
A welcome sovereignty in rudest minds.

Waller.

3. Without spirit or activity.
The general's disdain'd

By him one step below; he, by the next;
That next, by him beneath: so every step,
Exampl'd by the first pace that is sick
Of his superiour, grows to an envious fever
Of pale and bloodless emulation.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cressida.

Thou bloodless, brainless fool!

Beaum. and Fl. Double Marriage.

BLO'ODSHED. n. s. [from blood and shed.]

1. The crime of blood, or murder.
Full many mischiefs follow cruel wrath;
Abhor'd bloodshed, and tumultuous strife,
Unmanly murder, and unthrifty scath.
All murders past do stand excus'd in this;
And this so sole, and so unmatchable,
Shall prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest,
Exempl'd by this heinous spectacle.

Spenser, F. Q.

Shakespeare, K. John.

A man, under the transports of a vehement rage, passes a different judgement upon murder and bloodshed, from what he does when his revenge is over. South.

2. Slaughter; waste of life.

So by him Cæsar got the victory,
Through great bloodshed, and many sad assay. Spenser, F. Q.

1. To obliterate; to make writing invisible, by covering it with ink.

You that are king,

Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me, and put his own son in. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Even copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Pope.

A man of the most understanding will find it impossible to make the best use of it, while he writes in constraint, perpetually softening, correcting, or blotting out expressions. Swift.

2. To efface; to erase.

O Bertram, oh! no more my foe but brother:
One act like this blots out a thousand crimes. Dryden.

These simple ideas, offered to the mind, the understanding can no more refuse, nor alter, nor blot out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate, the images which the objects produce. Locke.

3. To make black spots on a paper; to blur.

Heads overfull of matter, be like pens overfull of ink, which will sooner blot than make any fair letter. Ascham.

O sweet Portia!

Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words
That ever blotted paper. Shakspeare, Mer. of Ven.

4. To disgrace; to disfigure.

Unkneit that threatening unkind brow;
It blots thy beauty, as frost bites the cheeks,
Confounds thy fame. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

He hath been blotted by some to be an epitomist.
Translators of the Bible to the Reader.

My guilt thy growing virtues did defame;
My blackness blotted thy unblemish'd name. Dryden, Æn.

For mercy's sake restrain thy hand,
Blot not thy innocence with guiltless blood. Rowe.

5. To darken.

He sung how earth blots the moon's gilded wane,
Whilst foolish men beat sounding brass in vain. Cowley.

BLOT. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An obliteration of something written.

Let flames on your unlucky papers prey,
Your wars, your loves, your praises, be forgot,
And make of all an universal blot. Dryden, Juvenal.

2. An extinction of light.

The dragon womb
Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom,
And makes one blot of all the air. Milton, Com. v. 133.

3. A blur; a spot upon paper.

4. A spot in reputation; a stain; a disgrace; a reproach.

Make known,

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
That hath deprived me. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A lie is a foul blot in a man; yet it is continually in the mouth of the untaught. Eccles. xx. 24.

A disappointed hope, a blot of honour, a strain of conscience, an unfortunate love, will serve the turn. Temple.

5. [At backgammon.] When a single man lies open to be taken up; whence to hit a blot.

He is too great a master of his art, to make a blot which may so easily be hit. Dryden, Ded. Æneid.

BLOTCH. n. s. [from blot.] A spot or pustule upon the skin.

Spots and blotches, of several colours and figures, straggling over the body; some are red, others yellow, or black. Harvey.

To BLOTCH, or BLATCH. * v. a. [perhaps from blot.] Blatchy, in Gloucestershire, is black or dirty.] To blacken.

If no man can like to be smutted and blatched in his face, let us learn much more to detest the spots and blots of the soul. Barnard, Trans. of Beza's Sermons, p. 195.

To BLOTE.† v. a. To smoke, or dry by the smoke; as bloted herrings, or red herrings. Sherwood.
BLOTTING.* n. s. [from blot.] The making spots or marks on paper.

Bp. Taylor, Artij. Handsomeness, p. 35.

BLOW.† n. s. [blowe, Dutch, from blaewen, or blowen, Teut. to strike.]

1. The act of striking.
2. A stroke.

A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows,

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A woman's tongue,

That gives not half so great a blow to the ear,

As will a chesnut. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Words of great contempt, commonly finding a return of equal scorn, blows were fastened upon the most pragmatical of the crew. Clarendon.

3. The fatal stroke; the stroke of death.

As usage your thirst of blood, and strike the blow. Dryden.

4. An act of hostility; blows are used for combat or war.

Be most abated captives to some nation

That won you without blows.

Shakspeare.

Unarm'd if I should go,

What hope of mercy from this dreadful foe,

But woman-like to fall, and fall without a blow.

Pope.

5. A sudden calamity; an unexpected evil.

The virgin daughter of my people is broken with a very grievous blow.

Jerem. xiv. 17.

To all but thee in fits he seem'd to go,

And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow.

Parrot.

6. A single action; a sudden event.

Every year they gain a victory, and a town; but if they are once defeated, they lose a province at a blow.

Dryden.

7. The act of a fly, by which she lodges eggs in flesh.

I much fear, lest with the blows of flies,

His brass inflicted wounds are fill'd.

Chapman, Iliad.

BLOW.* n. s. [from the Sax. blapan, to bloom.] Bloom; and sometimes figuratively used: as, in the full bloom of honour.

He believed he could shew me such a blow of tulips, as was not to be matched in the whole country. Tatler, No. 218.

To BLOW.† v. n. pret. blew; particip. pass. blown. [Sax. blapan, blapan, to blow as the wind blows.]

1. To make a current of air.

At his sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the south wind bloweth.

Eccles. xliii. 16.

Fruits, for long keeping, gather before they are full ripe, and in a dry day, towards noon, and when the wind bloweth not south; and when the moon is in decrease. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

By the fragrant winds that blow

O'er the Elysian flowers.

Pope, St. Cecilia.

2. This word is used sometimes impersonally with it.

It blew a terrible tempest at sea once, and there was one seaman praying.

L' Estrange.

If it blows a happy gale, we must set up all our sails, though it sometimes happens, that our natural heat is more powerful than our care and correctness. Dryden.

3. To pant; to puff; to be breathless.

Here's Mrs. Page at the door, sweating and blowing, and looking wildly.

Shakspeare.

Each aking nerve refuse the lance to throw, And each spent courser at the chariot blow.

Pope.

4. To breathe.

Says the satyr, if you have gotten a trick of blowing hot and cold out of the same mouth, 'Pre c'en done with ye.

L' Estrange.

5. To sound with being blown.

Nor with less dread the loud

Ethereal trumpet from on high can blow.

Milton, ♀. L.

There let the pealing organ blow,

To the full-voic'd quire below.

Milton, Il Pens.

6. To sound, or play musically by wind.

The priests shall blow with the trumpets.

Joshua, vi. 4.

7. To blow over. To pass away without effect.

Storms, though they blow over divers times, yet may fall at last.

Bacon, Essays.

When the storm is blown over,

How blest is the swain,

Who begins to discover

An end of his pain.

Granville.

But those clouds being now happily blown over, and our sun clearly shining out again, I have recovered the relapse.

Denham.

8. To blow up. To fly into the air by the force of gunpowder.

On the next day, some of the enemy's magazines blew up; and it is thought they were destroyed on purpose by some of their men.

Tatler, No. 59.

To BLOW. v. a.

1. To drive by the force of the wind; with a particle to fix the meaning.

Though you unty the winds,

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,

Though castle topple on their warders heads.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Fair daughter, blow away those mists and clouds,

And let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre.

Denham.

These primitive heirs of the christian church, could not so easily blow off the doctrine of passive obedience.

South.

2. To inflame with wind.

I have created the smith that bloweth the coals. Isaiah, liv. 16.

A fire not blown shall consume him.

Job, xx. 26.

3. To swell; to puff into size.

No blown ambition doth our arms incite,

But, love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. To form into shape by the breath.

Spherical bubbles, that boys sometimes blow with water, to which soap hath given a tenacity.

Boyle.

5. To sound an instrument of wind music.

Blow the trumpet among the nations.

Jeremiah, li. 27.

Where the bright seraphim, in burning row,

Their loud uplifted angel trumpets blow.

Milton, Ode.

6. To warm with the breath.

When isicles hang by the wall,

And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,

And Tom bears logs into the hall,

And milk comes frozen home in pail.

Shakspeare.

7. To spread by report.

But never was there man of his degree,

So much extrem'd, so well belov'd as he:

So gentle of condition was he known,

That through the court his courtesy was blown.

Dryden.

8. To blow out. To extinguish by wind or the breath.

Your breath first kindled the dead coal of war,

And brought in matter, that should feed this fire:

And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out,

With that same weak wind which enkindled it.

Shakspeare.

Moon, slip behind some cloud, some tempest rise,

And blow out all the stars that light the skies.

Dryden.

9. To blow up. To raise or swell with breath.

A plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder.

Shakspeare.

Before we had exhausted the receiver, the bladder appeared as full as if blown up with a quill.

Boyle.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,

Upon your stubborn usage of the pope.

Shakspeare.

An empty bladder gravitates no more than when blown up, but somewhat less; yet descends more easily, because with less resistance.

Grew.

10. To blow up. To inflate with pride.

- Blown up* with the conceit of his merit, he did not think he had received good measure from the king. Bacon.
11. To blow up. To kindle.
His presence soon blows up the unkindly fight,
And his loud guns speak thick like angry men. Dryden.
12. To blow up. To move by affatus.
When the mind finds herself very much inflamed with devotion, she is too much inclined to think that it is blown up with something divine within herself. Addison.
13. To blow up. To burst with gunpowder; to raise into the air.
The captains hoping by a mine, to gain the city, approached with soldiers ready to enter upon blowing up of the mine. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.
Their chief blown up in air, not waves inspir'd,
To which his pride presum'd to give the law. Dryden.
Not far from the said well, blowing up a rock, he formerly observed some of these. Woodward.
14. To infect with the eggs of flies. I know not how this sense belongs to the word.
I would no more endure
This wooden slavery, than I would suffer
The flesh-fly blow my mouth. Shakspear
Rather at Nilus' mud
Lay me stark naked, and let the water-flies
Blow me into abhorring. Shakspear
15. To blow upon. To make stale.
I am wonderfully pleased, when I meet with any passage in an old Greek or Latin author, that is not blown upon, and which I have never met with in any quotation. Addison.
He will whisper an intrigue that is not yet blown upon by common fame. Addison.
- To BLOW.* v. n. [blopan, Saxon.] To bloom; to blossom.
We lose the prime to mark how spring
Our tended plants, how blows the citron grove,
What drops the myrrh, and what the balmy reed. Milton, P. L.
This royal fair
Shall, when the blossom of her beauty's blown,
See her great brother on the British throne. Waller.
Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay, Past.
For thee Idume's spicy forests blow,
And seeds of gold in Ophir's mountains glow. Pope.
- To BLOW.* v. a.* To cause to blossom.
For these Favonius here shall blow
New flowers. B. Jonson, Mask at Highgate.
Iris there with humid bow
Waters the odorous banks, that blow
Flowers of more mingled hue
Than her purfled scarf can shew. Milton, Com. v. 993.
- BLO'WER.* n. s.* [from blow.]
1. A melter of tin.
Add his care and cost in buying wood, and in fetching the same to the blowing-house, together with the blowers, two or three months extreme and encreasing labour. Carew.
2. He that bloweth what produces sound; as an organ-blower.
An instrument over-winded is tuned wrong,
Blame none but the blower, on him it is long. Skellum's Poems, p. 291.
3. That which draws up the fire in a stove or chimney; usually made of iron or tin.
4. He which storms or blows up; a military phrase.
Underminers and blowers up. Shakspeare, All's well that ends well.
- BLO'WING.* n. s.* [Sax. blapung.] The act of blowing; as, the blowing of the wind.
- BLOWN.* The participle passive of blow.
All the sparks of virtue, which nature had kindled in them, were so blown to give forth their uttermost heat, that justly it may be affirmed, they inflamed the affections of all that knew them. Sidney.
The trumpets sleep, while cheerful horns are blown,
And arms employ'd on birds and beasts alone. Pope.

- BLO'WBALL.* n. s.* The herb dandelion in seed, so called from its round head of down, which children often endeavour to blow away at one puff.
Her treading would not bend a blade of grass,
Or shake the downy blow-ball from its stalk. B. Jonson, Sad Sheph. i. 1.
- BLO'WPIPE.* n. s.* [from blow and pipe.] A tube used by glassmen, jewellers, and other artificers.
- BLO'WPOINT. n. s.* A child's play, perhaps like push-pin.
Shortly boys shall not play
At spancounter or blowpoint, but shall pay Toll to some courtier. Duane.
- BLOWTH.* n. s.* [from blow, that which bloweth.]
Bloom, or blossom.
Ambition and covetousness being but green, and newly grown up, the seeds and effects were as yet but potential, and in the blowth and bud. Ralegh.
- BLOWZE.* n. s.* A ruddy fat-faced wench, Dr. Johnson says; but nothing more. Hall, in his Satires, writes the word blowzse, and the author of Titus Andronicus connects it with blossom; which may direct us for the etymology to blow; either in the sense applied to Shakspeare's Mrs. Page, on an accidental occasion, "sweating, and blowing, and looking wildly;" or in the meaning of to swell out, like a blossom. Mock pastoral has adopted Blowzindas, and Blowzabels, in modern times, as its heroines.
Nor list I sonnet of my mistress' face,
To paint some blowesse with a borrow'd grace. Bp. Hall's Satires, i. 1.
Sweet blowse, you are a beauteous blossom sure! Tu. Andron. iv. 2.
I had rather marry a fair one, and put it to the hazard, than be troubled with a blowze. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 631.
- BLO'WZY. adj.* [from blowze.] Sun burnt; high coloured.
*To BLUB.* v. a.* [This is another variation of the old word bleb, which we also find in blob. See BLEB.] To swell.
My face was blown and blub'd with dropsy wan. Mir. for Magistrates, p. 112.
- BLU'BBER. n. s.* [See BLOB.] The part of a whale that contains the oil.
- BLU'BBER.* n. s.* [from blub. See BLEB, and BLOBBER.] The swollen appearance of the animal accounts for the name.] A denomination given by our navigators to the urtica marina, or sea-nettle. Philos. Trans. No. 349. In blobber, the example from Carew shews the word to be very old in our language.
- To BLU'BBER. v. n.* [from the noun.] To weep in such a manner as to swell the cheeks.
Even so lies she,
Blubb'ring and weeping, weeping and blubb'ring. Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet.
A thief came to a boy that was blubbering by the side of a well, and asked what he cried for. L'Estrange.
Soon as Glumdaleitch miss'd her pleasing care,
She wept, she blubber'd, and she tore her hair. Swift.
- To BLU'BBER. v. a.* To swell the cheeks with weeping.
Fair streams represent unto me my blubber'd face; let tears procure your stay. Sidney.
The wild wood gods arriv'd in the place,
There find the virgin doleful, desolate,
With ruffled raiment, and fair blubber'd face,
As her outrageous foe had left her late. Spenser, F. Q.
Tir'd with the search, not finding what she seeks,
With cruel blows she pounds her blubber'd cheeks. Dryden.

Was so profan'd, to touch that blubber'd lip. Dryden.

BLUDGEON. n. s. A short stick, with one end loaded, used as an offensive weapon.

BLUE. † adj. [blæp, Sax. bleu, Fr. old Fr. bloi, blou; low Lat. bluius, blatum.] One of the seven original colours.

There's gold, and here,
My blue lips to kiss; a hand that kings
Have lips and trembled kissing. Shakespeare.

Where fires thou find'st unrank'd, and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry. Shakespeare.

O coward conscience! how dost thou afflict me?
The lights burn blue. — Is it not dead midnight!
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh. Shakespeare.

Why does one climate, and one soil endure
The blushing poppy with a crimson hue;
Yet leave the lily pale, and tinge the violet blue? Prior.
There was scarce any other colour sensible, besides red and blue; only the blues, and principally the second blue, inclined a little to green. Newton.

BLUEBOTTLE. n. s. [cyamus; from blue and bottle.]

1. A flower of the bell shape; a species of bottle-flower.

If you put bluebottles, or other blue flowers, into an ant-hill, they will be stained with red; because the ants thrust their stings, and instil into them their stinging liquor. Raj.

2. A fly with a large blue belly.

Say, sire of insects, mighty Sol,
A fly upon the chariot-pole
Cries out, What blue-bottle alive
Did ever with such fury drive? Prior.

BLUE-EYED. adj. [from blue and eye.] Having blue eyes.

Rise then, fair blue-ey'd maid, rise and discover
Thy silver brow, and meet thy golden lover. Crashaw.
Nor to the temple was she gone, to move,
With prayers, the blue-ey'd progeny of Jove. Dryden.

BLUE-HAIRED. adj. [from blue and hair.] Having blue hair.

This place,
The greatest and the best of all the main,
He quarters to his blue-hair'd deities. Milton, Com.

BLUELY. † adv. [from blue.] With a blue colour.

Their colours' changeable variety,
First clear and white, then yellow, after red,
Then bluey pale, then duller still, till after dead.

This squire he dropp'd his pen full soon,
While as the light burnt bluey. Swift.

BLUENESS. † n. s. [from blue.]

1. The quality of being blue.

In a moment our liquor may be deprived of its blueness, and restored to it again, by the affusion of a few drops of liquours.
Boyle on Colours.

2. Applied to a wound, or bruise, means the livid appearance of it.

The blueness of a wound cleanseth away evil. Prov. xx. 30.
Nothing but the blueness of your wounds to boast on.
Fellham, Sermon on Eccl. ii. 11.

BLUE-VEINED. * adj. [from blue and vein.] Having blue streaks or veins.

These blue-vein'd violets whereon we lean.
Shakespeare, Ven. and Adonis.

BLUFF. † adj.

1. Big; surly; blustering.

Like those whom stature did to crowns prefer,
Black-brow'd and bluff, like Homer's Jupiter. Dryden.

2. Not pointed; obtuse. So a bluff-headed ship, in our naval language, is opposed to one that is sharp-headed.

There is also at Cabo Corso a publick Fetish, the guardian of them all; and that is the rock Tabra, a bluff peninsular prominence that juts out from the bottom of the cliff the castle stands on, making a sort of cover for landing, but so unsafe, as frequently to expose the boats and people to danger, the sea breaking over with great force. Atkins, Voyage, p. 102.

BLUFFNESS. * n. s. [from bluff.] Surliness.

A remarkable bluffness of face, a loud voice, and a masculine air. The World, No. 188.

BLUISH. adj. [from blue.] Blue in a small degree.

Side sleeves and skirts, round underborne, with a bluish tinsel. Shakespeare.

At last, as far as I could cast my eyes
Upon the sea, somewhat, methought, did rise
Like bluish mist. Dryden.

Here, in full light, the russet plains extend,
There, wrapt in clouds, the bluish hills ascend. Pope.

BLUISHNESS. n. s. [from blue.] A small degree of blue colour.

I could make, with crude copper, a solution without the bluishness, that is wont to accompany its vulgar solutions. Boyle.

from blind.] Serenius gives the old Goth. blundur, sleep.]

1. To mistake grossly; to err very widely; to mistake stupidly. It is a word implying contempt.

It is one thing to forget matter of fact, and another to blunder upon the reason of it. L'Estrange.

The grandees and giants in knowledge, who laughed at all besides themselves, as barbarous and insignificant, yet blun-dered, and stumbled, about their principal concern. South.

2. To flounder; to stumble.

He, who now to sense, now nonsense leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning. Pope.

TO BLUNDER. † v. a.

1. To mix foolishly or blindly.

He seems to understand no difference between titles of respect and acts of worship; between expressions of esteem and devotion; between religious and civil worship; for he blunders and confounds all these together; and whatever proves one, he thinks, proves all the rest. Stillington.

2. To make to blunder or confound.

To shuffle and digress so as by any means whatsoever to blunder an adversary. Dillon on the Resurrect. p. 63.

To darken or blunder the cause. Ibid. p. 115.

BLUNDER. n. s. [from the verb.] A gross or shameful mistake.

It was the advice of Schomberg to an historian, that he should avoid being particular in the drawing up of an army, and other circumstances in the day of battle; for that he had observed notorious blunders and absurdities committed by writers not conversant in the art of war. Addison.

It is our own ignorance that makes us charge those works of the Almighty, as defects or blunders, as ill-contrived or ill-made.
Derham, Phys. Theol.

BLUNDERBUSS. n. s. [from blunder.] A gun that is charged with many bullets, so that, without any exact aim, there is a chance of hitting the mark.

There are blunderbusses in every loop-hole, that go off on their own accord, at the squeaking of a riddle. Dryden.

BLUNDERER. n. s. [from blunder.] A man apt to commit blunders; a blockhead.

Another sort of judges will decide in favour of an author, or will pronounce him a mere blunderer, according to the company they have kept. Watts.

BLUNDERHEAD. n. s. [from blunder and head.] A stupid fellow.

At the rate of this thick-skulled blunderhead, every plow-jobber shall take upon him to read upon divinity. L'Estrange.

BLUNDERINGLY. * adv. [from blunder.] In a blundering manner.

B L U

You observe of the Easterns, that they have done what they did in that kind rather ignorantly, supinely, or blunderingly, than out of a premeditated design to cover falsehood.

Lewis, Dissert. prefir. Hist. of P. Bibles, p. ix.

BLUNT. † adj. [etymology uncertain, Dr. Johnson says. But Kiliap, in his Teut. Dict. in plomp, asserts that word to be the parent of our blunt. The Teut. word means dull, stupid, leaden. Minshew mentions also the Dutch plomb, from the Lat. plumbens, leaden. The Swedes use plump in the same way.]

1. Dull on the edge or point; not sharp.

Thanks to that beauty, which can give an edge to the bluntest swords. Sidney, b. i.

If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength. Ecclesiastes, x. 10.

2. Dull in understanding; not quick.

Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross, By some sly trick, blunt Thurio's dull proceeding. Shakespeare.

3. Rough; not delicate; not civil.

'Tis not enough your counsel still be true; Blunt truths more mischief than nice falsehoods do. Pope.

4. Abrupt; not elegant.

To use too many circumstances, ere one come to the matter, is wearisome; to use none at all, is blunt. Baron.

5. Hard to penetrate. This use is improper.

I find my heart hardened and blunt to new impressions; it will scarce receive or retain affections of yesterday. Pope.

To BLUNT. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dull the edge or point.

So sick'n waning moons too near the sun, And blunt their crescents on the edge of day. Dryden.

Earthly limbs, and gross alloy, Blunt not the beams of heav'n, and edge of day. Dryden.

He had such things to urge against our marriage, As, now declar'd, would blunt my sword in battle, And dastardize my courage. Dryden.

2. To repress, or weaken any appetite, desire, or power of the mind.

Blunt not his love; Nor lose the good advantage of his grace, By seeming cold. Shakespeare.

BLUNTING. * n. s. [from blunt.] Restraint.

Not impediments or bluntings, but rather as whetstones, to set an edge on our desires after higher and more permanent beauty. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 73.

BLUNTLY. adv. [from blunt.]

1. In a blunt manner; without sharpness.

2. Coarsely; plainly; roughly.

I can keep honest counsels, marr a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly. Shakespeare.

A man of honest blood, Who to his wife, before the time assign'd For childbirth came, thus bluntly spoke his mind. Dryden.

BLUNTNESS. n. s. [from blunt.]

1. Want of edge or point; dulness; obtuseness; want of sharpness.

The crafty boy, that had full oft essay'd To pierce my stubborn and resisting breast, But still the bluntness of his darts betray'd. Suckling.

2. Coarseness; roughness of manners; rude sincerity.

His silence grew wit, his bluntness integrity, his beastly ignorance, virtuous simplicity. Sidney.
Manage disputes with civility; whence some readers will be assisted to discern a difference betwixt bluntness of speech and strength of reason. Boyle.

False friends, his deadliest foes, could find no way, But shows of honest bluntness to betray. Dryden.

BLUNTWITTED. adj. [from blunt and wit.] Dull; stupid.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour. Shakespeare.

BLUR. n. s. [horra, Span. a blot, Skinner.] A blot; a stain; a spot.

Man, once fallen, was nothing but a great blur; a total universal pollution. South.

To BLUR. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To blot; to obscure; without quite effacing.

Such an act, That blurs the grace and blush of modesty, Calls virtue hypocrite. Shakespeare.

Long is it since I saw him; But time hath nothing blur'd those lines of favour, Which then he wore. Shakespeare.

Concerning innate principles, I desire these men to say, whether they can, or cannot, by education and custom, be blurred and blotted out! Locke.

2. To blot; to stain; to sully.

Sarcasms may eclipse thine own, But cannot blur my lost renown. Hudibras, i. 3.

To BLURT. † v. a. [without etymology.] To speak inadvertently; to let fly without thinking: commonly with out intensive, Dr. Johnson says; and sometimes, he might have added, with at. Blurt was, in former times, an interjection of contempt. Blurt, pish! Sherwood.

None would look on her But cast their gazes on Marina's face; Whilst ours was blurted at, and held a malkin, Not worth the time of day. Shakespeare, Pericles.

Others cast out bloody and deadly speeches at random, and cannot hold, but blurt out those words, which afterwards they are forced to eat. Hakewell.

They had some belief of a Deity, which they, upon surprisal, thus blurt out. Government of the Tongue.

They blush if they blurt out, ere well aware, A swan is white, or Queensbury is fair. Young.

To BLUSH. † v. n. [blosen, Dutch, or perhaps from the Sax. ablyjan, to blush, ablyjung, a blush.]

1. To betray shame or confusion, by a red colour on the cheek or forehead.

I have mark'd A thousand blushing apparitions To start into her face; a thousand innocent shames, In angel whiteness, bear away these blushes. Shakespeare.

I will go wash: And when my face is fair, you shall perceive Whether I blush or no. Shakespeare.

All these things are graceful in a friend's mouth, which are blushing in a man's own. Bacon.

Shame causeth blushing; blushing is the resort of the blood to the face; although blushing will be seen in the whole breast, yet that is but in passage to the face. Bacon.

Blush then, but blush for your destructive silence, That tears your soul. Smith, Phard. and Hip.

2. To carry a red colour, or any soft and bright colour.

To-day he puts forth The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms, And bears his blushing honours thick upon him. Shakespeare.

But here the roses blush so rare, Here the mornings smile so fair, As if neither cloud, nor wind, But would be courteous, would be kind. Crashaw.

Along those blushing borders, bright with dew. Thomson.

3. It has at before the cause of shame.

He whin'd, and roar'd away your victory, That pages blush'd at him; and men of heart Look'd wond'ring at each other. Shakespeare.

You have not yet lost all your natural modesty, but blush at your vices. Calamy, Sermons.

To BLUSH. † v. a. To make red. Not much used.

Pale and bloodless,

Being all descended to the labouring heart,
Which with the heart there clogs, and ne'er returneth
To blush and beautify the cheek again. Shakespeare.

Old doting Tithon, hold Aurora fast,
And though she blush the day-break from her cheeks,
Conceal her still. Bacon, and W. Wife for a Month.

BLUSH.† n. s. [from the verb, Sax. ablýrunga.]

deserting him, he relapsed into paleness and languour. Harvey on Consumptions.

To BLUSTER.† v. n. [supposed from biast, Sax. blægt, bloegt.]

1. To roar as a storm; to be violent and loud.

Earth his uncouth mother was,
And blustering Æolus his boasted sire. Spenser, F. Q.
So now he storms with many a sturdy stoure;
So now his blustering blast each coast doth scour. Spenser, F. Q.
Can man such follies utter, and be wise;
Which bluster from the tempest of thy mind,
As if thy breast enclosed the eastern wind. Sandys, Job, p. 23.

2. To bully; to puff; to swagger; to be tumultuous.

My heart's too big to bear this, says a blustering fellow: I'll destroy myself. Sir, says the gentleman, here's a dagger at your service: so the humour went off. L'Estrange.
Either he must sink to a downright confession, or must huff and bluster, till perhaps he raise a counter-storm.

Virgil had the majesty of a lawful prince, and Statius only the blustering of a tyrant. Dryden.

There let him reign the jailor of the wind;
With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden.

To BLUSTER.* v. a. To blow down.

Do the Chaldeans and Sabæans feloniously drive away the herds of Job; doth the devil, by a tempestuous gust bluster down the house, and rob him of his children? Seasonable Sermon, p. 26.

BLUSTER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Roar of storms; tempest.

B-mi, Bianca, take him for thy lord. Shakespeare.

Bo.† interj. A word formerly of terroure; from Bo, an old northern captain, of such fame, that his name was used to terrify the enemy. Temple.

It is now used as a word only to scare children.
The northern captain will suffer no great loss, if the etymology be transferred from his redoubted name to the Dutch baux, a spectre.

I'll rather put on my flashing red nose, and my flaming face, and come wrapped in a calf's-skin, and cry ba, bo! I'll fray the scholar, I warrant thee. Robin Goodfellow, in Wily Beguiled.

BO'AR.† n. s. [bap, Saxon; beer, Dutch.] The male swine; the wild boar.

that board; it adds a majesty to it. Bacon.

6. The deck or floor of a ship: on board signifies in a ship.

Now board to board the rival vessels row,
The billows lave the skies, and ocean groans below. Dryden.

Our captain thought his ship in so great danger, that he confessed himself to a capuchin, who was on board. Addison.

He ordered his men to arm long poles with sharp hooks, wherewith they took hold of the tackling, which held the mainyard to the mast of their enemy's ship; then, rowing their own ship, they cut the tackling, and brought the main-yard by the board. Arbutnot on Coms.

To BOARD.† v. a. [from the noun. Written also board and bord.]

1. To enter a ship by force; the same as to storm, used of a city.

I boarded the king's ship: now on the beak,
Now in the waste, the deck, in every cabin,
I flam'd amazement. Shakespeare.

He not inclin'd the English ship to board,
More on his guns relied than on his sword,

From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd;
It miss'd the duke; but his great heart it griev'd. Waller.

Arm, arm, she cry'd, and let our Tyrians board
With our's his fleet, and carry fire and sword. Denham.

BOAST. † n. s. [Welsh bôst, a boast.]

1. An expression of ostentation; a proud speech.

Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonour'st thou God? Rom. ii. 23.

The world is more apt to find fault than to commend; the boast will probably be censured, when the great action that occasioned it, is forgotten. Spectator, No. 255.

2. A cause of boasting; an occasion of pride; the thing boasted.

Not Tyro, nor Mycene, match her name,
Nor great Alcmena, the proud boasts of fame. Pope, Odys.

BO'ASTER. n. s. [from boast.] A bragger; a man that vaunts any thing ostentatiously.

Complains the more candid and judicious of the chymists themselves are wont to make of those boasters, that confidently pretend, that they have extracted the salt or sulphur of quicksilver, when they have disguised it by additaments, wherewith it resembles the concretes. Boyle.

No more delays, vain boaster! but begin;

I prophesy beforehand I shall win:

I'll teach you how to brag another time. Dryden.

He the proud boasters sent, with stern assault,
Down to the realms of night. Philips.

BO'ASTFUL. † adj. [from boast and full.] Ostentatious; inclined to brag.

Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs Piercing the night's dull ear. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

Boastful, and rough, your first son is a squire;
The next a tradesman, meek, and much a liar. Pope.

BO'ASTING.* n. s. [from boast.] An expression of ostentation.

But now ye rejoice in your boastings. All such boasting is evil. St. James, iv. 16.

BO'ASTINGLY. adv. [from boasting.] Ostentatiously.

We look on it as a pitch of impiety, boastingly to avow our sins; and it deserves to be considered, whether this kind of confessing them, have not some affinity with it. Dean of Petry.

BO'ASTIVE.* adj. [from boast.] Presumptuous; assuming.

Should the seditious Power,
Vain-glorious, empty his pernicious urn
O'er the rough rock, how must his fellow stream Deride the tinklings of the boastive rill! Shenstone, Economy, P. I.

BO'ASTLESS.* adj. [from boast and less.] Simple; without ostentation; not desirous to be talked of.

But to the generous, still improving mind,
That gives the hopeless heart to sing for joy,
Diffusing kind beneficence around,
Boastless as now descends the silent dew,
To him the long review of order'd life,
Is inward rapture, only to be felt. Thomson, Summer.

BOAT. n. s. [bat, Saxon.]

1. A vessel to pass the water in. It is usually distinguished from other vessels, by being smaller and uncovered, and commonly moved by rowing.

I do not think that any one nation, the Syrian excepted, to whom the knowledge of the ark came, did find out at once the device of either ship or boat, in which they durst venture themselves upon the seas. Raleigh, Essays.

An effeminate scoundrel is a boat of Whose utmost daring is to cross the Nile,
In painted boats, to fright the crocodile. Tate, Juv.

To BODE. v. a. [bobian, Sax.] To portend; to be the omen of. It is used in a sense of either good or bad.

This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

You have opposed their false policy, with true and great wisdom; what they boded would be a mischief to us, you are providing, shall be one of our principal strengths. Sprat, Sermon.

It happen'd once, a boding prodigy!

A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky,

Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight.

Dryden.

If fiery red his glowing globe descends,

High winds and furious tempests he portends:

But if his cheeks are swoln with livid blue,

He bodes wet weather by his watry hue.

Dryden.

To BODE. v. n. To be an omen; to foreshew.

Sir, give me leave to say, whatever now

The omen prove, it boded well to you.

Dryden.

BODE.* n. s. [from the verb.]

Great Birnam wood to Dunsinane's high hill

Shall come against him —

That will never be:

Sweet bodements, good.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To BODGE.† v. n. [a word in Shakspeare, which is perhaps corrupted from boggle, Dr. Johnson says. But our old lexicography considers bodge and botch as synonymous. V. Huloet in bodge, who adds bodger also as a botcher. If we take bodge therefore, as botch is taken, in the sense of bungle, there will appear no corruption of the poet.] To boggle; to stop; to fail.

With this we charg'd again; but out! alas,

We bodg'd again; as I have seen a swan,

With bootless labour, swim against the tide.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

BODGE.* n. s. A botch.

Because it followeth in the same place, nor will it be a bodge in this, I cannot omit the consequence of this disheartening leveller.

Whitlock, Manners of the English, p. 437.

BO'DICE. n. s. [from bodies.] Stays; a waistcoat quilted with whalebone, worn by women.

Her bodice half way she unlac'd,

About his arms she slyly cast

The silken band, and held him fast.

Prior.

This consideration should keep ignorant nurses and makers from meddling.

Locke.

BO'DIED.* adj. [from body.] Having a body.

He is deformed, crooked, old, and scro,

Ill-fac'd, worse-bodied, shapeless every where.

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

What! take a young and tender bodied lady,

And expose her to those dangers, and those tumults?

A sickly lady too?

Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife.

Thou that in frames eternity dost bind,

And art a written and a body'd mind. Lovelace, Luc. P. p. 65.

BO'DILESS. adj. [from body.] Incorporeal; having no body.

B O D

They bodiless and immaterial are,
And can be only lodg'd within our minds.
This is the very coinage of our brain,
This bodiless creation cecily
Is very cunning in.

Davies.

Shakespeare.

These are but shadows,
Phantoms bodiless and vain,
Empty visions of the brain.

Swift.

BO'DILINESS.* n. s. [from bodily.] Corporality.

Minshew.

BO'DILY. adj. [from body.]

1. Corporeal: containing body.

What resemblance could wood or stone bear to a spirit void
Of all sensible qualities, and bodily dimensions? South.

2. Relating to the body, not the mind.

Of such as resorted to our Saviour Christ, being present on earth, there came not any unto him with better success, for the benefit of their souls everlasting happiness, than they whose bodily necessities gave occasion of seeking relief. Hooker.

Virtue atones for bodily defects; beauty is nothing without a mind. L'Estrange.

As clearness of the bodily eye doth dispose it for a quicker sight; so doth freedom from lust and passion, dispose us for the most perfect acts of reason. Tillotson.

I would not have children much beaten for their faults, because I would not have them think bodily pain the greatest punishment. Locke.

3. Real; actual.

Whatever hath been thought on in this state,
That could be brought to bodily act, ere Rome
Had circumvention. Shakespeare.

BO'DY.* n. s. [bodiz, Saxon; bodhaic, Gael. it originally signified the height or stature of a man.]

1. The material substance of an animal, opposed to the immaterial soul.

All the valiant men arose, and went all night, and took the body of David, and the bodies of his sons, from the wall.
I Sam. xxxi. 1

Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on.
St. Matthew, vi. 2

B O D

By custom, practice, and patience, all difficulties and hardships, whether of body or of fortune, are made easy.

L'Estrange.

2. Matter; opposed to spirit.

3. A person; a human being: whence somebody and nobody.

Surely, a wise body's part it were not, to put out his fire, because his foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might say, were it not for me, thou wouldst freeze. Hooker, iv. § 9.

A deflowered maid!

And by an eminent body, that enfore'd
The law against it! Shakespeare.

'Tis a passing shame,

That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen. Shakespeare.

No body seeth me; what need I to fear? the Most High will not remember my sins. Eccles. xxiii. 18.

All civility and reason obliged every body to submit.

Clarendon.

saved, without having any obligation to his preserver.

L'Estrange.

4. Reality; opposed to representation: a scriptural sense.

A shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ.

Coloss. ii. 17.

5. A collective mass: a joint power.

There is in the knowledge both of God and man this certainty, that life and death have divided between them the whole body of mankind. Hooker, v. § 49.

There were so many disaffected persons of the nobility, that there might a body start up for the king. Clarendon.

When pignies pretend to form themselves into a body, it is time for us, who are men of figure, to look about us.

Addison, Guardian.

6. The main army; the battle; distinct from the wings, van and rear.

The van of the king's army was led by the general and Wilmot; in the body was the king and the prince; and the rear consisted of one thousand foot, commanded under colonel Thelwell. Clarendon.

7. A corporation; a number of men united by some common tie.

I shall now mention a particular, wherein your whole body will be certainly against me, and the laity, almost to a man, on my side. Swift.

Nothing was more common than to hear that reverend body charged with what is inconsistent, despised for their poverty, and hated for their riches. Swift.

8. The main part; the bulk: as, the body, or hull, of a ship; the body of a coach; the body of a church;

Each bring his love a bog-land captive home.

Dryden, Pref. to the Prophets.

BOG-TROTTER. v. n. [from bog and trot.] One that lives in a boggy country; said to have been formerly applied to Scottish or northern troopers or robbers, probably the borderers; applied since to Irishmen.

I am sure his muse, for all his fine flights, is but a bog-trotter still.

Auson, to Congreve's Anim. on Collier, (1698.)

BOGGLE, or BOGGLE. v. n. [Celt. bágg, a goblin; Welsh bogelu, to affright; bugul, fear.] It is sometimes written bugle or bugil, with bo added to it; whence the corrupt vulgar word, a bugaboo. A bugle or boggle is, to this day, a common word in the North of England for a ghost.] A bugbear; a spectre; a goblin.

To BOGGLE. v. n. [from bogil, Dutch, a spectre; a bugbear; a phantom, Dr. Johnson says. But it does not appear that the Dutch have the word bogil. It is from the Celtic. See the substantive BOGLE.]

1. To start; to fly back; to fear to come forward.

You boggle shrewdly; every feather starts you. Shakspeare.
We start and boggle at every unusual appearance, and cannot endure the sight of the bugbear. Claudian.

Nature, that rude, and in her first essay,
Stood boggling at the roughness of the way;
Us'd to the road, unknowing to return,
Goes boldly on, and loves the path when worn. Dryden.

2. To hesitate; to be in doubt.

And never boggle to restore
The members you deliver o'er,
Upon demand.

Hudibras.

The well-shaped changeling is a man that has a rational soul, say you. Make the ears a little longer, and more pointed, and the nose a little flatter than ordinary, and then you begin to boggle.

Locke.

3. To play fast and loose; to dissemble.

When summoned to his last end, 'twas no time for him to boggle with the world. Howell.

You have been a boggler ever.

Shakspeare.

BO'GGLESH. v. a. [from boggle.] Doubtful; wavering.

What wise man or woman doth not know, that nothing is more sly, touchy, and bogglesh, nothing more violent, rich, and various, than that opinion, prejudice, passion, and superstition, of the many, or common people?

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsonness, p. 172.

BO'GGY. v. a. [from bog.] Marshy; swampy.

That fury staid,

Quench'd in a boggy Syrtis, neither sea,
Nor good dry land.

Milton, P. L. li. 939.

Their country was very narrow, low, and boggy, and, by great industry and expences, defend'd from the sea. Arbuthnot.

BO'GHOUSE. n. s. [from bog and house.] A house of office.

BOHEA. n. s. [an Indian word.] A species of tea, of higher colour, and more astringent taste, than green tea.

Coarse pewter, consisting chiefly of lead, is part of the bales in which bohea tea was brought from China. Woodward.

As some frail cup of China's fairest mold,

The tumults of the boiling bohea braves,

And holds secure the coffee's sabbie waves.

Tickell.

She went from op'ra, park, assembly, play,

To morning walks, and pray'rs three hours a-day;

To pass her time 'twixt reading and bohea,

To muse and spill her solitary tea.

Pope.

To BOIL. v. n. [boillir, Fr. bullio, Lat.]

1. To be agitated by heat; to fluctuate with heat.

He saw there boil the fiery whirlpools.

2. The vessel in which any thing is boiled.

This coffee-room is much frequented; and there are generally several pots and boilers before the fire. Woodward.

BOILERY. n. s. [from To boil.] A place at the salt-works where the salt is boiled.

BOISTEROUS. † adj. [Dutch byster, furious; Dr. Johnson says. It belongs etymologically perhaps to the Welsh bryst, brystus, fierce, savage; and our word was formerly boistous. Wicliffe and Chaucer both use boistous for boisterous. The latter has also the adverb boistously.]

1. Violent; loud; roaring; stormy.

By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust

Ensuing danger; as by proof we see

The waters swell before a boisterous storm. Shakspeare.

As when loud winds a well grown oak would rend

Up by the roots, this way and that they bend

His reeling trunk, and with a boist'rous sound

Scatter his leaves, and strew them on the ground. Waller.

2. Turbulent; tumultuous; furious.

Spirit of peace,

Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself

Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shakspeare.

His sweetness won a more regard

Unto his place, than all the boist'rous moods

That ignorant greatness practiseth.

B. Jonson.

God, into the hands of their deliverer,

Puts invincible might

To quell the mighty of the earth, the oppressor.

The brute and boisterous force of violent men. Milton, S. A.

Still must I beg thee not to name Sempronius;

Lucia, I like not that loud boisterous man. Addison, Cato.

3. Unwieldy; clumsily violent.

His boisterous club, so buried in the ground,

He could not rear up again so light,

But that the knight him at advantage found. Spenser, F. Q.

BOLIS. n. s. [Latin.]

Bolis is a great fiery ball, swiftly hurried through the air, and generally drawing a tail after it. Aristotle calls it capra. There have often been immense balls of this kind. Muschenbroech.

To BOLL.† v. n. [Su. Goth. bulna; Dan. bulner; and our own word was written formerly bolnyn, V. Prompt. Parv. "bolnyn, tumco." Bolned, puffed up, Wicliffe, Coloss. ii. 18. Bollen, swelled, Coles's Dict.

1677. Dan. bulnen.] To rise into a roundish form; simply, to swell; as in the old and genuine copies of Shakespeare, where blown and swollen have been proposed or substituted for boln, i. e. bollen. This word, applied to flax, means the globule which contains the seed. The round seed-vessels of flax are said to be called in Lower Saxony bollen.

And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was bolled. Exodus, ix. 31.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head,—

Here one, being throng'd, bears back, all boln and red.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

BOLL. n. s. [from the verb.] A round stalk or stem; as, a boll of flax.

BOLSTER.† n. s. [Goth. bolster, a heap of hay, bol, a couch; bolstpe, Sax. bolster, Dutch.]

1. Something laid on the bed to raise and support the head; commonly a bag filled with down or feathers.

Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or 'gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm
Leans her unpillow'd head. Milton, Com.

This arm shall be a bolster for thy head;
I'll fetch clean straw to make a soldier's bed. Gay.

2. A pad, or quilt, to hinder any pressure, or fill up any vacancy.

Up goes her hand, and off she slips
The bolsters that supply her hips. Swift.

3. A pad, or compress, to be laid on a wound.

The bandage is the girt, which hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends tacked firmly together. Wiseman.

4. [In horsemanship.] The bolsters of a saddle are those parts raised upon the bows, to hold the rider's thigh. Farrier's Dict.

5. [In naval language.] Bolsters are small bags or pads, which preserve the stays of the ship as it rocks at sea, from being chafed by the motion of the masts.

To BOLSTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support the head with a bolster.

2. To afford a bed to.

More than their own. Shakespeare, Othello.

3. To hold wounds together with a compress.

The practice of bolstering the cheeks forward, does little service to the wound, and is very uneasy to the patient. Sharp.

4. To support; to hold up; to maintain. This is now an expression somewhat coarse and obsolete.

We may be made wiser by the publick persuasions grafted in men's minds, so they be used to further the truth, not to bolster error. Hooker, iii. y 4.

Let the lawyer forbear to set his tongue to sale for the bolstering out of unjust causes. Halewell.

It was the way of many to bolster up their crazy, dotting consciences with confidences. South.

BOLSTERED.* adj. [from bolster.] Swelled out.

Three pair of stays bolstered below the left shoulder.

Tatler, No. 245.

BOLSTERER.* n. s. [from bolster.] A supporter; a maintainer.

That which is commonly reported of great robberies, may fitly serve to satisfy the bolsterers of such lewdness.

Bp. Bancroft, Dangerous Positions, iv. 12.

BOLSTERING.* n. s. [from bolster.] A prop; a support.

Crooked and unequal bodies are made to meet, without a miracle, by some iron bodies, or some benign bolsterings.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 60.

BOLT.† n. s. [Gr. βολη, from βελλα; Goth. boltt; Welsh, boltt; Dutch, boult, bolt.]

1. An arrow; a dart shot from a crossbow.
Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell;
It fell upon a little western tower;
Before, milk-white, now purple with love's wound, Shakespeare.
The blunted bolt against the nymph he drest;
But, with the sharp, transfix'd Apollo's breast. Dryden.
2. Lightning; a thunderbolt.
Sing'd with the flames, and with the bolts transfix'd,
With native earth your blood the monsters mix'd. Dryden.
3. Bolt upright; that is, upright as an arrow.
Brush iron, native or from the mine, consisteth of long striae, about the thickness of a small knitting needle, bolt upright, like the bristles of a stiff brush. Greene.
As I stood bolt upright upon one earl, one of the ladies burst out. Addison.
4. The bar of a door, so called from being straight like an arrow; we now say, shoot the bolt, when we speak of fastening or opening a door.
'Tis not in thee, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in. Shakespeare.
5. An iron to fasten the legs of a prisoner. This is I think corrupted from bought, or link, Dr. Johnson says. But the Goth. bolt is a fetter.
Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him.
Shakespeare.
6. A sieve. See To Bolt; to sift. And BOLTER.
Where be the French petticoats,
And girdles, and hangers? — Here, 't' the trunk;
And the bolts of lawn. B. Jonson, Alchemist.
- To Bolt*: † v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shut or fasten with a bolt.
The bolted gates flew open at the blast;
The storm rush'd in, and Arete stood aghast. Dryden.
2. To blurt out, or throw out precipitantly.
I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton, Com.
3. To fasten, as a bolt, or pin; to pin; to keep together.
That I could reach the axle where the pins are,
Which bolt this frame, that I might pull them out. B. Jonson.
4. To fetter; to shackle.
It is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change. Shakespeare.
5. To sift; or separate the parts of any thing with a sieve; [Ulter, Fr. butler, old Fr. See BOLTER, and BUTTLER.]
He now had bolted all the flour. Spenser, F. Q.
In the bolting and sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal. Watson.
I cannot bolt this matter to the bran,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden.
6. To examine by sifting; to try out; to lay open.
It would be well bolted out, whether great refractions may not be made upon reflections, as upon direct beams. Bacon.
The judge, or jury, or parties, or the council, or attorneys, propounding questions, beats and bolts out the truth much better than when the witness delivers only a formal series. Hale.
Time and nature will bolt out the truth of things, through all disguises. L'Estrange.
7. To purify; to purge. This is harsh.
The bolled snow
That's bolted by the northern blast twice o'er, Shakespeare.
- To Bolt*: † v. n. To spring out with speed and suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow.
Mercy — a virgin fair and lovely; her garments green and orient; a crown of gold upon her head; the tears of compassion bolting at her eyes; pity and ruth sitting in her face.
Dr. J. White's Sermon, (1615,) p. 72.
This Puck seems but a dreaming dolt,
Still walking like a ragged colt,
And off out of a bush doth bolt,
Of purpose to deceive us. Drayton, Nymphidia.

They erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the forest, sometimes into the wood- and fastnesses, and sometimes back to their den. Bacon.
As the house was all in a flame, out bolts a mouse from the run, to save herself. L'Estrange.

I have reflected on those men who, from time to time, have shot themselves into the world. I have seen many successions of them; some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others, hissed off. Dryden.

The birds to foreign seats repair'd,
And beasts that bolted out and saw the forest 'bur'd. Dryden.

BOLT-ROPE. n. s. [from bolt and rope.] The rope on which the sail of a ship is sewed and fastened.

Sea Dict.

BOLTER. † n. s. [old Fr. butler, a sieve.]

1. A sieve to separate meal from bran or husks; or to separate finer from coarser parts.

Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made bolters of them. Shakespeare.

With a good strong chopping-knife mince the two capons, bones and all, as small as ordinary minced meat; put them into a large neat bolter. Bacon, Natural History.

When superciliously he sifts
Through coarsest bolter others gifts. Hudibras, l. iii.

2. A kind of net.

These bakes, and divers others of the fore-cited, are taken with threads, and some of them with the bolter, which is a spiller of a bigger size. Cicero.

To Bolter: † v. a. [probably from the verb bolt, to well; the sense of bolter implying concretion or accumulation. In the midland part of England, as in Leicestershire and Warwickshire, boltered is applied to any thing clogged, or to a bump raised; as, when cream is coagulated; or when a boy has a broken head, and his hair is matted together with blood; or when a horse has been hard-riden in dirty roads, and the wound of the spur is covered with mire and blood.] To besmear.

Ay, now I see, 'tis true;
For the blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles upon me,
And points at them for him. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

BOLTHEAD. n. s. A long strait-necked glass vessel, for chymical distillations, called also a matrass, or receiver.

This spirit abounds in salt, which may be separated, by putting the liquor into a bolthead, with a long narrow neck. Boyle.

BOLTING-HOUSE. n. s. [from bolt and house.] The place where meal is sifted.

The jade is returned as white, and as powdered, as if she had been at work in a bolting-house. Dennis's Letters.

BOLTING-HUTCH. † n. s. [from bolt and hutch.] The bin or tub for the bolted meal.

That bolting-hutch of beastliness, that swollen parcel of dropsies,
Shakespeare, 3. Hen. VI. P. I.

This passing fine sophistical bolting-hutch.
Milton, Annals, Rec. Defence.

BOLTING-TUB. † n. s. [from bolt and tub.] A tub to sift meal in.

The larders have been search'd,
The bake-houses, and bolting-tub, the ovens.
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

BO'LSPRIT. } n. s. A mast running out at the head
BO'WSPRIT. } of a ship, not standing upright, but aslope. The but-end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the boltsprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Bowsprit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dictionary.

B O M

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yard, and boltpit, would I flame distinctly. Shakespeare.

BOLUS. n. s. [Gr. βολύς.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.

Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wiseman.

By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;

A complicated heap of ills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.

BOMB. † n. s. [Teut. bomme, a drum; Dutch, bommen, to sound; Gr. βουβειν, Lat. bombus.]

1. A loud noise.

An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusee, or wooden tube, filled with combustible matter; to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusee, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reach the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence; whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain, some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon missive iron pours,
And in the slaughtering bomb Gradivus roars. Rowe.

3. The stroke upon a bell, often called the bome of the bell.

To BOMB. \ v. n.* [Dutch, bommen.] To sound; to emit a noise.

But tympanites, (which we call the drum),
A wind, bombs in her belly; must be unbraced.

B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady.

What over-charged piece of melancholy
Is this, breaks in between my wishes thus,
With bombing sighs?

B. Jonson, Masques.

To BOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur,

Whilst Villeroy, who ne'er afraid is,

To Bruxelles marches on secure,

To bomb the monks, and scare the ladies. Prior.

BOMB-CHEST. n. s. [from bomb and chest.] A kind of chest filled usually with bombs, and sometimes only with gunpowder, placed under ground, to tear and blow it up in the air, with those who stand on it. Chambers.

BOMB-KETCH. n. s. A kind of ship, strongly built, BOMB-VESSEL. } to bear the shock of a mortar, when bombs are to be fired into a town.

Nor could an ordinary fleet, with bomb-vessels, hope to succeed against a place that has in its arsenal galleys and men of war. Addison on Italy.

BOMBARD. † n. s. [bombarda, Lat.]

1. A great gun; a cannon. Now obsolete

They planted in divers places twelve great bombards, where-with they threw huge stones into the air, which, falling down into the city, might break down the houses. Kneller.

2. A barrel, or large vessel for holding liquor. Obsolete.

That wolv'n parcel of dropies, that huge bombard of sack.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

The poor cattle yonder are passing away the time with chest loaf, and a bombard of broken beer. B. Jonson, Masques.

VOL. 1.

B O M

To BOMBARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack with bombs.

A medal is struck on the English failing in their attempts on Dunkirk, when they endeavoured to blow up a fort, and bombard the town. Addison.

BOMBARDIER. n. s. [from bombard.]

whose employment it is to shoot bombs.

The bombardier tosses his ball sometimes into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all around him with terror and combustion. Tuttle.

BOMBARDMENT. n. s. [from bombard.] An attack made upon any city, by throwing bombs into it.

Genoa is not yet secure from a bombardment, though it is not so exposed as formerly. Addison.

BOMBASIN. † n. s. [bombasin, Fr. from bombycin, silken, Lat.] A slight silken stuff, for mourning. Formerly used for cotton also, as the French still use the word. See BOMBAST.

The materials [of Persian paper] are not rags or skins, but bombasine or cotton-wool, coarse, and requiring much toil to perfect. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 298.

The pawnbroker tells me, that he has several suits of such brocade, from ladies of quality, lately pawned with him, to enable them [during the present mourning] to buy crapes and bombazines. The Student, n. 158.

BO'MBAST. † n. s.

1. A stuff of soft loose texture used formerly to swell the garment, and thence used to signify bulk or shew without solidity. Written also corruptly bumbast. See BUMBAST. [Ital. bombagia, from the Gr. βουβαε.]

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone.

How now, my sweet creature of bombast?

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

Cotton is no less observable. The tree is slender but strait, a yard high and like a briar.—At the top it divides itself into several branches, each of which is charged with many balls that contain the bumbast: the shape thereof is round and equal to a walnut. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 366.

A bumbast or bolstered garment.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 44.

2. Fustian; big words, without meaning.

Not pedants motley tongue, soldiers bombast,
Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough preparatives to draw
Me to hear this.

Donne, Poems, p. 130.

Are all the flights of heroick poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies? Dryden.

BO'MBAST. adj. [from the substantive.] High sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance,
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war. Shakespeare.

To BOMBAST. \ v. a.* [from the noun.] To inflate; to puff up.

Then strives he to bombast his feeble lines

With far-fetch'd phrase.

Bp. Hall, Satires, i. 4.

For Leontinus Gorgias, that bombasted sophister, the greatness of his learning was rather in the people's false opinion and ascription, than in his own true possession.

Eothwy's Alchemastir, p. 190.

Albeit they, no doubt, thought the entertainment was noble, we thought never any strangers were bombasted with such a triumph. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 119.

BOMBASTICK. \ adj.* [from bombast.] The more modern adjective instead of bombast; of great sound with little meaning; ranting. Kersey in his Dict. 1702, has "a bombastick style."

Bombastick phrases, solecisms, absurdities, and a thousand monsters of a scholastick brood, were set on foot. Shaftesbury.

BOMBASTRY. \ n. s.* [from bombast.] Swelling words without much meaning; fustian.

B O N

Bombast and buffoonery, by nature lofty and light, soar highest of all. Swift, Introd. Tale of a Tub.

BOMBILATION.† n. s. [bombilo, Lat. To hum like a bee. And in this sense bombilation was also used. See Coles's Dict. 1677.] Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour, or silence the bombilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixt in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge. Brown, Vulgar Errours.

BOMBYCINOUS.† adj. [bombycinus, Lat.] Silken; made of silk. Coles.

BO'MBYX.* n. s. [Gr. βομβυξ.] The name by which the silkworm is known.

BONA FIDE.* [Lat.] An expression still common; and given in our old lexicography, two centuries since; "really, truly, without deceit or fraud." Bullokar.

BONA ROBA.† n. s. [Ital. buona roba, a fine gown.] A shewy wanton. The common phrase for such, in Shakespeare's time. See Florio's Ital. Dict. We knew where the bona robas were. Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

Here comes the lady:
A bouncing bona roba! B. Jonson, New Inn.

BONA'IR.* adj. [Fr. bonnaire. This is also an old English word, which our ancient lexicography has not omitted. Bullokar cites it, and refers to debonair.] Complaisant; yielding; obedient. Obsolete.

I, N. take thee N. to my wedded housbande, to have and to holde, fro this day forwarde, for better, for wors, for richer, for poorer, in sikenesse and hele, to be bonere and buxum, &c. Salsbury Manual, (1490.) fol. xxxviii. b.

BONASUS. n. s. [Lat.] A kind of buffalo, or wild bull.

BO'NCHIEF.* n. s. [Fr. bon chef. This is a very uncommon word, but proper, as opposed to mischief; the latter being referrible to the Lat. malè cadere, the former to benè cadere.] Good consequence.

If I consent to do after your will for bonchief or mischief that may befall unto me in this life, I were worthy to be cursed. Thorpe's Exam. in Fox. 1407.

BONCHRETIEN.† n. s. [French.] A species of pear, so called, probably, from the name of a gardener.

Here you have your bon christian pear and bergamot in perfection. Howell's Lett. i. ii. 8.

BOND. n. s. [bonð, Sax. bound; it is written differently, in many of its senses, bond, or band. See BAND.]

1. Cords, or chains, with which any one is bound.

There left me, and my man, both bound together;

Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
I gain'd my freedom. Shakespeare.

2. Ligament that holds any thing together.

Let any one send his contemplation to the extremities of the universe, and see what conceivable hoops, what bond he can imagine to hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together. Locke.

3. Union; connexion: a workman's term.

Observe, in working up the walls, that no side of the house, nor any part of the walls, be brought up three feet above the other, before the next adjoining wall be wrought up to it, so that they may be all joined together, and make a good bond. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. [In the plural.] Chains; imprisonment; captivity.

Whom I perceived to have nothing laid to his charge worthy death, or of bonds. Acts, xxiii. 29.

5. Cement of union; cause of union; link of connexion.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;
blessed bond of board and bed! Shakespeare.

B O N

Love cools, brotherly divide, and the bond is cracked 'twixt son and father. Shakespeare, King Lear.

6. A writing of obligation to pay a sum, or perform a contract.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there

Your single bond.

What if I ne'er consent to make you mine;

My father's promise ties me not to time;

And bonds without a date, they say, are void. Dryden.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot heave

My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty

According to my bond, no more nor less. Shakespeare.

Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from gebonnen, Sax.] Captive; in a servile state.

Whether ye be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free. 1 Cor. xii. 13.

BO'NDAGE. n. s. [from bond.]

1. Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consists my glory. Sidney.

Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose

Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?—

—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile

Than is a slave in base servility. Shakespeare.

Our cage

We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,

And sing our bondage freely. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

The king, when he design'd you for my guard,

Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard. Dryden.

2. Obligation; tie of duty.

If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way. Pope.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money. South.

BO'NDMAID. n. s. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself,

To make a bondmaid and a slave of me. Shakespeare.

BO'NDMAN. n. s. [from bond and man.] A man slave.

Amongst the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made? the master to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the publick magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker.

O freedom! first delight of human kind;

Not that which bondmen from their masters find. Dryden.

BO'NDSERVANT. n. s. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant. Leviticus, xxv. 39.

BO'NDSERVICE. n. s. [from bond and service.] The condition of a bondservant; slavery.

Upon those did Solomon levy a tribute of bondservice.

2 Kings, ix. 21.

BO'NDSLAVE. n. s. [from bond and slave.] A man in slavery; one of servile condition who cannot change his master.

Love enjoined such diligence, that no apprentice, no bondslave, could ever be, by fear, more ready at all commands than that young princess was. Sidney.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a freewoman she is become a bondslave. 1 Macc. ii. 11.

Commonly the bondslave is fed by his lord, but here the lord was fed by his bondslave. Sam. J. Davies.

BO'NDSMAN. n. s. [from bond and man.]

1. A slave.

Carnal greedy people, without such a precept, would have no mercy upon their poor bondsmen and beasts. Derham.

2. A person bound, or giving security for another.

BO'NDSWOMAN. n. s. [from bond and woman.] A woman slave.

My lords, the senators
Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

BO'NDWOMAN.* n. s. [from bond and woman.] She who is a slave.

We are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free:

Gal. iv. 31.

The fugitive bond-woman, with her son
Outcast Nebaioth.

Milton, P. R. ii. 308.

BONE.* n. s. [bm, Saxon.]

1. The solid parts of the body of an animal made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fetus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells, or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been had it been solid and smaller.

Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold.

Macbeth.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone.

Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Æsop's hounds, contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone.

Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack:

Puss had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel.

L'Estrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

Knowing (according to the old rule of Thales) that he who hath not stuck at one villanie, will easily swallow another; perjury will easily downe with him that hath made no bones of murder.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

And the free maids that weave their threads with bones.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

6. Bones. Dice.

But then my study was to beg the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky six:

To shun ames ace that swept my stakes away;

And watch the box, for fear they should convey

False bones, and put upon me in the play.

Dryden.

To BONE, v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as, the cooks boned the veal.

BONE-ACHE.* n. s. [from bone and ache.] Pain in the bones.

Now the rotten diseases of the south, the guts, griping, ruptures, catarrhs, — incurable bone-ache, and the rivelled tee-simple of the tetter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cressida.

A lord that is a leper,

A knight that has the bone-ack, of a squire

That has both these, you make 'em smooth and sound.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

Here's cure for bone-ache, fever lurdens,

Unlawful or untimely burdens.

Sir T. Overbury, Songs.

BO'NED.* adj. [from bone.] Boney; large; strong.

Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we;

No big-bon'd men, fram'd of the Cyclops' size.

Titus Andron. iv. 3

Big-bon'd and large of limbs, with sinews strong,

Broad-shoulder'd, and his arms were round and long.

Dryden, Pak. and Arcite.

BO'NELACE.* n. s. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

She cuts cambrick at a thread, weaves bonelace, and quilts balls.

Beaumont and Fl. Scornful Lady.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace.

Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace.

Spectator.

BO'NELESS.* adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face,

Have pluckt my nipple from his boneless gums,

And dasht the brains out.

Shakespeare.

To BO'NESET. v. n. [from bone and set.] To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bone-setting.

Wicam's Surgery.

BO'NESETTER. n. s. [from boneset.] A chirurgeon; one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is to have a good bonesetter.

Denham.

BONE'TTA.* n. s. A sea fish.

Sharks, dolphins, bonettas, albicores, and other sea-tyrants.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 39.

BO'NFIRE.* n. s. [Sometimes written boone-fire, incorrectly; frequently bone-fire, with reason; and the etymology has been assigned by Lye to boon and fire, i. e. a fire made of materials obtained by begging; and to the Fr. bon, good, and fire, by Skinner and Dr. Johnson. But our old literature will confirm, I think, the orthography of bone-fire, and shew that its primitive meaning is a fire made of bones. Sax. bael-fyr, the fire which consumed the dead, made by a change of letters of the same organ baen-fyr, whence our bone-fire. Hickes. "Bone-fyre: it was sometimes used as a ceremony to burn dead men's bones; in manner of an exequie; now it is otherwise." Huloet. "In worship of St. John, the people waked at home, and made three manner of fires: One was of clean bones, and no wood; and that is called a bone-fire. Another is clean wood, and no bones; and that is called a wood-fire, for people to sit and wake thereby. The third is made of wood and bones, and is called St. John's fire." Quatuor Sermones, 1499, fol. c. iii. The primitive use of the word gradually sunk into its present meaning, a great fire, or blaze.] A fire made for some publick cause of triumph or exultation.

This city would make a marvellous bone-fire;

'Tis old dry timber, and such wood has no fellow.

Beaumont and Fl. Loyal Subject.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away,

And bonfires make all day.

Spenser.

B O N

How came so many bonfires to be made in Queen Mary's days? Why, she had abused and deceived her people. South.

Full soon by bonfire, and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well.

Gay.

BO'NGRACE. † n. s. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead, Dr. Johnson says, from Skinner. It seems to have resembled what is now called a parasol: "A bongrace, or such like, to keep away the sun," Barret's Alv. 1580. And, in this sense, our old poets use it.

[My face] was spoiled for want of a bongrace when I was young.

Beaumont and Fl. The Captain.

I have seen her beset all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke of hair, her bongrace, and chaplet.

Hackwell on Providence.

BONHOMMES. * n. s. [Fr. bons hommes, from the Lat. boni homines, good men.] A religious order, of which there were two convents or houses in this country; one at Ashridge, in Bucks; the other at Edington, in Wilts.

Tanner and Kennet.

To BO'NIFY. * v. a. [old Fr. bonifier, Cotgrave; from the Lat. bonus and facio, whence the low Lat. bonifatus, enjoying good; and an old Engl. word, not worthy of revival, "bonifate, having good luck," Coles's Dict. 1677.] To convert into good.

This must be acknowledged to be the greatest of all arts, to bonifie evils, or tincture them with good.

Cudworth.

BO'NITY. * n. s. [Lat. bonitas, Fr. bonté.] Goodness.

Not in use.

Ash from Scot.

BON MOT. * n. s. [Fr.] A jest; a witty reply.

The jokes, bon mots, the little adventures, which may do very well in one company, will seem flat and tedious when related in another.

Chesterfield.

BONNET. n. s. [bonnet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,

And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them,

Thy knee bussing the stones; for, in such business,

Action is eloquence.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

They had not probably the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in their salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads.

Addison.

BONNET. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the salient angles of the glacis.

BONNET à prestre, or priest's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three salient angles, and two inward.

BO'NNETS. † [Fr. bonnette, fem. gen. Teut. bonet.]

In the sea language, small sails set on the courses on the mizzen, mainsail, and foresail of a ship, when these are too narrow or shallow to clothe the mast, or in order to make more way in calm weather.

Chambers.

To BO'NNET. * v. n. [old Fr. bonnetter, "to put his cap unto," Cotgrave.] To pull off the bonnet; to make obeisance.

His ascent is not by such easy degrees as those, who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonnetted without any further deed to heave them at all into their estimation and report.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

BO'NNIBEL. * n. s. [Fr. bonne and belle.] A fair or handsome girl.

I saw the bouncing, bellibone;

Hey, ho, bonibell!

Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

Trust her not, you bonnybell;

She will forty leasings tell.

R. Jonson, Entertainments.

BO'NNILASS. * n. s. [from bonny and lass.] A beautiful maid.

B O O

As the bonnilass pass'd by,
She rov'd at me with glauncing eye.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

Homely spoken for a fair maid or bonnilass.

E. K. on Spenser's Pastorals.

BO'NNILY. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handsomely; plumply.

BO'NNINESS. n. s. [from bonny.] Gayety; handsomeness; plumpness.

BO'NNY. † adj. [from bon, bonne, Fr. It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect, Dr. Johnson says; but it is certainly still very common in the North of England for pretty; and is sometimes used, like the Welsh bonedd, boneddig, for gentle; and for unaffected, pleasing.]

1. Handsome; beautiful.

Match to snatch I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows,
Ev'n of the bonny beast he lov'd so well.

Shakespeare.

Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain,
Till bonny Susan sped across the plain.

Gay.

2. Gay; merry; frolicksome; cheerful; blithe.

Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny.

Shakespeare.

3. It seems to be generally used in conversation for plump.

BONNY-CLABBER. † n. s. [Irish baine, milk, and clabar, mire.] A word used in Ireland for sour buttermilk.

It is against my freehold, my inheritance,
To drink such balderdash, or bonny-clabber.

B. Jonson, New Inn, i. 2.

We scorn for want of talk, to jabber

Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;

Nor are we studious to enquire,

Who votes for manors, who for hire.

Swift.

BONUM MAGNUM. n. s. A species of plum.

BO'NY. † adj. [from bone.]

1. Consisting of bones.

Or think this ragged bony name to be
My ruinous anatomy.

Donne, Poems, p. 10.

At the end of this hole is a membrane, fastened to a round bony limb, and stretched like the head of a drum; and therefore, by anatomists, called tympanum.

Ray.

2. Full of bones.

3. Strong; having large bones.

Burning for blood, bony, and ghaut, and grim,
Assembling wolves in raging troops descend.

Thomson, Winter, v. 394.

BONZES. * n. s. Priests of Japan, Tonquin, and China.

This temple was of more than ordinary structure, and the bonzes numerous.

Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 374.

BO'BY. † n. s. [a word of no certain etymology; Henshaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from bobo, foolish, Span. Junius finds bowbard to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby; but the original of bowbard is not known. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement. Others derive it from the Gr. βουβαλ. The Germ. bube, however, seems to be the original; which, according to Wachter, signified first a boy, then a servant, and at length a worthless fellow; bobby, an awkward boy.]

1. A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find,

That booby Phaon only was unkind,
An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind.

Brior.

Young master next must rise to fill him wine,
And starve himself to see the booby dine.

King.

2. A bird so called.

Some boobies perched upon the yard-arm of our suffered our ship to take them; an animal so very becomes a proverb. Sir T. Herbert, Travels

BOOK.† n. s. [boka, Goth. or boc, Sax. suppos from boc, a beech; because they wrote on beechen boards, as liber in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write.

See a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shakspeare.

Receive the sentence of the law for sins,
Such as by God's book are adjudge'd to death. Shakspeare.

In the coffin that had the books, they were found as fresh as if they had been but newly written; being written on parchment, and covered over with watch candles of wax. Hacon.

Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts: this is properly the work of a living instructor. Watts.

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; whereof the first is these chapters past. Burnet's Theory.

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

This life
Is nobler than attending for a bauble;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk;
Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncess'd. Shakspeare.

The good old way among the gentry of England, to maintain their pre-eminence over the lower rank, was by their bounty, munificence, and hospitality; and it is a very unhappy change, if, at present, by themselves or their agents, the luxury of the gentry is supported by the credit of the trader. This is what my correspondent pretends to prove out of his own books, and those of his whole neighbourhood. Tatler, No. 180.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.

I was so much in his books, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Addison.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading.

Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their birth, and may have publick audience but once. Hooker.

To Book.† v. a. [Sax. bocian.]

1. To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it. Shakspeare.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer.
Davies on Ireland.

2. To have a knowledge of books. Obsolete.

She was well kepte, she was well lodged,
She was well taught, she was well boked. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 8.

BOOK-KEEPER.* n. s. [from book and keep.] He who holds a book, into which others may look. It is now used only for the man who enters in a book the names of persons or parcels to be conveyed to particular places.

Here, brother, you shall be the book-keeper;
This is the argument of that they shew. Kyd's Spanish Tragedy.

BOOK-KEEPING. n. s. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording pecuniary transactions, in such a manner, that at any time a man may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part, of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Harris.

BOOKBINDER.† n. s. [from book and bind.] A man whose profession it is to cover books.

Some [manuscripts] they sold to the grossers and sope-sellers, and some they sent over sea to the bookebinders.
Bale's Pref. to Leland's Journey.

BOOKCASE.* n. s. [from book and case.] Formerly, a reference to cases ruled in law. V. Hulse. Now, merely a case for holding books.

BOOKFUL. adj. [from book and full.] Full of notions gleaned from books; crowded with undigested knowledge.

The bookfull blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
And always list'n'ing to himself appears. Pope.

BOOKISH.† adj. [from book.] Given to books; acquainted only with books. It is generally used con-temptuously, Dr. Johnson says; but there are exceptions of good authority.

I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down. Shakspeare.
I'm not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the 'scape. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Xantippe follows her namesake; being married to a bookish man, who has no knowledge of the world. Spectator.

Those that have had all the advantages of bookish education,
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. p. 45.

This bookish disease, let it make me as much poor as it will,
it shall never make me the less just.

More, Pref. to his Philosophical Poems.

BOOKISHLY.* adv. [from bookish.] In a way devoted to books.

While she [Christina, Queen of Sweden] was more bookishly given, she had it in her thoughts to institute an order of Panassus. Thurlow's State-Papers, ii. 104.

BOOKISHNESS.† n. s. [from bookish.] Much application to books; over studiousness.

Do you not see, say they, how threadbare, slighted, contemned, and almost starved their [scholars] bookishness keepeth them? Whitlock's Manners of the English, p. 180.

There are some with whom bookishness is a disease: for by overmuch reading they surcharge their minds, and so digest nothing. Goodman's Wint. Ev. Conf. p. 46.

BOOKLAND.* n. s. [Sax. bocland, Dutch boeckland.] Bookland, or charter-land, which was held by deed under certain rents and services, in effect differed nothing from free socage lands. Blackstone.

BOOKLEARNED. adj. [from book and learned.] Versed in books, or literature: a term implying some slight contempt.

Whate'er these booklearn'd blockheads say,
Solon's the veriest fool in all the play. Dryden.

He will quote passages out of Plato and Pindar, at his own table, to some booklearned companion, without blushing. Swift.

BOOKLEARNING. n. s. [from book and learning.] Skill in literature; acquaintance with books: a term of some contempt.

They might talk of booklearning what they would; but he never saw more uneasy fellows than great clerks. Sidney.

Neither does it so much require booklearning and scholarship, as good natural sense, to distinguish true and false, and to discern what is well proved, and what is not. Burnet's Theory.

BOOKLESS.* adj. [book and less.] Not given to books; unbookish; disdaining the use of books;
wanting books.

Why with the cit,
Or bookless churl, with each ignoble name,
Each earthly nature, deign'st thou to reside? Shenstone, Economy, P. i.

See how mean, how low
The bookless, saunt'ring youth, proud of the scut
That dignifies his cap, his florish'd belt
And rusty couples gingling by his side. Somerville, Chase, B. i.

BOOKMAKING.* n. s. [from book and make.] The art of making books.

He [Adam Smith] had bookmaking so much in his thoughts, and was so chary of what might be turned to account in that way, that he once said to Sir Joshua Reynolds, that he made it a rule, when in company, never to talk of what he understood.

Boswell, Life of Johnson, iv. 24.

BOOKMAN. † n. s. [from book and man.] A man whose profession is the study of books.

This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his bookmen; for here 'tis abus'd. Shakespeare.
The things we talk of all this while, how like soever they may look to a bookman's business, yet are such of themselves as kings and princes have found their states concerned in.

Gregory's Posthuma, p. 328.

BOOKMATE. n. s. [from book and mate.] School-fellow.

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court, a phantasm, a monarch, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his bookmates. Shakespeare.

BOOKOATH. * n. s. [from book and oath.] The oath made on the book; a word yet used among the vulgar.
I put thee now to thy book-oath: deny it, if thou canst.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

BOOKSELLER. n. s. [from book and sell.] He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookseller, and told him in anger, he had sold a book in which there was false divinity. Walton.

BOOKWORM. n. s. [from book and worm.]

1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to diet him with wholesome and substantial food. Guardian.

2. A student too closely given to books; a reader without judgement.

Among those venerable galleries and solitary scenes of the university, I wanted but a black gown, and a salary, to be as mere a bookworm as any there. Pope, Letters.

BO'OLY. n. s. [An Irish term.]

All the Tartarians, and the people about the Caspian Sea, which are naturally Scythians, live in hordes;—being the very same that the Irish boolies are, driving their cattle with them, and feeding only on their milk and white meats.

Spenser on Ireland.

BOOM. † n. s. [from boom, a tree, Dutch; which is from the old Goth. bom.]

1. [In sea language.] A long pole used to spread out the clue of the studding sail; and sometimes the clues of the mainsail and foresail are boomed out.

2. A pole with bushes or baskets, set up as a mark to shew the sailors how to steer in the channel, when a country is overflown. Sea Dictionary.

3. A bar of wood laid across a harbour, to keep off the enemy.

As his heroick worth struck envy dumb,
Who took the Dutchman, and who cut the boom. Dryden.

To Boom. v. n. [from the noun. A sea term.]

1. To rush with violence; as a ship is said to come booming, when she makes all the sail she can. Dict.

2. To swell and fall together.
Booming o'er his head
The billows clos'd; he's number'd with the dead. Young.
Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid,
When booming billows clos'd above my head. Pope.

BO'OMKIN. * n. s. See BUMKIN.

BOON. † n. s. [from bene, Sax. a petition; baen, boon, Iceland.] A gift; a grant; a benefaction; a present.

Vouchsafe me for my need but one fair look:
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I dare, you cannot give. Shakespeare.

That courtier, who al might every morning whisper him in the e ask'd no unprofitable suit for himself. emperor, that he say nothing. Bacon.

The blust'ring fool has satisfy'd his will,
His boon is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize. Dryden, Fables.

What rhetorick didst thou use,
To gain this mighty boon? she pities me!
BOON. † adj. [from, Fr.] Adrian, Cato.

1. Gay; merry: as, a boon companion. This is rather a low sense of the word, and is the only one which Dr. Johnson gives.

Satiate at length,
And heighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon,
Thus to herself she pleasingly began. Milton, P. L.

I know the infirmity of our family; we play the boon companion, and throw our money away in our cups. Arbutnot.

At 12 of the clock every day they dined together at a cook's house within the tower, and sometimes had Jennings, a boon blade, among them. Life of A. Wood, p. 205.

2. Kind; bountiful.

Flowers worthy of Paradise, which not nice Art
In beds and curious knots, but Nature boon
Pour'd forth profuse on hill, and dale, and plain.

Milton, P. L. iv. 242.

All that boon Nature could luxurious pour
Of high materials. Thomson's Liberty, P. ii.

BOOR. † n. s. [beer, Dutch; zebupe, Sax.; Goth. bur, a cottage; bure, a country fellow.] A ploughman; a country fellow; a lout; a clown.

The bare sense of a calamity is called grumbling; and if a man does but make a face upon the boor, he is presently a male-content. L'Estrange.

He may live as well as a boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer waste his life. Temple.

To one well-born, th' affront is worse and more,
When he's abus'd and baffl'd by a boor. Dryden.

BO'ORISH. † adj. [from boor.] Clownish; rustick; untaught; uncivilized.

Therefore, you clown, abandon, which is, in the vulgar, leave the society, which, in the boorish, is, company of this female. Shakespeare, As you like it.

A gross and boorish opinion. Milton, Doct. and Div. of Divorce, l. 9.

No lusty neatherd thither drove his kine,
No boorish hogherd fed his rooting swine. Brown, Brit. Past. ii. 1.

BO'ORISHLY. adv. [from boorish.] In a boorish manner; after a clownish manner.

BO'ORISHNESS. n. s. [from boorish.] Clownishness; rusticity; coarseness of manners.

BOOSE. † n. s. [bojtz, Sax.; baus, Su.] A stall for a cow or an ox.

To BOOT. † v. a. [boeten, to profit, Dutch; bot, in Saxon; is recompence, repentance, or fine paid by way of expiation; but the Goth. botjan, or botan, to profit, is the parent of our word, from bot, reparation.]

1. To profit; to advantage: it is commonly used in these modes, it boots, or what boots it.

It shall not boot them, who derogate from reading, to excuse it, when they see no other remedy; as if their intent were only to deny that aliens and strangers from the family of God are won, or that belief doth use to be wrought at the first in them, without sermons. Hooker.

For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it boots not to complain. Shakespeare.

If we shun
The purpos'd end, or here lie fixed all,
What boots it us these wars to have begun? Fairfax.

What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe? Pope.

2. To enrich; to benefit.
And I will boot thee with what gift beside,
That modesty can beg. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

Boor. † n. s. [from the verb, old Fr. also bote, help, advantage.]

1. Profit; gain; advantage; something given to mend the exchange.

My gravity,
Wherein, let no man hear me, I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vain. Shakspeare.
Is it any boot to bid a man hold fast our once recovered liberty? Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 28.

2. To boot. With advantage; over and above; besides. But Dr. Johnson might have noted, that this is rather the infinitive of the verb.

Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy, in an hour so rude;
And, in the calmest and the stillest night,
With all appliances, and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Shakspeare.

Man is God's image; but a poor man is Christ's stamp to boot: both images regard. Herbert.
He might have his mind and manners formed, and be instructed to boot in several sciences. Locke.

3. It seems, in the following lines of Shakspeare, used for booty, or plunder, Dr. Johnson says; which indeed was not an unusual signification of it; and in fact means, according to Dr. Johnson's second definition of the verb, an unlawful way of enriching or benefiting.

Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds. Shakspeare.

The cry whereof entering the hollow cave
Eftsoones brought forth the villaine, as they ment,
With hope of her some wishfull boot to have.

Their chiefest boot is th' adversary's head;
They end not war till th' enemy be dead. Mir. for Magistrates, p. 275.

In that accursed forest,
Set on by villains that make boot of all men,
The peers of France are pillage there, they shot at us. Beaumont and Fl. Lover's Progress.

BOOT. † n. s. [bottas, Armorick; botes, a shoe, Welsh; botte, French.]

1. A covering for the leg, used by horsemen.

That my leg is too long—
—No; that it is too little.—
—I'll wear a boot, to make it somewhat rounder. Shakspeare.
Shew'd him his room, where he must lodge that night,
Pull'd off his boots, and took away the light. Milton.
Bishop Wilkins says, he does not question but it will be as usual for a man to call for his wings, when he is going a journey, as it is now to call for his boots. Addison, Guardian.

2. A kind of rack for the leg, formerly used in Scotland for torturing criminals.

He was put to the torture, which, in Scotland, they call the boots; for they put a pair of iron boots close on the leg, and drive wedges between these and the leg. Burnet, Hist. of his own Time, an. 1666.

Boor of a Coach. † The space between the coachman and the coach.

The horses, being young, took some affrightment, and running away so furiously, that one of them tore all his belly open upon the corner of a beer-cart; my nephew, who in this mean while adventured to leap out, [of the coach,] seemeth to have hung on one of the pins of the boot. Sir H. Wotton, Rem. p. 417.

To Boot. v. a. [from the noun.] To put on boots.

Boot, boot, master Shallow; I know the young king is sick for me: let us take any man's horses. Shakspeare.

Bo'ot-catcher. n. s. [from boot and catch.] The person whose business at an inn is to pull off the boots of passengers.

The ostler and the boot-catcher ought to partake. Swift.

BOOT-HOSE. n. s. [from boot and hose.] Stockings to serve for boots; spatterdashes.

His hacquey with a linen stock on one leg, and a boot-hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue line. Shakspeare.

BOOT-TREE. n. s. [from boot and tree.] Two pieces of wood, shaped like a leg, to be driven into boots, for stretching and widening them.

Bo'OTED. † adj. [old Fr. boter, to put boots on.] In boots; in a horseman's habit.

The ill man rides through all confidently; he is coated and booted for it. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

A booted judge shall sit to try his cause,
Not by the statute, but by martial laws. Dryden.

BOOTH. † n. s. [boed, Dutch; bwth, Welsh; buth, Gael. a hut; both, Irish.] A house built of boards, or boughs, to be used for a short time.

The clothiers found means to have all the quest made of the northern men, such as had their booths in the fair. Camden.

Much mischief will be done at Bartholomew fair, by the fall of a booth. Swift.

Bo'OTLESS. † adj. [Sax. botleap.]

1. Useless; unprofitable; unavailing; without advantage.

When those accursed messengers of hell
Came to their wicked man, and gan to tell
Their bootless pains, and ill succeeding night. Spenser.

God did not suffer him, being desirous of the light of wisdom, with bootless expence of travel, to wander in darkness. Hooker.

Bootless speed,
When cowardice pursues, and valour flies. Shakspeare.

Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless pray'rs:
He seeks my life. Shakspeare.

2. Without success.

Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?
Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him bootless home, and weather beaten back. Shakspeare.

Bo'OTLESSLY. † adv. [from bootless.] Uselessly, to no purpose.

Good nymph, no more; why dost thou bootlessly
Stay thus tormenting both thyself and me? Fanshawe, Past. Fid. p. 133.

Bo'OTY. n. s. [buyl, Dutch; bulin, Fr.]

1. Plunder; pillage; spoils gained from the enemy.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of heeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
Their booty. Milton.

His conscience is the hue and cry that pursues him; and when he reckons that he has gotten a booty, he has only caught a Tartar. D'Éstrange.

For, should you to extortion be inclin'd,
Your cruel guilt will little booty find. Dryden.

2. Things gotten by robbery.

If I had a mind to be honest, I see, Fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. Shakspeare.

3. To play booty. To play dishonestly, with an intent to lose. The French use, Je suis botté, when they mean to say, I will not go.

We understand what we ought to do; but when we deliberate, we play booty against ourselves: our consciences direct us one way, our corruptions hurry us another. D'Éstrange.

I have set this argument in the best light, that the ladies may not think that I write booty. Dryden.

Bo'PEEP. n. s. [from bo and peep. See Bo.] The act of looking out, and drawing back as if frightened, or with the purpose to fright some other.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bopeep,
And go the fools among. Shakspeare.

Rivers,

That serve instead of peaceful barriers,
To part th' engagements of their warriors,
Where both from side to side may skip,
And only encounter at bopeep.

There the bopeep plays, puts out his horns to do mischief, then shrinks them back for safety.

Hudibras.

Drye

BORACHIO. † n. s. [borracho, Span. bouracho, Fr. "The Spanish borachoe, or bottle commonly of a pig's skin, with the hair inward, dressed inwardly with rosin and pitch to keep wine or liquor sweet. Fr. borache." Minshew. Dr. Johnson explains it a drunkard, by an example from Congreve; which, however, serves only to shew that the cask was what the speaker alludes to. Other writers confirm this meaning.] A bottle, or cask.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio.

Dryden, Pers. Sat. 5.

As soon as the servant had done speaking, she made haste, (says the text,) and took two hundred loaves, and two bottles, (that is, two skins or borrachios,) of wine.

Delany, Life of David, i. 18.

How you stink of wine! D'ye think my niece will ever endure such a borachio! you're an absolute borachio. Congreve.

BO'RABLE. adj. [from bore.] That may be bored.

BO'RAGE. n. s. [from borago, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

BO'RAMEZ. n. s. The Scythian lamb, generally known by the name of Agnus Scythicus.

Much wonder is made of the boramez, that strange plant-animal, or vegetable lamb of Tartary, which wolves delight to feed on; which hath the shape of a lamb, affordeth a bloody juice upon breaking, and liveth while the plants be consumed about it.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

BORAX. n. s. [borax, low Lat.] An artificial salt, prepared from sal ammoniac, nitre, calcined tartar, sea salt, and alum, dissolved in wine. It is principally used to solder metals, and sometimes an uterine ingredient in medicine.

Quincy.

BO'RBORYGM. † n. s. [old Fr. borborigme, Cotgrave. Gr. βορβορύγμος.] A term in medicine, for a rumbling noise in the guts.

Gloss. Anglic. Nov. (1707.)

Cowel.

BORDEL. } n. s. [bordeel, Teut. bordel, Armorick.]

BO'RDELLO. } A brothel; a bawdy-house.

From the bordello it might come as well,
The spital, or pethatch.

B. Jonson.

Making even his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to instil vice into the unwary ears of his poor children.

South.

BO'RDELLER. † n. s. [from bordel; a word used both by Chaucer and Gower for a keeper of a bawdy house. Chaucer also uses bordel-women for strumpets.] The keeper of a brothel. Obsolete.

Thais out of his barge he hent,
And to the bordeler her sold.

Gower, Conf. Am. b. 8.

BORDER. † n. s. [bard, Germ. bord, Fr. bord, Sax.]

1. The outer part or edge of any thing.

They have looking-glasses, bordered with broad borders of crystal, and great counterfeit precious stones.

Bacon.

The light must strike on the middle, and extend its greatest clearness on the principal figures; diminishing by degrees, as it comes nearer and nearer to the borders.

Dryden.

2. The march or edge of a country to the confine.

If a prince keep his residence on the border of his dominions, the remote parts will rebel; but if he make the centre his seat, he shall easily keep them in obedience.

Spenser.

Those outlaws, as I may call them, who roamed upon the borders.

Patrick, Comment. on Genesis, xlv. 34.

3. The outer part of a garment, generally adorned with needle-work, or ornaments.

4. A bank raised round a garden, and set with flowers; a narrow rank of herbs or flowers.

There he arriving, round about doth fly
From bed to bed, from one to other border,
And takes survey, with curious busy eye,
Of every flower and herb there set in order.

Spenser.

All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound:
Such various ways the spacious alleys lead,
My doubtful muse knows not what path to tread.

Waller.

The place was covered with a wonderful profusion of flowers, that without being disposed into regular borders, and parterres, grew promiscuously.

Taller, No. 161.

5. [In heraldry.] Written also bordure. Formerly the mark of distinguishing one part of a family from the other, descended of one family and from the same parents.

To Bo'RDER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To confine upon; to touch something else at the side or edge: with upon.

It bordereth upon the province of Croatia, which, in time past, had continual wars with the Turks garrisons.

Knolles.

Virtue and honour had their temples bordering on each other, and are sometimes both on the same coin.

Addison.

2. To approach nearly to.

All wit, which borders upon profaneness, and makes bold with those things to which the greatest reverence is due, deserves to be branded with folly.

Tillotson.

To Bo'RDER. † v. a. See To IMBORDER.

1. To adorn with a border of ornaments. [Old Fr. brulez, bordered, edged.]

Rivulets, bordered with the softest grass enamelled with various flowers.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 372.

2. To reach; to touch; to confine upon; to be contiguous to.

Sheba and Raamah are those parts of Arabia, which border the sea called the Persian gulf.

Raleigh.

3. To keep within bounds.

That nature, which contemns its origin, cannot be border'd certain in itself.

Shakspeare, X. Lear.

Bo'RDERER. † n. s. [from border.]

1. He that dwells on the borders; extreme parts, or confines; he that dwells next to any place.

They of those marches, gracious sovereign!

Shall be a wall sufficient to defend

Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

Shakspeare.

An ordinary horse will carry two sacks of sand; and, of such, the borderers on the sea do bestow sixty at least in every acre; but most husbands double that number.

Carew.

The easiest to be drawn

To our society, and to aid the war:

The rather for their seat, being next bord'ers

On Italy; and that they abate with horse.

B. Jonson.

The king of Scots in person, with Perkin in his company, entered with a great army, though it chiefly consisted of borderers, being raised somewhat suddenly.

Bacon.

Volga's stream

Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,

Her borderers; on mutual slaughter bent,

They send their countries.

Philips.

2. He that approaches near to another.

B O R

The poet is the nearest borderer upon the orator, and expresseth all his virtues, though he be tied more to numbers.

B. Jonson, Discommodities.

A poet is the very next borderer unto an orator.

Rutherford's Atheistical, p. 197.

Bo'RRAGE. * n. s. [Probably from border and rage, i. e. to make a furious incursion on the borders of a country. This word Dr. Johnson has cited as an example of the verb neuter, to bordrage, in the following lines of Spenser; where it is evidently a verbal noun; and Mr. Mason has cited bordring from the verb. Of the verb bordrage proof is yet to be sought.] An incursion on the borders of a country.

Who [Constantine]—

Long time in peace his realm established,
Yet oft annoy'd with sordry bordragings
Of neighbour Scots, and forrein scatterlings
With which the world did in those dayes abound.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 63.

To BORE. v. a. [bo'ruan, Sax.].

1. To pierce in a hole.

I'll believe as soon,

This whole earth may be bor'd; and that the moon

May through the centre creep.

Shakspeare.

Mulberries will be fairer, if you bore the trunk of the tree through, and thrust, into the places bored, wedges of some hot trees.

Bacon.

But Capys, and the graver sort, thought fit

The Greeks suspected present to commit

To seas or flames; at least, to search and bore

The sides, and what that space contains t' explore.

Denham.

2. To hollow.

Take the barrel of a long gun perfectly bored, and set it upright, and take a bullet exactly fit for it; and then if you suck at the mouth of the barrel never so gently, the bullet will come up so forcibly, that it will hazard the striking out your teeth.

Digby.

3. To make by piercing.

These diminutive caterpillars are able, by degrees, to pierce or bore their way into a tree, with very small holes; which, after they are fully entered, grow together.

Ray.

4. To pierce; to break through.

Consider, reader, what fatigues I've known,

What riots seen, what bustling crouds I bor'd,

How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches roar'd.

Gay.

To BORE. v. n.

1. To make a hole.

A man may make an instrument to bore a hole an inch wide, or half an inch, not to bore a hole of a foot.

Wilkins.

2. To push forward towards a certain point.

Those milk paps,

That through the window bars bore at men's eyes,

Are not within the leaf of pity writ.

Shakspeare.

Nor southward to the raining regions run;

But boring to the west, and hovering there,

With gaping mouths they draw prolifick air.

Dryden.

To BORE. v. n. [with farriers.] Is when a horse carries his nose near the ground.

Dict.

BORE. n. s. [from the verb.]

BORE. * n. s. [probably from To bear, bore or borne.]

A tide swelling above another tide.

The victorious tenth wave shall ride, like the bore, victorious over all the rest.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

BORE. The preterite of bear.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,

Like one who durst his destiny controul;

Yet with becoming grief he bore his part,

Resign'd his son, but not resign'd his heart.

Dryden.

'Twas my fate

To kill my father and pollute his bed,

By marrying her who bore me.

Dryden.

That to his lays wild beasts danc'd borees.

Swift, Ovidiana, Ed. Barret, No. ii.

Bo'RER. n. s. [from bore.] A piercer; an instrument to make holes with.

The master-bricklayer must try all the foundations, with a borer, such as well-diggers use, to try the ground.

Moxon.

To be BORN. v. n. pass. [derived from the word to bear, in the sense of bringing forth; as, my mother bore me twenty years ago; or, I was born twenty years ago.]

1. To come into life.

When we are born, we cry, that we are come

To this great stage of fools.

Shakspeare.

The new born babe, by nurses overlaid.

Dryden.

Nor nature's law wit's fruitless sorrow mourn,

But die, O mortal man! for thou wast born.

Moor.

All that are born into the world, are surrounded with bodies, that perpetually and diversely affect them.

Locke.

2. It is usually spoken with regard to circumstances; as, he was born a prince; he was born to empire; he was born for greatness; that is, formed at the birth.

The stranger that dwelleth with you, shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself.

Leviticus, xix. 34.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.

Job, v. 7.

A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity.

Proverbs, xvii. 17.

Either of you knights may well deserve

A princess born; and such is she you serve.

Dryden.

Two rising crests his royal head adorn,

Born from a god, himself to godhead born.

Dryden.

Both must alike from heaven derive their light;

These born to judge, as well as those to write.

Pope.

For all mankind alike require their grace;

All born to want; a miserable race!

Pope.

I was born to a good estate, although it now turneth to little account.

Swift, Story of an Injured Lady.

Their lands are let to lords, who, never designed to be tenants, naturally murmur at the payment of rents, as a subterfuge they were not born to.

Swift.

3. It has usually the particle of before the mother.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute, laugh to scorn

The power of man; for none of woman born

Shall harin Macbeth.

Shakspeare.

I being born of my father's first wife, and she of his third, she converses with me rather like a daughter than a sister.

Tatler.

BORNE. † The participle passive of bear. Pronounced with a long, and therefore more correctly written borne, to distinguish it from born. [Sax. bopen.]

Their charge was always borne by the queen; and duly paid out of the exchequer. Bacon.

The great men were enabled to oppress their inferiours; and their followers were born out and countenanced in wicked actions. Darwin.

Upon some occasions, Clodius may be bold and insolent, born away by his passion. Swift.

BOROUGH. † n. s. [bophoe, Saxon.].

1. It signified anciently a surety, or a man bound for others. See BORROW.

A borough, as I here use it, and as the old laws still use, is not a borough town, that is, a franchised town; but a main pledge of a hundred free persons, therefore called a free borough, or, as you say, franci-plegium. For borh, in old Saxon, signifieth a pledge or surety; and yet it is so used with us in some speeches, as Chaucer saith, St. John to borrow; that is, for assurance and warranty.

Spenser on Ireland.

2. A town with a corporation. [Goth. baurgs, a city; Sax. bupz.]

And, if a borough choose him not, undone. Pope.

BOROUGH English, is a customary descent of lands or tenements, whereby, in all places where this custom holds, lands and tenements descend to the youngest son; or, if the owner have no issue, to his youngest brother. Coxel.

BOROUGH-HOLDER. * n. s. A headborough. See BORSHOLDER.

BORREL. † adj. [from the Goth. bure, a clown: Sax. bupe. See BOOR. Dr. Johnson defines it from Junius, without etymology, "a mean fellow," and calls it a substantive. This adjective is written burel, in the Visions of Pierce Plowman, 1550. Gower and Chaucer write it horel, viz. borel clerk, and borel men.] Rustick; rude; coarse. Obsolete.

How be I am but rude and borrel,

Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

TO BORROW. † v. a. [borgen, Dutch; borgian, Saxon; borga, Iceland.]

1. To take something from another upon credit: opposed to lend.

He borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again when he was able. Shakespeare.

We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards. Nehemiah, v. 4.

2. To ask of another the use of something for a time.

Then he said, go, borrow thee vessels abroad, of all thy neighbours. 2 Kings, iv. 3.

Where darkness and surprize made conquest cheap!

Where virtue borrowed the arms of chance,
And struck a random blow! Dryden.

3. To take something belonging to another.

A borrowed title hast thou bought too dear;
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king? Shakespeare.

They may borrow something of instruction, even from their past guilt. Decay of Piety.

Some persons of bright parts have narrow remembrance; for riches of their own, they are not solicitous to borrow.

Watts.

4. To use as one's own, though not belonging to one.

Unkind and cruel to deceive your son,
In borrow'd shapes, and his embrace to shun. Dryden.

5. To relieve; to protect; to redeem. Obsolete; but this meaning is most agreeable to the original northern word, borga, to be a sur

It [contrition] is a garment of sorow.

For payne it will you borrowe.

Hawkins, Orig. of the Drama, i. 58.

BORROW. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The thing borrowed.

Yet of your royal presence I'll adventure

The borrow of a week. Shakespeare.

2. A pledge; a surety. [Sax. borg, boph. See TO BORROW, and BOROUGH, which, however, is a false spelling; the word being, in our old authors, usually borwe, borrowe, or borow.] Obsolete.

This was the first source of shepherds' sorow,

That now will be quit with baile nor borrow.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

BORROWER. n. s. [from borrow.]

1. He that borrows; he that takes money upon trust; opposed to lender.

His talk is of nothing but of his poverty, for fear belike lest I should have proved a young borrower. Sidney.

Neither a borrower nor a lender be;

For loan oft loses both itself and friend,

And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry. Shakespeare.

Go not my horse the better,

I must become a borrower of the night

For a dark hour or twain. Shakespeare.

But you invert the covenants of her trust,

And harshly deal, like an ill borrower,

With that which you receiv'd on other terms. Milton, Com.

2. He that takes what is another's, and uses it as his own.

Some say, that I am a great borrower; however, none of my creditors have challenged me for it. Pope.

BORROWING. * n. s. [from borrow.] The act of borrowing; the thing borrowed.

Borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Borrowing, if it be not bettered by the borrower, among good authors is accounted plagiarie. Milton, Reconvalesces.

Yet are not these thefts, but borrowings; not impious falsities, but elegant flowers of speech.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 165.

BORSHOLDER. * n. s. [from borrow and hold; old Fr. borisolder, Kelham.]

Tenue thythings make an hundred; and five made a lathe or wapentake; of which tenure, each one was bound for another; and the eldest or best of them, whom they called the thythingman or borholder, that is, the eldest pledge, became surety for all the rest. Spenser on Ireland.

BOSPAGE. n. s. [boscage, Fr.]

1. Wood, or woodlands.

We bent our course thither, where we saw the appearance of land; and the next day, we might plainly discern that it was a land fit to our sight, and full of boscage, which made it shew the more dark. Bacon.

2. The representation of woods.

Chearful paintings in feasting and banqueting rooms; graver stories in galleries; landscapes and boscage, and such wild works, in open terraces, or summer-houses. Wotton.

BOSH. * n. s. This is a provincial word of Norfolk, in which "to cut a bosh" is, to make a figure. It seems to have a similar meaning in the following passage.

A man who has learned but the bosh of an argument, that has only seen the shadow of a syllogism, and but barely heard talk of rhetorick and poetry, may by the use of this science, and a little modern effrontery, baffle one of real learning, silence genius itself, and put the most exalted merit out of countenance. Student, ii. 287.

BOSKY. adj. [bosque, Fr.] Woody.

B O S

B O T

And with each end of thy blue bow do'st crown
My bosky acres, and my unshrub'd down. Shakespeare.
I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle, or bushy dell, of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn from side to side. Milton, Com.

BO'SOM. n. s. [borme, borom, Sax.]

1. The embrace of the arms holding any thing to the breast.

2. The breast; the heart.

Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses. Shakespeare.

3. The folds of the dress that cover the breast.

Put now thy hand into thy bosom; and he put his hand into his bosom: and when he took it out, behold his hand was leprous as snow. Exodus, iv. 6.

4. Inclosure; compass; embrace.

Unto laws thus received by a whole church, they which live within the bosom of that church, must not think it a matter indifferent, either to yield, or not to yield, obedience. Hooker.

5. The breast, as the seat of the passions.

Anger resteth in the bosoms of fools. Eccles. vii. 9.
From jealousy's tormenting strife
For ever be thy bosom freed. Prior.

Unfortunate Tallard! O, who can name
The pangs of rage, of sorrow, and of shame;
That with mix'd tumult in thy bosom swell'd,
When first thou saw'st thy bravest troops repell'd! Addison.
Here acting bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play. Young.

6. The breast, as the seat of tenderness.

Their soul was poured out into their mothers bosom.
Lamentations, ii. 12.

No further seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode;
There they alike in trembling hope repose,
The bosom of his father and his God. Gray.

7. The breast, as the receptacle of secrets.

If I covered my transgression as Adam, by hiding my iniquity in my bosom. Job, xxxi. 33.

8. Any receptacle close or secret; as, the bosom of the earth; the bosom of the deep.

9. The tender affections; kindness; favour.

Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosoms on his side. Shakespeare.
To whom the great Creator thus reply'd:
O Son, in whom my soul hath chief delight;
Son of my bosom, Son who art alone
My word, my wisdom, and effectual might. Milton, P. L.

10. Inclination; desire. Not used.

If you can pace your wisdom
In that good path that I could wish it go,
You shall have your bosom on this wretch. Shakespeare.

BOSOM, in composition, implies intimacy; confidence;
fondness.

No more that thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our bosom-interest; go, pronounce his death. Shakespeare.

This Antonio,
Being the bosom-lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord. Shakespeare.

Those domestick traitors, bosom-thieves,
Whom custom hath call'd wives; the readiest helps
To betray the heady husbands, rob the easy. B. Jonson.

He sent for his bosom-friends, with whom he most confidently consulted, and shewed the paper to them; the contents whereof he could not conceive. Clarendon.

The fourth privilege of friendship is that which is here specified in the text, a communication of secrets. A bosom-secret, and a bosom-friend, are usually put together. South, Sermon, ii. 64.

She who was a bosom-friend of her royal mistress, he calls an insolent woman, the worst of her sex. Addison.

To BO'SOM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose in the bosom.

Bosom up my counsel;
You'll find it wholesome. Shakespeare.

I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in virtue's book,
And the sweet peace that goodness bosoms ever. Milton, Com.

2. To conceal in privacy.

The groves, the fountains, and the flow'rs,
That open now their choicest bosom'd smells,
Reserv'd for night, and kept for thee in store. Milton, P. L.

Towers and battlements it sees,
Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton, L'Al.

To happy convents, bosom'd deep in vines,
Where slumber abbots, purple as their wines. Pope.

BO'SON. n. s. [corrupted from boatswain.]

The barks upon the billows ride,
The master will not stay;
The merry boson from his side
His whistle takes, to check and chide
The ling'ring lad's delay. Dryden.

BO'SQUET. n. s. See BUSKET.

BOSS. n. s. [bosse, Teut. and bosse, Fr.]

1. A stud; an ornament raised above the rest of the work; a shining prominence.

What signifies beauty, strength, youth, fortune, embroidered furniture, or gaudy bosses? I. E. Strange.
This ivory, intended for the bosses of a bridle, was laid up for a prince, and a woman of Caria or Mæonia dyed it. Pope.

2. The part rising in the midst of any thing.

He runneth upon him, even on his neck, upon the thick bosses of his bucklers. Job, xv. 26.

3. A thick body of any kind.

A boss made of wood, with an iron hook, to hang on the laths, or on a ladder, in which the labourer puts the mortar at the bitches of the tiles. Moxon.

If a close appulse be made by the lips, then is framed M; if by the boss of the tongue to the palate, near the throat, then K. Holder.

BO'SSED. adj. [Fr. bossé. Bosen out, strutting, or swelling out, turgidum, Prompt. Parv.] Studded.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

BO'SSAGE. n. s. [in architecture.]

1. Any stone that has a projecture, and is laid in a place in a building to be afterwards carved.

2. Rustick work, which consists of stones, which seem to advance beyond the naked of a building, by reason of indentures or channel, left in the joinings:
these are chiefly in the corners of edifices, and called rustick quoins. Builder's Dict.

BO'SSIVE. adj. [Fr. bossé, bumped out, knobby,
Crooked; deformed.]

Wives do worse than miscarry, that go their full time of a fool with a bossive birth. Osborne, Adv. to a Son, (1658, 3p. 72)

BO'SSY. adj. [Fr. bossé.] Prominent; studded; swelling out. See BOSSED.

BOTA'NICAL. adj. [Fr. botanique, from βοτάνη, an herb.] Relating to herbs; skilled in herbs.

The botanical artist meets every where with vegetables.
Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 6.

Some botanical critics tell us, the poets have not rightly followed the traditions of antiquity, in metamorphosing the sisters of Phaeton into poplars. Addison.

Some observations concerning plants, &c. of his own; some from his companions in those botanick studies.

Worthington to Hartlib, Ep. 10.

And to botanick land the flowers of health.

Thomson's Liberty, P. ii.

BOTA'NICALLY. * adv. [from botanical.] After the manner of botanists. Ash.

BOTA'NICK. * n. s. [from the adj.] He who is skilled in plants.

That there is such an herb, which for some kind of resplendency may be called aglaophotis, is by all botanicks or herbarists, I have seen, acknowledged.

M. Casaubon, Of Credulity, &c. p. 80.

BO'TANIST. n. s. [from botany.] One skilled in plants; one who studies the various species of plants.

The uliginous lacteous matter, taken notice of by that diligent botanist, was only a collection of corals. Woodward.

Then spring the living herbs, beyond the power Of botanist to number up their tribes. Thomson.

BOTANO'LOGY. n. s. [βοτανολογία.] A discourse upon plants. Dict.

BOTCH. n. s. [bozza, pronounced botza, Ital.]

1. A swelling or eruptive discoloration of the skin.

Time, which rots all, and makes botches pox,
And, plodding on, must make a calf an ox,
Hath made a lawyer. Donne.

Botches and blains must all his flesh imboss,
And all his people. Milton, P. L.

It proves far more incommodious, which, if it were propelled in boils, botches, or ulcers, as in the scurvy, would rather conduce to health. Harvey.

2. A part in any work ill finished, so as to appear worse than the rest. See To BOTCH.

With him,

To leave no rubs or botches in the work,
Fleance, his son, must embrace the fate. Shakespeare.

3. An adscitious, adventitious part clumsily added.

If both those words are not notorious botches, I am deceived, though the French translator thinks otherwise. Dryden.

A comma ne'er could claim

A place in any British name;
Yet, making here a perfect botch,
Thrusts your poor vowel from his notch. Swift.

To BOTCH. † v. a. [from the old Goth. bocta, to repair, Serenius.]

1. To mend or patch clothes clumsily.

Their coats, from botching newly brought, are torn. Dryden.

2. To mend any thing awkwardly.

To botch up what th' had torn and rent,
Religion and the government. Hudibras.

3. To put together unsuitably, or unskilfully; to make up of unsuitable pieces.

Go with me to my house,

And hear thou thence, how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby
May smile at this. Shakespeare.

Her speech is nothing,

Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection; they aim at it,
And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts. Shakespeare.

For treason botch'd in rhyme will be thy bane;
Rhime is the rock on which thou art to wreck. Dryden.

Our professor, besides his botching in the words, has sullied even the sense. Bentley's Lett. p. 215.

4. To mark with botches.

Young Hylas, botch'd with stains too foul to name,
In cradle here renews his youthful frame. Garth.

BO'TCHER. † n. s. [from botch.] A mender of old clothes; the same to a taylor as a cobbler to a shoemaker.

No man will put his son to a botcher or [ere] he binde him prentise to a taylor. Sir T. Elyot's Governour, fol. 52.

He was a botcher's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipt for getting the sheriff's fool with child. Shakespeare.

Botchers left old clothes in the lurch,
And fell to turn and patch the church. Hudibras.

BO'TCHY. adj. [from botch.] Marked with botches.

And those boils did run—say so—Did not the general run?
Were not that a botchy core? Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

BOTE. n. s. [bote, Sax. a word now out of use.]

1. A compensation or amends for a man slain, which is bound to another. Corvel.

2. It was used for any payment.

BOTH. † adj. [Goth. ba, baioths; Sax. ba, both; ba trā, both two, i. e. two together. So Chaucer, "Our bothe labour," Tr. and Cress. i. 973. The labour of us both together. In old Eng. bathe, beath, and baith, are found for both; the two last of which are still northern pronunciations.] The two; as well the one as the other. Et l'un & l'autre, Fr. It is used only of two.

And the next day, both morning and afternoon, he was kept by our party. Sidney, b. ii.

Moses and the prophets, Christ and his apostles, were in their times all preachers of God's truth; some by word, some by writing; some by both. Hooker, v. § 19.

Which of them shall I take?
Both? one? or neither? neither can be enjoy'd,
If both remain alive. Shakespeare.

Two lovers cannot share a single bed;
As therefore both are equal in degree,
The lot of both he left to destiny. Dryden.

A Venus and a Helen have been seen,
Both perjur'd wives, the goddess and the queen. Granville.

BOTH. conj. [from the adjective.] As well: it has the conjunction and to correspond with it.

A great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed. Acts, xiv. 1.

Power to judge both quick and dead. Milton, P. L.

Both the boy was worthy to be prais'd,
And Stimichon has often made me long
To hear, like him, so sweet a song. Dryden.

To BO'THER. * v. a. [This word Mr. Malone believes to have been first used in Ireland. It is also a Cornish word. It is not found in serious writing. The substantive bother is sometimes used in common conversation.] To perplex and confound by senseless loquacity; to tease by constant solicitation; to make a stunning noise.

With the din of which tube my head you so bother,
That I scarce can distinguish my right ear from t'other. Swift.

BO'TRYOID. adj. [βοτρυοειδής.] Having the form of a bunch of grapes.

The outside is thick set with botryoid efflorescencies, or small knobs, yellow, bluish, and purple; all of a shining metallic hue. Woodward.

BOTS. n. s. [without a singular.] A species of small worms in the entrails of horses; answering, perhaps, to the ascarides in human bodies.

Pence and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots. Shakespeare.

BO'TTLE. † n. s. [Fr. bouteille; Span. botella; Ital. botteglia; low Lat. butellus; Græco-Barb. βούτιλος, a cup or flagon, Gloss. Vet. V. Meursii Lexic. βούτιλος.]

1. A small vessel of glass, or other matter with a narrow mouth, to put liquor in.

The shepherd's homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle,
Is far beyond a prince's delicates. Shakspeare.

Many have a manner, after other men's speech, to shake their heads. A great officer would say, it was as men shake a bottle, to see if there was any wit in their heads, or no. Baron.

Then if thy ale in glass thou wouldst confine,
Let thy clean bottle be entirely dry. King.

He threw into the enemy's ships earthen bottles filled with serpents, which put the crew in disorder. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. A quantity of wine usually put into a bottle; a quart.

Sir, you shall stay, and take t'other bottle. Spect. No. 462.

3. A quantity of hay or grass bundled up. [Fr. botte de paille.]

Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hay; good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow. Shakspeare.

But I should wither in one day, and pass
To a lock of hay, that is a bottle of grass. Donne.

TO BOTTLÉ. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in bottles.

You may have it a most excellent cyder royal, to drink or to bottle. Mortimer.

When wine is to be bottled off, wash your bottles immediately before you begin; but be sure not to drain them. Swift.

BO'TTLE is often compounded with other words; as,
bottle-friend, a drinking-friend; bottle-companion.

Sam, who is a very good bottle-companion, has been the diversion of his friends. Addison.

BO'TTLED. * adj. [from bottle.] Having a belly protuberant like a bottle.

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider?
Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

BO'TTLE-ALE. * n. s. [from bottle and ale.] What we now call bottled-ale.

The Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Selling cheese and prunes,
And retail'd bottle-ale. Beaumont and Fl. Captain.

BO'TTLE-FLOWER. n. s. [cyanus, Lat.] A plant.

BO'TTLESCREW. n. s. [from bottle and screw.] A screw to pull out the cork.

A good butler always breaks off the point of his bottlescrew in two days, by trying which is hardest, the point of the screw, or the neck of the bottle. Swift.

BO'TTLING. * n. s. [from bottle.] The operation of putting liquors into bottles.

Around the common room
I puff'd my daily pipe's perfume;
Rode for a stomach, and inspected,
At annual bottlings, corks selected. T. Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

BO'TTOM. † n. s. [born, Saxon; bodem, Germ.]

1. The lowest part of any thing.
The vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom. St. Matt. xxvii. 51.

2. The ground under the water.
Behold, he spreadeth his light upon it, and covereth the bottom of the sea. Job, xxxvi. 30.

Shallow brooks that flow'd so clear,
The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

3. The foundation; the ground-work.
On this supposition my reasonings proceed, and cannot be affected by objections which are far from being built on the same bottom. Atterbury.

4. A dale; a valley; a low ground.
He stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom.
Zech. i. 8.

In the purlieus stands a sheep-cote,
West of this place: down in the neighbour bottom. Shakspeare.
On both the shores of that fruitful bottom, are still to be seen the marks of ancient edifices. Addison on Italy.

Equal convexity could never be seen: the inhabitants of such an earth could have only the prospect of a little circular plain, which would appear to have an acclivity on all sides;

so that every man would fancy himself the lowest, and that he always dwelt and moved in a bottom. Hentley.

5. The part most remote from the view; the deepest part.

His proposals and arguments should with freedom be examined to the bottom, that, if there be any mistake in them, nobody may be misled by his reputation. Locke.

6. Bound; limit.
But there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness. Shakspeare.

7. The utmost extent or profundity of any man's capacity, whether deep or shallow.

I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of Justice Shallow: how subject we old men are to lying! Shakspeare.

8. The last resort; the remotest cause; first motion.
He wrote many things which are not published in his name;
and was at the bottom of many excellent counsels, in which he did not appear. Addison.

9. A ship; a vessel for navigation.
A bawbling vessel was he captain of,
With which, such scathful grapple did he make
With the most noble bottom of our fleet. Shakspeare.

My ventures are not in one bottom trusted;
Nor to one place. Shakspeare.

We have memory, not of one ship that ever returned, and but of thirteen persons only, at several times, that chose to return in our bottoms. Bacon.

He's a foolish seaman,
That when his ship is sinking, will not Unlade his hopes into another bottom. Denham.

He puts to sea upon his own bottom; holds the stern himself;
and now, if ever, we may expect new discoveries. Norris.

He spreads his canvas, with his pole he steers,
The freights of fitting ghosts in his shin bottom bears. Dryden.

10. A chance; an adventure; state of hazard.
He began to say, that himself and the prince were too much to venture in one bottom. Clarendon.

We are embarked with them on the same bottom, and must be partakers of their happiness or misery. Spectator, No. 273.

11. A ball of thread wound up together.
This whole argument will be like bottoms of thread, close wound up. Bacon.

Silkworms finish their bottoms in about fifteen days. Mortimer.

Each Christmas they accounts did clear,
And wound their bottom round the year. Prior.

12. BOTTOM of a lance. The lowest end.

13. BOTTOM of beer. The grounds, or dregs.
TO BOT-TOM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To build upon. to fix upon as a support: with on.

They may have something of obscurity, as being bottom'd upon, and fetched from the true nature of the things. Hale.
Pride has a very strong foundation in the mind; it is bottom'd upon self-love. Collier.

The grounds upon which we bottom our reasoning, are but apart; something is left out, which should go into the reckoning. Locke.

Action is supposed to be bottomed upon principle. Atterbury.
2. To wind upon something; to twist thread round something.

Therefore, as you unwind your love for him,
Lest it should unravel, and be good to none,
You must provide to bottom it on me. Shakspeare.

TO BOT-TOM. v. n. To rest upon as its ultimate support.

Find out upon what foundation any proposition, advanced, bottoms; and observe the intermediate ideas, by which it is joined to that foundation upon which it is erected. Locke.

BO'TTOMED. adj. [from bottom.] Having a bottom;
it is usually compounded.

There being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats, to transport the land-forces, under the wing and protection of the great navy. Bacon.

Bo'ttomless. adj. [from bottom.] Without a bottom; fathomless.

Wickedness may well be compared to a bottomless pit, into which it is easier to keep one's self from falling, than being fallen, to give one's self any stay from falling infinitely. Sidney.

Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?
Then be my passions bottomless with them. Shakespeare.

Him the Almighty Power
Hurl'd headlong, flaming from the ethereal sky,
To bottomless perdition. Milton, P. L.

Bo'ttomry. n. s. [in navigation and commerce.]
The act of borrowing money on a ship's bottom; that is, by engaging the vessel for the repayment of it, so as that, if the ship miscarry, the lender loses the money advanced; but if it arrives safe at the end of the voyage, he is to repay the money lent, with a certain premium or interest agreed on; and this on pain of forfeiting the ship. Harris.

Bo'uche.* n. s. See BOUGE.

Bo'vate.* n. s. [Lat. bovata.] A bovate (oxgang) of land is as much as one yoke of oxen can reasonably cultivate in a year. Burn, Hist. of Cumb. Gloss.

BO'UCHET. n. s. [French.] A sort of pear.

BOUD. n. s. An insect which breeds in malt; called also a weevil. Dict.

To BOUGE. v. n. [bouge, Fr.] To swell out.

BOUGE.* n. s. [a corruption of the French bouche.]
Bouge of court is an expression of our old language for the "allowance to the officers of the court."
Bouch au cour, allowance of diet at the king's table.
Kelham. Avoir bouche à cour, to eat and drink scot-free; to be in ordinary at court. Cotgrave.] Provisions; meat and drink. Not now in use.

They knock'd hypoerisy o' the pate, and made room for a bombard-man that brought bouge for a country lady or two, that fainted, he said, with fasting for the fine sight since seven o'clock in the morning. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

BOUGH. n. s. [box, Sax. the gh is mute.] An arm or large shoot of a tree, bigger than a branch, yet not always distinguished from it.

A vine-labourer, finding a bough broken, took a branch of the same bough, and tied it about the place broken. Sidney.
Their lord and patron loud did him proclaim,
And at his feet their laurel boughs did throw. Spenser, F. Q.

From the bough
She gave him of that fair enticing fruit. Milton, P. L.

As the dove's flight did guide Æneas, now
May thine conduct me to the golden bough. Denham.

Under some fav'rite myrtle's shady boughs,
They speak their passions in repeated vows. Roscommon.

See how, on every bough, the birds express,
In their sweet notes, their happiness. Dryden.

'Twas all her joy the ripening fruits to tend,
And see the boughs with happy burdens bend. Pope.

BOUGHT.† [Sax. bohte.] preter. and participle of To buy; which see.

The chief were these who not for empire fought,
But with their blood their country's safety bought. Pope.

BOUGHT.† n. s. [Teut. bocht, bucht, an inclosure, a fence of stakes; from bogen, to bend, bow, or in-flect. Sax. boecht, bowed.]

1. A twist; a link; a knot.

His huge long tail wound up in hundred folds,—
Whose wreathed boughts whenever he unfolds,
And thick entangled knots adown does slack. Spenser, F. Q.

Immortal verse,
Such as the melting soul may pierce,
In notes, with many a winding bought
Of linked sweetness, long draw out. Milton, Il Pens.

2. A flexure.

The flexure of the joints is not the same in elephants as in other quadrupeds, but nearer unto those of a man; the bought of the fore-legs not directed backward, but laterally, and somewhat inward. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

3. That part of a sling which contains the stone.

The souls of thine enemies, then shall He sling out as out of the middle of a sling: [In the margin,] in the midst of the bought of a sling. 1 Sam. xxv. 29.

Bo'ugury.* adj. [from bought.] Crooked; bending.
Not in use. Sherwood.

BOUILLON. n. s. [French.] Broth; soup; any thing made to be supped: a term used in cookery.

Bo'ulder Walls. [in architecture.] Walls built of round flints or pebbles, laid in a strong mortar; used where the sea has a beach cast up, or where there are plenty of flints. Build. Dict.

To BOULT. v. a. See To BOLE.

To BOUNCE.† v. n. [a word formed, says Skinner,
from the sound.]

1. To fall or fly against any thing with great force, so as to rebound.

The fright awaken'd Arcite with a start,
Against his bosom bounc'd his heaving heart. Dryden.

2. To spring; to make a sudden leap; a sudden explosion.

High nonsense is like beer in a bottle, which has, in reality, no strength and spirit, but frets, and flies, and bounces, and mitates the passions of a much nobler liquor. Addison.

They bounce from their nest,
No longer will tarry. Swift.

Out bounc'd the mastiff of the triple head;
Away the hare with double swiftness fled. Swift.

3. To make a sudden noise.

Just as I was putting out my light, another bounces as hard as he can knock. Swift.

4. To boast; to bully: a sense only used in familiar speech.

He gives away countries, and disposes of kingdoms; and bounces, blusters, and swaggers, as if he were really sovereign lord and sole master of the universe.

Louth's Letter to Warburton, p. 14.

5. To be bold, or strong.

Forsooth the bouncing Amazon,
Your buskin'd mistress, and your warrior love,
To Theseus must be wedded. Shakespeare.

6. In the preceding instance bouncing, applied to an Amazon, may mean what Dr. Johnson asserts, to be bold or strong. But this word was often formerly applied to the fair sex merely to denote a superabundance of excellence, or cause of admiration, in them; and was also applied to things. We use brave in a similar manner.

I saw the bouncing bellhime,
Tripping over the dale alone;—
She sweeter than the violet. Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

With lofty luring looks, they, [ladies] bouncing brave,
The highest place in all men's sight must have.
Mir. for Magistrates, p. 217.

We have had a merry and a lusty ordinary,
And wine, and good meat, and a bouncing reckoning.
Beaum. and Fl. Wild Goose Chase.

BOUNCE,† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A strong sudden blow.

The bounce burst ope the door; the scornful fair Relentless look'd. Dryden.

As I was sitting in my chamber, and thinking on a subject for my next Spectator, I heard two or three irregular bounces at my landlady's door; and upon the opening of it, a loud cheerful voice inquiring whether the philosopher was at home.

Addison, Spectator, No. 383.

2. A sudden crack or noise

- What cannoneer begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon fire, and smokes, and bonnce;
He gives the bastinado with his tongue. Shakspeare.
- Two hazel-nuts I threw into the flame,
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name;
This with the loudest bonnce me sore amaz'd,
That in a flame of brightest colour blaz'd. Gay.
3. A boast; a threat: in low language.
- Bo'UNCER. n. s. [from bonnce.] A boaster; a bully;
an empty threatener: in colloquial speech.
- BOUND.† n. s. [Sax. bunbe, from bundan, to bind.
Old Fr. bundes, limit. Kelham.]
1. A limit; a boundary; that by which any thing is terminated.
- Illimitable ocean! without bound;
Without dimension; where length, breadth, and height,
And time, and place, are lost. Milton, P. L.
- Those vast Scythian regions were separated by the natural bounds, of rivers, lakes, mountains, woods, or marshes. Temple.
- Indus and Ganges, our wide empire's bounds,
Swell their dy'd currents with their natives wounds. Dryden.
- Through all th' infernal bounds,
Which flaming Phlegethon surrounds,
Sad Orpheus sought his consort lost. Pope.
2. A limit by which any excursion is restrained.
- Hath he set bounds between their love and me?
I am their mother, who shall bar me from them? Shakspeare.
- Stronger and fiercer by restraint he roars,
And knows no bound, but makes his pow'r his shores. Denham.
- Any bounds made with body, even adamant walls, are far from putting a stop to the mind, in its progress in space. Locke.
3. [from To bound, v. n.] A leap; a jump; a spring.
- Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetch'ing mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud. Shakspeare.
- The horses started with a sudden bound,
And flung the reins and chariot to the ground. Addison.
- Dextrous he 'scapes the coach with nimble bounds,
Whilst ev'ry honest tongue St up th' chief resolves. Gay.
4. A rebound; the leap of something flying back by the force of the blow.
- These inward disgusts are but the first bound of this ball of contention. Decay of Piety.
- To BOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To limit; to terminate.
- A lofty tow'r, and strong on every side,
With treble walls, which Phlegethon surrounds,
Whose fiery flood the burning empire bounds. Dryden.
2. To restrain; to confine.
- Take but degree away,
The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakspeare.
3. Sometimes with in.
- "My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister Bounds in my sire's. Shakspeare.
- To BOUND. v. n. [bondir, Fr.]
1. To jump; to spring; to move forward by leaps.
- 'Torrismoud appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er,
Leaping and bounding on the billows heels. Dryden.
- Before his lord the ready spaniel bounds,
Panting with hope, he tries the furrow'd grounds. Pope.
- When sudden through the woods a bounding stag
Rush'd headlong down, and plung'd amidst the river. Rowe.
- Warbling to the vary'd strain, advance
Two sprightly youths, to form the bounding dance. Pope.
2. To rebound; to fly back by repercussion.
- Mark then a bounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief. Shakspeare.
- To BOUND. v. a. To make to bound.

- If I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I would lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jackanapes, never off. Shakspeare.
- If love, ambitious, sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanch? Shakspeare.
- BOUND.† pret. and particp. pass. of bind. [Sax. bond.]
- Nay, said Pamela, none shall take that office from myself, being so much bound as I am for my education. Smiley.
- This is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound,—
—You should in all sense be much bound to him;
For, as I hear, he was much bound for you. Shakspeare.
- The gentleman is learn'd, a most rare speaker,
To nature none more bound. Shakspeare.
- The bishops of Hungary, being wonderfully rich, were bound to keep great numbers of horsemen, which they used to bring into the field. Knolles.
- They summoned the governor to deliver it to them, or else they would not leave one stone upon another. To which the governor made no other reply, than that he was not bound to repair it; but, however, he would, by God's help, keep the ground afterwards. Clarendon.
- BOUND.† adj. [a word of doubtful etymology, Dr.
Johnson says. It is a common word still in the North of England for going, or ready, and is pronounced boene; "where are you boene to," i. e.
whither are you going? or where are you bound to? Bonn is used for ready by Chaucer, and other of our old writers. So it is still employed in Scotland. Ruddiman and Chalmers derive the word from the Sax. abunden, expeditus, which, even if rightly translated, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, seems to be an insulated term, not allied to any other words in that language; and therefore the origin, given by Dr. Jamieson, from the Su. Goth.
boad, to prepare, to make ready, of which boen or boin is the participle, must be preferred.] Destined;
intending to come to any place.
- His be that care, whom most it doth concern,
Said he; but whither with such hasty flight
Art thou now bound? For well might I discern Great cause, that carries thee so swift and light. Spenser, F. Q.
- To be bound for a port one desires extremely, and sail to it with a fair gale, is very pleasant. Temple.
- Willing we sought your shores, and hither bound,
The port so long desir'd, at length we found. Dryden.
- Bo'UNDARY. n. s. [from bound.] Limit; bound.
- He suffers the confluence and clamours of the people to pass all boundaries of laws, and reverence to his authority. King Charles.
- Sensation and reflection are the boundaries of our thoughts; beyond which the mind, whatever efforts it would make, is not able to advance. Locke.
- Great part of our sins consist in the irregularities attending the ordinary pursuits of life; so that our reformation must appear, by pursuing them within the boundaries of duty. Rogers.
- Bo'UNDEN.† participle passive of bind. [Sax. bunden.]
- Not now much in use.
- Hereafter, in a better world than this,
I shall desire more love and knowledge of you. —
—I rest much bounden to you: fare you well. Shakspeare.
- We also most humbly besought him to accept of us as his true servants, by as just a right as ever men on earth were bounden. Bacon.
- To be careful for a provision of all necessaries for ourselves, and those who depend on us, is a bounden duty. Rogers.
- Bo'UNDENLY.* adv. [from bounden.] In a bounden or dutiful manner. Obsolete.
- Your ladship's daughter, most boundenly obedient.
Transl. of Ockin's Sermons, (1583,) Epist. Dedicat.
- Bo'UNDER.* n. s. [from bound.]
1. A limiter; he who imposes bounds.
- Now the bounder of all these, is only God himself; who is the bounder of all things. Fotherby's Atheomastix, p. 274.

2. A boundary. Sometimes written boundure.
The boundure of Alexander's march into India being in the tract obscure. Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 254.
Kingdoms are bound within their bounders, as it were in bands; and shut up within their limits, as it were in prison. Fotherby's Athcomastix, p. 274.

BO'YNDING-STONE. } n. s. A stone to play with.
BOUND-STONE.

I am past a boy;
A sceptre's but a play-thing, and a globe
A bigger bounding-stone. Dryden.

BO'UNDLESS. adj. [from bound.] Unlimited; unconfined; immeasurable; illimitable.

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Shakespeare.

Heaven has of right all victory design'd;
Whence boundless power dwells in a will confin'd. Dryden.

Man seems as boundless in his desires, as God is in his being;
and therefore nothing but God himself can satisfy him. South.

Though we make duration boundless as it is, we cannot extend it beyond all being. God fills eternity, and it is hard to find a reason, why any one should doubt that he fills immensity. Locke.

Some guide the course of wand'ring orbs on high,
Or roll the planets through the boundless sky. Pope.

BO'UNDLESSNESS. n. s. [from boundless.] Exemption from limits.

God has corrected the boundlessness of his voluptuous desires, by stinting his strength, and contracting his capacities. South.

BO'UNTEOUS.† adj. [from bounty, old Fr. bountenouse.] Liberal; kind; generous; munificent; beneficent:

a word used chiefly in poetry for bountiful.

Every one,
According to the gift, which bounteous nature
Hath in him clos'd. Shakespeare.

Her soul abhorring avarice,
Bounteous; but almost bounteous to a vice. Dryden.

BO'UNTEOUSLY. adv. [from bounteous.] Liberally; generously; largely.

He bounteously bestow'd unenvy'd good
On me. Dryden.

BO'UNTEOUSNESS.† n. s. [from bounteous.] Munificence; liberality; kindness. Dr. Johnson cites a passage from the Psalms to illustrate this word, where the real word, however, is plenteousness. "Thou fillest all things living with plenteousness." Ps. cxlv. 16.

BO'UNTIFUL. adj. [from bounty and full.]

1. Liberal; generous; munificent.

As bountiful as mines of India. Shakespeare.

If you will be rich, you must live frugal; if you will be popular, you must be bountiful. Taylor.

I am obliged to return my thanks to many, who, without considering the man, have been bountiful to the poet. Dryden.

God, the bountiful author of our being. Locke.

2. It has of before the thing given, and to before the person receiving.

Our king spares nothing, to give them the share of that felicity, of which he is so bountiful to his kingdom. Dryden.

BO'UNTIFUL.† adv. [from bountiful.] Liberally; in a bountiful manner; largely.

And now thy alms is given,
And thy poor starv'ling bountifully fed. Donne.

It is affirm'd, that it never raineth in Egypt; the river bountifully requiting it in its inundation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

BO'UNTIFULNESS. n. s. [from bountiful.] The quality of being bountiful; generosity.

Enriched to all bountifulness. 2 Cor. ix. 11.

BO'UNTIFULHEAD. } n. s. [from bounty and head, or hood.]
BO'UNTIFULHEDE. } See HOOD.] Goodness; virtue. It is now wholly out of use.

This goodly frame of temperance,
Formerly grounded, and just settled
On firm foundation of true bountihead. Spenser, F. Q.
How shall frail pen, with fear disparaged, (Conceive such sovereign glory, and great bountihood? Spenser, F. Q.

BO'UNTY.† n. s. [bonté, Fr. bountée, old Fr. from the Lat. bonitas.]

1. Generosity; liberality; munificence.

We do not so far magnify her exceeding bounty, as to affirm, that she bringeth into the world the sons of men, adorned with gorgeous attire. Hooker, iii. § 4.

If you knew to whom you shew this honour,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shakespeare.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
That thou may'st nothing give, that is not thine. Denham.

Those godlike men, to wanting virtue kind,
Bounty well plac'd prefer'd, and well design'd,
To all their titles. Dryden.

2. It seems distinguished from charity, as a present from an alms; being used, when persons, not absolutely necessitous, receive gifts; or when gifts are given by great persons.

Tell a miser of bounty to a friend, or mercy to the poor, and he will not understand it. South.

Her majesty did not see this assembly so proper to excite charity and compassion; though I question not but her royal bounty will extend itself to them. Addison.

3. Simply, goodness; agreeably to the original of the word. Not now in use. Spenser has used the adjective bounteous in the same sense.

Let not her fault your sweet affections marre,
Ne blott the bounty of all womankind
'Mongst thousands good, one wanton dame to find. Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 49.

BO'UQUET.* n. s. [Fr.] A nosegay. See BUSKET.

May-busquets; if busket be not there the French bouquet, now become English. Watson, Notes on Milton.

TO BOURD.* v. n. [Fr. bourder, from the low Lat. burdare, to joke, to jest; which is supposed to be adopted from bohordicum, a kind of exercise or tilting with spears. V. Du Cange in BOHORDICUM. This is one of our oldest words; and is still used in the North of England, as the substantive also is, for jest.] To jest. Barret and Sherwood.

Brethren, quoth he, take kepe what I shal say;
My wit is great, though that I bourde and play. Chaucer, Pard. T.

BOURD.* n. s. [old Fr. bourd, bord, a jest or story. V. Lacombe. See also TO BOURN.] A jest.

They all agreed; so, turning all to game
And pleasaukt bord, they past forth on their way. Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 13.

Gramercy, Borrill, for thy company,
For all thy jests, and all thy merry bourds. Drayton, Shep. Garland. p. 53.

BO'URDER.* n. s. [Fr. bourdeur.] A jester. Huloet.

BO'URDINGLY.* adv. [from bourd.] In sport. Huloet.

TO BO'URGEON.† v. n. [bourgeonner, Fr.] To sprout; to shoot into branches; to put forth buds.

And tools to prune the trees, before the pride
Of hasting prime did make them burgein round. Spenser, F. Q. vii. vii. 43.

I fear, I shall begin to grow in love
With my dear self, and my most prosperous parts,
They do so spring and burgeon. B. Jonson's Fox, p. 1.

Long may the dew of heaven distil upon them, to make them
bourgeon and propagate among themselves. Howell.

O that I had the fruitful heads of Hydra,
That one might burgeon where another fell!
Still would I give thee work! Dryden.

BOURN.† n. s. [borne, Fr.]

1. A bound; a limit.

Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none. Shakespeare, Temp.

That undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

False,
As dice are to be wish'd, by one that fixes
No bourn 'twixt his and mine. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2. [From bupn, Saxon; burn, Gael. water.] A brook; a torrent; whence many towns, seated near brooks, have names ending in bourn. It is not now used in either sense, though the second continues in the Scottish dialect, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, used still in the north of England for a brook, or small stream of water. And Milton affords a beautiful instance of the word, which Dr. Johnson has misunderstood; the poet, in his landscape, meaning by "bosky bourn" a rivulet skirted with trees; not merely a bound or limit, as Dr. Johnson has stated.

No swelling Neptune, no loud thundering Jove,
Can change my cheer, or make me ever mourn;
My little boat can safely pass this perilous bourn. Spenser, F. Q.
And ere the sun had clim'd the eastern hills,
To gild the muttering bourns and pretty rills.

Browne, Brit. Past. p. 75.
I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle, or bushy dell of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn from side to side.

Milton, Comus, ver. 313.

BOURSE.* n. s. See BURSE.

To BOUSE.† v. n. [huysen, Dutch.] To drink lavishly; to tope.

As he rode, he somewhat still did eat,
And in his hand did bear a bousing can,
Of which he sipt. Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 22.
Though he bouze his belly full.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 381.

A file of bousing comrades there. Cleveland's Poems, &c. p. 17.

To BOUSE.* v. a. To swallow.

To restore and well flesh them, [hawks,] they commonly gave them hog's flesh, with oil, butter, and honey; and a decoction of cumfory to bouse. Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 115.

Bou'sv. adj. [from bouse.] Drunken.

With a long legend of romantick things,
Which in his cups the bousy poet sings.
The guests upon the day appointed came,
Each bousy fariac with his sinp'ring dame. Dryden.

BOUT. n. s. [botta, Ital.] A turn; as much of an action as is performed at one time, without interruption; a single part of an action carried on by successive intervals.

The play began: Pas durst not Cosma chace;
But did intend next bout with her to meet. Sidney.

Ladies, that have your feet
Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout. Shakspeare.

When in your motion you are hot,
As make your bouts more violent to that end,
He calls for drink. Shakspeare.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legatees are blotted out. Dryden.

A weasel seized a bat; the bat begged for life: says the weasel, I give no quarter to birds: says the bat, I am a mouse; look on my body: so she got off for that bout. L'Estrange.

We'll see when 'tis enough,
Or if it want the nice concluding bout. King.

BOUTADE.* n. s. [Fr.] A whim; a start of fancy; an act of caprice.

His [lord Peter's] first boutade was, to kick both their wives one morning out of doors, and his own too. Tale of a Tub.

BOUTEFEU. n. s. [French.] An incendiary; one who kindles feuds and discontents. Now disused.

Animated by a base fellow, called John à Chamber, a very boutefeu, who bore much sway among the vulgar, they entered into open rebellion. Baron.

Nor could ever any order be obtained impartially to punish the known boutefeus, and open incendiaries. King Charles.

Besides the herd of boutefeus,
We set on work within the house. Mudibras.

Bo'UTISALE. n. s. [I suppose from bonty or booty, and sale.] A sale at a cheap rate, as booty or plunder is commonly sold.

To speak nothing of the great boutisale of colleges and chantries. Sir J. Hayward.

BOUITS RIMEZ. [French.] The last words or rhimes of a number of verses given to be filled up.

To BOW.† v. a. [buzan, Saxon, boga, Su.]

1. To bend, or inflect. It sounds as now, or how.

Bow thy heavens, O Lord, and come down. Psalms exliv. 5.

A threepence bow'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it. Shakspeare.

Orpheus, with his lute, made trees,
And the mountain tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakspeare.

I can fly, or I can run,
Quickly to the earth's green end,

Where the bow'd welkin slow doth bend. Milton, Com. v. 1015.

Some bow the vines, which bury'd in the plain,
Their tops in distant arches rise again. Dryden.

The mind has not been made obedient to discipline, when at first it was most tender and most easy to be bowed. Locke.

2. To bend the body in token of respect or submission.

They came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him. 2 Kings, ii. 15.

Is it to bow down his head as a hyrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord? Isaiah, lviii. 5.

3. To bend, or incline, in condescension.

Let it not grieve thee to bow down thine ear to the poor, and give him a friendly answer. Ecclesi. iv. 8.

4. To depress; to crush.

Are you so gospell'd,
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever? Shakspeare.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes may bow me to the ground. Pope.

To Bow.† v. n.

1. To bend; to suffer flexure.

The everlasting mountains were scattered; the perpetual hills did bow. Habakk. iii. 6.

2. To make a reverence.

Rather let my head
Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heav'n, and to my king. Shakspeare.

This is the great idol to which the world bows; to this we pay our devoutest homage. Decay of Piety

Admir'd, ador'd by all the circling crowd,
For wheresoe'er she turn'd her face, they bow'd. Dryden.

3. To stoop.

The people bowed down upon their knees, to drink. Judges, vii. 6.

4. To sink under pressure.

They stoop, they bow down together; they could not deliver the burden. Isaiah, xlv. 2.

Bow. n. s. [from the verb. It is pronounced, like the verb, as now, how.] An act of reverence or submission, by bending the body.

Some clergy too she wou'd allow,
Nor quarrel'd at their awkward bow. Swift.

Bow.† n. s. [Sax. boz, boh.] pronounced as grow, no, lo, without any regard to the vo.

1. An instrument of war, made by holding wood or metal bent with a string, which, by its spring, shoots arrows with great force.

B O W

Take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver and thy bow, and go out to the field, and take me some venison. Genesis.
The white faith of hist'ry cannot show,
That e'er the musket yet could beat the bow. Alleyne's Hen. VII.

2. A rainbow.

I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth. Gen. ix. 13.

3. The instrument with which ring-instruments are struck.

Their instruments were various in their kind;
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind:
The sawtry, pipe, and hauthoy's noisy band,
And the soft lute trembling beneath the touching hand.
Dryden, Fables.

4. The doubling of a string in a slip-knot. This is perhaps corruptly used for bought.

Make a knot, and let the second knot be with a bow.
Wiseman.

5. A yoke.

As the ox hath his bow, sir, the horse his curb, and the fault-con his bells, so man hath his desire. Shakspeare.

6. Bow of a saddle. The bows of a saddle are two pieces of wood laid archwise, to receive the upper part of a horse's back, to give the saddle its due form, and to keep it tight.

Farrier's Dict.

7. Bow of a ship. That part of her which begins at the loof, and compassing ends of the stern, and ends at the sternmost parts of the fore-castle. If a ship hath a broad bow, they call it a bold bow; if a narrow thin bow, they say she hath a lean bow. The piece of ordnance that lies in this place, is called the bow-piece; and the anchors that hang here, are called her great and little bow-ers.

8. Bow is also a mathematical instrument, made of wood, formerly used by seamen in taking the sun's altitude.

9. Bow is likewise a beam of wood or brass, with three long screws, that direct a lath of wood or steel to any arch; used commonly to draw draughts of ships, projections of the sphere, or wherever it is requisite to draw long arches.

Harris.

BOW-BEARER. n. s. [from bow and bear.] An under-officer of the forest.

Cowel.

BOW-BENT. adj. [from bow and bent.] Crooked.

A sibyl old, bow-bent with crooked age,
That far events full wisely could presage. Milton, Vac. Ec.

BOW-HAND. n. s. [from bow and hand.] The hand that draws the bow.

Surely he shoots wide on the bow-hand, and very far from the mark. Spenser on Ireland.

BOW-LEG. n. s. [from bow and leg.] A leg crooked as a bow.

Who fears to set straight, or hide, the imhandsome warpings of bow-legs? Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsomeness, p. 60.

BOW-LEGGED. adj. [from bow and leg.] Having crooked legs.

BOW-SHOT. n. s. [from bow and shot. Sometimes written bow-shoot.] The space which an arrow may pass in its flight from the bow.

She went, and sat her down over against him, a good way off, as it were a bow-shot. Gen. xxi. 16.

About a bow-shoot hence to the southward, upon the plain or lower ground; is a high column in perfection.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 148.

Though he were not then a bow-shot off, and made haste;
yet, by that time he was come, the thing was no longer to be seen. Boyle.

Bow-WINDOW. n. s. [from bow and window.] A window projected, thrown out beyond the rest. But see BAY-WINDOW.

Bo'wABLE. adj. [from To bow.] Flexible of disposition.

If she be a virgin, she is pliable or bowable.

Wodroephe's Fr. Gram. (1623,) p. 323.

To Bo'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To take forth the bowels. From this old unnoticed verb comes the modern disembowel, and also Shakspeare's embowel. Sherwood renders bowelled by desentrailé. Huloet and Minshew.

Bo'WEL-LESS. adj. [from bowel and less.] Without tenderness or compassion.

Miserable men commiserate not themselves; bowel-less unto others, and merciless unto their own bowels.

Browne, Chr. Morals, i. 7.

BO'WELS. n. s. [boyau, Fr.]

1. Intestines; the vessels and organs within the body. He smote him therewith in the fifth rib, and shed out his bowels. 2 Sam. xx. 10.

2. The inner parts of any thing.

Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy; and pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood appear.

Shakspeare.

His soldiers spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.

Shakspeare.

As he saw drops of water distilling from the rock, by following the veins, he has made himself two or three fountains in the bowels of the mountain. Addison.

3. The seat of pity, or kindness.

His bowels did yearn upon him.

Genesis, xliii. 30.

4. Tenderness; compassion.

He had no other consideration of money, than for the support of his lustre; and whilst he could do that, he cared not for money; having no bowels in the point of running in debt, or borrowing all he could. Clarendon.

5. This word seldom has a singular, except in writers of anatomy.

BO'WER. n. s. [not from bough or branch, or from the verb bow or bend, as Dr. Johnson asserts; but from the Sax. bup, a chamber. Our old language sometimes gives it bure; and in Cumberland, to this day, a back-room or chamber without a fire-place, or a little parlour, is called a boor. This word of northern origin is in the Goth. bur, a cottage; Theotisc. buer, the same; Iccl. bur, a little dwelling, from bouan, to dwell; Dan. buur, an inner room; Dutch, buer, a cottage. The word, thus signifying a small or private abode, a place of shade or retirement, was easily trans-ferred to the place of shelter or retirement, called an arbour. See BUR.]

1. A chamber; a private retirement.

Go to my love, where she is careless laid,
Yet in her winter's bowre not well awake. Spenser, Sonn. lxx.

The gaunt selfe dismaid with that sound,
Where he with his Duessa dalliance fownd,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bowre.

Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 5.

2. A cottage: Harington has so rendered the expression of Ariosto, tugurii, agreeably to the old usage of bower.

Courtesie oft-times in simple bowres
Is found as great as in the stately towres.

Transl. of Ariost. xiv. 62.

3. Any abode or residence.

B O W

Wasting the cuntry with sword and with fire,
Overturning towns, high castles, and towers,
Like Mars, god of war, enflamed with ire,
I forced the Frenchmen to abandon their towers.
Mir for Magistrates, p. 282.

But, O sad virgin, that thy power
Might raise Musæus from his bower. Milton, Il Pens.
Refresh'd, they wait them to the bower of state,
Where, circled with his peers, Atrides sate. Pope, Il.

4. A place covered with the branches of trees or plants; a shady recess.

The pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Hand in hand alone they pass'd
On to their blissful bower: — the roof
Of thickest covert was inwoven shade,
Laurel and myrtle, and what higher grew
Of firm and fragrant leaf? Milton, P. I.

Bo'WER.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson considers this word as signifying, in Spenser, a blow, a stroke, from the Fr. bouerrer, to fall upon. Both the etymology and definition are erroneous. The word is used for the shoulder, Sax. boh, Dun. bou. The bowers, in anatomy, are the musculi flexores.] One of the muscles which bend the joints.

His rawbone armes, whose mighty brawned bours
Were wont to rive steele plates, and helmets hew,
Were cleue consum'd. Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 4t.

Bo'WER. n. s. [from the bow of a ship.] Anchors so called. See Bow.

To Bo'WER. v. a. [from the noun.] To embower; to inclose.

Thou didst bower the spirit,
In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh. Shakspeare.

To Bo'WER.* v. n. To lodge. Obsolete.
Amongst them all grows not a fayer flowre
Than is the bloosme of comely courtesie;
Which though it on a lowly stake doth bower,
Yet brancheth forth in brave nobilitie,
And spreads itself through all civilitie. Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 4.

Bo'WERY.† adj. [from bower.] Imbowering; covering with shade.

Landships how gay the bowery grotto yields,
Which thought creates, and lavish fancy builds. Tickell.
Snatch'd through the verdant maze the hurried eye
Distracted wanders: now the bowery walk
Of covert close, where scarce a speck of day
Falls on the lengthen'd gloom, protracted sweeps. Thomson, Spring.

To BowGE. See To BouGE.

Bo'WINGLY.* adv. [from bow.] In a bending manner; like a bow, arcuatim. Huloet.

BOWL.† n. s. [buelin, Welsh; which signifies, according to Junius, any thing made of horn, as drinking cups anciently were. It is pronounced bole. So far Junius and Dr. Johnson. But the word is of northern origin: Goth. bolla, a cup, Sax. bolla.]

1. A vessel to hold liquids, rather wide than deep; distinguished from a cup, which is rather deep than wide.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Shakspeare.
If a piece of iron be fastened on the side of a bowl of water, a loadstone, in a boat of cork, will make unto it. Brown.

The sacred priests, with ready knives, bereave
The beasts of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden.

While the bright Sein, t' exalt the soul,
With sparkling plenty crowns the bowl,
And wit and social mirth inspires. Fenton to Lord Gower.

B O W

2. The hollow part of any thing.

If you are allowed a large silver spoon for the kitchen, let half the bowl of it be worn out with continual scraping. Swift.

3. A basin, or fountain.

But the main matter is so to convey the water, as it never stay either in the bowl or in the cistern. Bacon.

BOWL.† n. s. [boule, Fr. perhaps from the Lat. bullā. It is generally pronounced as bow, howl.] A round mass, which may be rolled along the ground.

Like to a bowl upon a subtile ground,
I've tumbled past the throw. Shakspeare.

How finely dost thou times and seasons spin!
And make a twist theecker'd with night and day!
Which as it lengthens, winds, and winds us in,
As bowls go on, but turning all the way. Herbert.

Like him, who would lodge a bowl upon a precipice, either my praise falls back, or stays not on the top, but rowls over.

Men may make a game at bowls in the summer, and a game at whisk in the winter. Dennis's Letters.

Though that piece of wood, which is now a bowl, may be made square, yet, if roundness be taken away, it is no longer a bowl. Watts, Logick.

To BOWL.† v. a. [old Fr. bouler.]

1. To roll as a bowl.
Break all the spokes and fellics of her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heaven. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. To pelt with any thing rolled.
Alas! I had rather be set quick i' th' earth,
And bowl'd to death with turnips. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

To BOWL.* v. n. To play at bowls.
Challenge her to bowl. Shakspeare, L. Lab. Lost.

Bo'WLING.* n. s. [from bowl.] The art or act of throwing bowls.

This wise game of bowling doth make the fathers surpass their children in apish toys and most delicate dogtricks. As first for the postures. 1. handle your bowl: 2. advance your bowl: 3. charge your bowl: 4. ayme your bowl: 5. discharge your bowl: 6. plyc your bowl: in which last posture of plying your bowl you shall perceive many varieties and divisions, as wringing of the necke, lifting up of the shoulders, clapping of the hands, lying downe of one side, running after the bowl, making long dutifull scrapes and leg, &c. Wit and Mirth, by John Taylor, (1629), sign. D. 8. b.

In the preceding citation the origin of Addison's exercise of the fan is plainly, I think, to be discovered.

Many other sports and recreations there be much in use, as ringing, bowling, shooting. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 266.
Who can reasonably deny the lawfulness of many disports and recreations, as bowling or shooting?

Bp. Sanderson, Sermon. p. 217.

Bo'WLDER-STONES. n. s. Lumps or fragments of stones or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being tumbled to and again by the water; whence their name. Woodward on Fossils.

Bo'WLER.† n. s. [from bowl.] He that plays at bowls.

Sisyphus has left rolling the stone, and is grown a master bowler. B. Jonson, Masques.

Who can reasonably think it to be a commendable calling for any man to be a protest bowler, or archer, or gungester, and nothing else? Bp. Sanderson, Sermon. p. 217.

Bo'WLING.† n. s. [A sea term. Su. boglina, thre; bolin.] A rope fastened to the middle part of the outside of a sail; it is fastened in three or four parts of the sail, called the bowling bridle. The use of the bowling is to make the sails stand sharp or close to a wind. Harris.

BOX

Slack the bolins there; thou wilt not.
Wilt thou? Blow, and split thyself. Shakespeare, Pericles.

As if a gentleman of Northamptonshire, Warwickshire, or the Midland, should fetch all the illustrations to his country-neighbours from shipping, and tell them of the main-sheet and the boulin. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

BOWLING-GREEN. n. s. [from bowl and green.] A level piece of ground, kept smooth for bowlers.

A bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct line. Bentley.

BOWLING-GROUND. n. s. [from bowl and ground.] The same as bowling-green.

That (for six of the nine acres) is counted the subtlest bowling-ground in all Tartary. M. Jonson, Masques.

BOWMAN. n. s. [from bow and man.] An archer; he that shoots with a bow.

The whole city shall flee, for the noise of the horsemen and bowmen. Jerem. iv. 29.

BOWNET. n. s. [Sax. bozenet.] A weel, or net made of twigs bowed or incurvated, to catch fish.

To BOWSE. v. n. A sea term, signifying to hale or pull together. Chambers.

BOWSPRIT. n. s. [from the bow of the ship.] This word is also spelt boltsprit; which see.

To BOWSSEN. v. a. [probably of the same original with bouse, but found in no other passage.] To drench; to soak.

The water fell into a close walled plot; upon this wall was the frantick person set, and from thence tumbled headlong into the pond; where a strong fellow tossed him up and down, until the patient, by foregoing his strength, had somewhat forgot his fury: but if there appeared small amendment, he was bowsened again and again, while there remained in him any hope of life, for recovery. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

BOWSTRING. n. s. [from bow and string.] The string by which the bow is kept bent.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shakespeare.

Sound will be conveyed to the ear, by striking upon a bowstring, if the horn of the bow be held to the ear. Bacon.

BOWYER. n. s. [from bow.]

1. An archer; one that uses the bow.

Call for vengeance from the bouyer king. Dryden.

2. One whose trade is to make bows.

Good bows and shafts shall be better known, to the commodity of shooters; and good shooting may, perchance, be more occupied, to the profit of all bowyers and fletchers.

Ascham, Toxophilus.

BOX. n. s. [box, Saxon; buxus, Lat.] A tree.

The leaves are pennated, and evergreen; it hath male flowers, that are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is shaped like a porridge-pot, inverted, and is divided into three cells, containing two seeds in each, which, when ripe, are cast forth by the elasticity of the vessels. The wood is very useful for engravers, and mathematical instrument-makers; being so hard, close, and pönderous, as to sink in water. Miller.

Box, there are two sorts of it; the dwarf box, and a taller sort. The dwarf box is very good for borders, and is easily kept in order, with one clipping in the year. It will increase of slips set in March, or about Bartholomew tide, and will prosper on the declivity of cold, dry, barren, chalky hills, where nothing else will grow. Mortimer.

Box. n. s. [box, Sax. buste, Germ.]

1. A case made of wood, or other matter, to hold any thing. It is distinguished from chest, as the less from the greater. It is supposed to have its name from the box wood.

BOX

A magnet, though but in an ivory box, will, through the box, send forth his embracing virtue to a beloved needle. Sidney, Arc. b. ii.

About his shelves

A beggarly account of empty boxes. Shakespeare.

The lion's head is to open a most wide voracious mouth, which shall take in letters and papers. There will be under it a box, of which the key will be kept in my custody, to receive such papers as are dropped into it.

Steele, Guardian, Nov. 98.

This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,

And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

2. The case of the mariners compass.

3. The chest into which money given is put.

So many more, so every one was used,

That to give largely to the box refused. Spenser.

4. The seats in the playhouse, where the ladies are placed.

'Tis left to you, the boxes and the pit

Are sovereign judges of this sort of wit. Dryden.

She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring,

A vain, unquiet, glittering, wretched thing. Pope.

To Box. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose in a box.

Box'd in a chair, the beau impatient sits,

While spouts run clattering o'er the roof by fits. Swift, City Shower.

2. In naval language, to box the compass, is to rehearse the several points of it in their proper order.

BOX. n. s. [bock, a check, Welsh.] A blow on the head given with the hand.

For the box o' th' ear that the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

If one should take my hand perforce, and give another a box on the ear with it, the law punisheth the other.

There may happen concussions of the brain from a box on the ear. Wiseman, Surgery.

Olphis, the fisherman, received a box on the ear from Thesytis. Addison, Spectator, No. 233.

To Box. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight with the fist.

The ass very fairly looked on, till they had boxed themselves a-weary, and then left them fairly in the lurch. L'Estrange.

A leopard is like a cat; he boxes with his forefeet, as a cat, doth her kittens. Grew.

The fighting with a man's shadow consists in brandishing two sticks, loaden with plugs of lead; this gives a man all the pleasure of boxing, without the blows. Spectator, No. 115.

He hath had six duels, and four and twenty boxing matches, in defence of his majesty's title. Spectator, No. 629.

To Box. v. a. To strike with the fist.

Let the boy get up ever so often, the other is obliged to box him again as often as he requires it.

Misson's Travels over England, p. 304.

BOXEN. adj. [Formerly boxy, Lat. buxus. Hu- loet.]

1. Made of box.

The young gentlemen learned, before all other things, to design upon tablets of boxen wood. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

As lads and lasses stood around,

To hear my boxen hautboy sound. Gay, Pastorals.

2. Resembling box.

Her faded cheeks are chang'd to boxen hue,

And in her eyes the tears are ever new. Dryden.

BOXER. n. s. [from box.] A man who fights with his fist.

Castor a horseman, Pollux though

A boxer was, I wist:

The one was fam'd for iron heel,

Th' other for leaden fist. Ballad of St. George for England.

BOY

To Bo'XHAUL.* v. a. A sea-term. To turn about, to veer the ship by a particular method, when the swell of the sea renders tacking impracticable.

Chambers.

BOY. n. s. [bube, Germ. The etymology is not agreed on.]

1. A male child; not a girl.

The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing.
Zech. viii. 5.

2. One in the state of adolescence; older than an infant, yet not arrived at puberty or manhood.

Speak thou, boy;
Perhaps thy childishness will move him more
Than can our reasons.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Sometimes forgotten things, long cast behind,
Rush forward in the brain, and come to mind.
The nurse's legends are truths receiv'd,
And the nun dreams but what the boy believ'd.
Dryden.

3. A word of contempt for young men, as noting their immaturity.

Men of worth and parts will not easily admit the familiarity of boys, who yet need the care of a tutor.
Locke.
The pale boy senator yet tingling stands,
And holds his breeches close with both his hands.
Pope.

To Boy.† v. a. [from the noun.] To treat as a boy; but the example, which Dr. Johnson brings from Shakspeare, is thought by the commentators to signify the acting of women's characters on the stage by boys. I therefore add an example, which clearly proves the meaning of treated as a boy, or despised.

Anthony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness,
I' the posture of a whore.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I am tainted;
The dearest twin to life, my credit's murder'd,
Baffled and boy'd.
Beaumont and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

Bo'YBLIND.* adj. [from boy and blind.] Undiscerning, like a boy.

Put case he could be so boy-blind and foolish.
Beaumont and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

Bo'YHOOD. n. s. [from boy.] The state of a boy; the part of life in which we are boys. This is perhaps an arbitrary word.

If you should look at him, in his boyhood, through the magnifying end of a perspective, and, in his manhood, through the other, it would be impossible to spy any difference; the same air, the same strut.
Swift.

Bo'YISH.† adj. [from boy. Formerly boyly.] "Boyly or boyish: as, a boyly old lubber, that will still play the boy, not chaunging his manners with his years."
Hufoet.

1. Belonging to a boy.

I ran it through, e'en from my boyish days,
To the very moment that he bade me tell it.
Shakspeare, Othello.

2. Childish; trifling.

This unhair'd sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at, and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms.
Shakspeare, K. John.

Young men take up some English poet for their model, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective, where he is boyish and trifling.
Dryden.

Bo'YISHL.Y.† adv. [from boyish.] Childishly; triflingly.
Sherwood.

Bo'YISHNESS.† n. s. [from boyish.] Childishness; trifling manner.
Sherwood and Kersey.

Bo'YISM.† n. s. [from boy.]

B R A

1. Puerility; childishness.

He had complained he was farther ~~off~~ from possession, by being so near, and a thousand such boyisms, which Chaucer rejected as below the dignity of the subject.

Dryden, Fat. Preface.

2. The state of a boy.

The real boyism of the brothers, which yet should have been forgotten by the poet, is to be taken into the account.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BOY'S-PLAY.* n. s. [from boy and play.] The amusement of a boy.

Away, this is no boy's-play!
Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

BP. An abbreviation of bishop.

BRA'BBLE.† n. s. [brabbelen, Dutch.] A clamorous contest; a squabble; a broil.

Here in the streets, desperate in shame and state,
In private brabble did we apprehend him.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

If it be only some slight brabble,
We think to compose it alone.
The practice being discovered by a brable between the parties about the hiring money.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. ii. 9.
Spelman, Hist. of Sacrilege, ch. 1.

To BRA'BBLE.† v. n. [from the noun.] To clamour; to contest noisily.

Reason, in faith thou art well serv'd, that still Wouldst brabbling be with sense and love in me.
Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

If brabbling Makefray, at each fair and size,
Picks quarrels for to shew his valiantize.
Bp. Hall, Satires, iv. 4.

This is not a place
To brabble in; Calianax, join hands.

Beaumont and Fl. Muid's Tragedy.
We are not so contentious or brabbling, as you would have us.
Mountagu's Appeal to Caesar, p. 304.

BRA'BBLER.† n. s. [from brabble.] A clamorous, quarrelsome, noisy fellow.

We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabblers.
Shakspeare, K. John.

To BRACE.† v. a. [embrasser, Fr. and its old sense in Eng. is embrace; as, "he bracyd her, — and made her gladly chere," Tale at the close of Urry's Chaucer.]

1. To bind; to tie close with bandages.

The women of China, by bracing and binding them from their infancy, have very little feet.
Locke.

2. To intend; to make tense; to strain up.

The tympanum is not capable of tension that way, in such a manner as a drum is braced.
Holder, Elem. of Speech.

The diminution of the force of the pressure of the external air, in bracing the fibres, must create a debility in muscular motion.
Arbuthnot on Air.

3. To surround; to encompass.

For big bulls of Basan brace them about.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. September.

BRACE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cincture; bandage.

That which holds any thing tight.
The little bones of the ear-drum do in straining and relaxing it, as the brices of the war-drum do in that.
Derham, Phys. Theol.

3. BRACE. [in architecture.] Is a piece of timber framed in with bevil joints, used to keep the building from swerving either way.
Builder's Dict.

4. BRACES. [a sea term.] Ropes belonging to all the yards, except the mizen. They have a pendant to the yard-arm, two braces to each yard; and, at the end of the pendant, a block is seized, through which the rope called the brace is reeved. The braces serve to square and traverse the yards.
Sea Dict.

5. BRACES of a coach. Thick straps of leather on which it hangs.

6. HARNESS.

7. BRACE. [in printing.] A crooked line inclosing a passage, which ought to be taken together, and not separately; as in a triplet.

Charge Venus to command her son,

Wherever else she lets him rove,
To shun my house, and field, and grove;
Peace cannot dwell with hate or love.

Prior.

8. Warlike preparation; from bracing the armour; as we say, girded for the battle.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,

So may he with more facile question bear it;

For that it stands not in such warlike brace,

But altogether lacks the abilities

That Rhodes is dress'd in.

Shakespeare, Othello.

9. The armour for the arm. [Fr. bras. Hence our word vant-brace also.]

An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it.—

It hath been a shield

'Twixt me and death; and pointed to this brace.

Shakespeare, Pericles, ii. 1.

10. Tension; tightness.

The most frequent cause of deafness is the laxness of the tympanum, when it has lost its brace or tension. Holder.

BRACE. n. s. [of uncertain etymology, probably derived from two braced together.]

1. A pair; a couple. It is not braces, but brace, in the plural.

Down from a hill the beasts that reign in woods,

First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,

Godliest of all the forest, hart and hind.

Milton, P. L.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,

And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair.

Dryden, Fables.

2. It is used generally in conversation as a sportman's word.

He is said, this summer, to have shot with his own hands fifty brace of pheasants. Addison, Freeholder.

3. It is applied to men in contempt.

But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,

I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

BRACELET.† n. s. [bracelet, French, from the low Lat. bracellus.]

1. An ornament for the arms.

Both his hands were cut off, being known to have worn bracelets of gold about his wrists. Sir J. Hayward.

Tie about our tawny wrists

Bracelets of the fairy twists.

B. Jonson, Fairy Prince.

A very ingenious lady used to wear, in rings and bracelets, store of these gems. Boyle.

2. A piece of defensive armour for the arm.

BRACER.† n. s. [from brace.]

1. A cincture; a bandage.

When they affect the belly, they may be restrained by a bracer, without much trouble. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. A medicine of constringent power.

3. Armour for the arm. [Fr. brassar, Dict.; Trevoux, from bras. See also BRACE. This is a very old Eng. substantive. The distinction of an archer's bracer is noticed by Sherwood.]

Upon his arm he bare a gaudy bracer,

And by his side a sword and a bokeler.

Chaucer, Prologue, C. T.

BRACH.† n. s. [old Fr. brache; "brachel, chien de chasse," Lacombe. Such a dog is still called in Scotland a brachell. Gerin. brack, low Lat. bracco, old Goth. racke, and in our own language rache is the dog-hound as brache is the female. See The Gentleman's Recreation, p. 28.] A bitch-hound. Burton's illustration of this word exhibits a match for the sporting sow of modern times, which Mr. Daniel, in his Anecdotes of Rural Sports, has celebrated.

A sow-pig by chance sucked a brach, and when she was grown would miraculously hunt all manner of deer; and that as well, or rather better than an ordinary hound.

Burton, Anal. of Mel. p. 142.

Truth's a dog that must to kennel; he must be whipped out, when Lady, the brach, may stand by the fire and stink.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

BRA'CHIAL.† adj. [Fr. brachial, from brachium, an arm, Lat.] Belonging to the arm. Blount.

BRA'CHMAN, or BRA'MIN.* n. s. [called by the Portuguese bremán or bremen; by the English, most commonly, brámin. The etymology is said to be from brama, the secondary deity of the Hindoos; though Mr. Bryant contends that brachmanes is the contraction of Bar-Achmanes, and that the persons were so denominated from Manes, the lunar deity whom they served. Analys. Anc. Mythol. vol. 3. p. 220.] A priest of India, of the first and principal cast of the four grand divisions of Gentoos.

The Indians have their brachmans, the Turks their muffs.

Featley, Dippers Dipt. p. 130.

BRACHY'GRAPHER.* n. s. [from brachygraphy.] A short-hand-writer.

He beheld himself, and sermon-writer; and did not know which most to wonder at, his own deafness, or the fellow's acuteness. At last, he asked the brachygrapher, whether he wrote the notes of that sermon, or something of his own conception?

Gayton's Notes on D. Quirke, i. 8.

BRACHY'GRAPHY.† n. s. [Fr. brachygraphie, from Gr. βραχυς, short, and γραφω, to write.] The art or practice of writing in a short compass.

He is to take the whole dances from the foot by brachygraphy, and so make a memorial, if not a map of the business.

B. Jonson, Masques.

To grammar may be referred the useful art of brachygraphy, or writing by short marks. Hakewill's Apology, p. 260.

All the certainty of those high pretenders, bating what they have of the first principles, and the word of God, may be circumscribed by as small a circle as the creed, when brachygraphy had confined it within the compass of a penny. Glanville.

BRACK.† n. s. [from the Goth. braka, Sax. bracan, to break.] A breach; a broken part.

The place was but weak, and the bracks fair; but the defendants, by resolution, supplied all the defects. Hayward.

Fortune cannot raise

Any aloft, without some other's wrack;

Floods drown no fields before they find a bracke.

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 340.

You may find time out in eternity,
Deceit and violence in heavenly justice,
Life in the grave, and death among the blessed,
Ere stain or brack in her sweet reputation.

Beaumont and Fl. Wife for a Month.

Let them compare my work with what is taught in the schools, and if they find in theirs many bracks and short ends, which cannot be spun into an even piece, and, in mine, a fair coherence throughout, I shall promise myself an acquiescence.

Digby on the Soul, Dedic.

BRA'CKEN.* n. s. [written also braken, and sometimes pronounced breckin, in the north of England; perhaps from break.] Fern.

BRA'CKET.† n. s. [a term of carpentry, from the Lat. brachium, an arm.] A piece of wood fixed for the support of something.

Let your shelves be laid upon brackets, being about two feet wide, and edged with a small lath. Mortimer.

BRA'CKISH.† adj. [brack, Dutch, from the Goth. breke, the sea.] Salt; somewhat salt: it is used particularly of the water of the sea.

Pits upon the sea shore turn into fresh water, by percolation of the salt through the sand: but it is further noted, after a time, the water in such pits will become brackish again. Bacon.

When I had gain'd the brow and top,
A lake of brackish waters on the ground,
Was all I found. Herbert.

The wise contriver, on his end intent,
Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea.
What other cause could this effect produce?

The brackish tincture through the main diffus'd? Blackmore.

BRA'CKISHNESS. n. s. [from brackish.] Saltiness in a small degree.

All the artificial strainings, hitherto leave a brackishness in salt water, that makes it unfit for animal uses.

Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

BRA'CKY.* adj. The same as brackish, which see.

The bracky fountains. Drayton, Polyolb. S. II.

The bracky marsh. Ibid. S. 14.

BRAD, being an initial, signifies broad, spacious, from the Sax. brad, and the Goth. braid.

Gibson's Camden.

BRAD. n. s. A sort of nail to floor rooms with. They are about the size of a tenpenny nail, but have not their heads made with a shoulder over their shank, as other nails, but are made pretty thick towards the upper end, that the very top may be driven into, and buried in the board they nail down; so that the tops of these brads will not catch the thrums of the mops, when the floor is washing.

To BRAG. v. n. [braggeren, Dutch.]

1. To boast; to display ostentatiously; to tell boastful stories.

Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars?

Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
And wilt not come? Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

Mark me, with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies. Shakespeare, Othello.

In bragging out some of their private tenets, as if they were the established doctrine of the church of England.

Sanderson, Pax Ecclesiae.

The rebels were grown so strong there, that they intended then, as they already bragged, to come over and make this the seat of war. Clarendon.

Mrs. Bull's condition was looked upon as desperate by all the men of art; but there were those that bragged they had an infallible ointment. Arbuthnot.

2. It has of before the thing boasted.

Knowledge being the only thing whereof we poor old men can brag, we cannot make it known but by utterance. Sidney.

Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well govern'd youth. Shakespeare.

Ev'ry busy little scribler now
Swells with the praises which he gives himself,
And taking sanctuary in the crowd,
Brags of his impudence, and scorns to mend. Roscommon.

3. On is used, but improperly.

Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on,
Reduc'd at last to hiss in my own dragon. Pope, Dunciad.

BRAG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A boast; a proud expression.

A kind of conquest

Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag
Of came, and saw, and overcame. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

It was such a new thing for the Spaniards to receive so little hurt, upon dealing with the English, as Avellaneda made great brags of it, for no greater matter than the waiting upon the English afar off. Bacon, War with Spain.

The thing boasted.

Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shown
In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities;
Where most may wonder. Milton, Comus.

BRAG.* adj. [from the verb.] Proud; boasting; insolent. Spenser uses it adverbially.

The chief cause of this hath been the cruel contempt of holy wedlocke, and the bragge boasting out of their unholye chastity. Bule's Art of Eng. Notaries, M. vii. b.

Seest how brag yond bullock beats,
So smirke, so smoothe, his pricked ears?

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb. 71.

Much hath been laid in against that bragge prescription, to the which their confidence and hope of silence on the contrary parte moved them.

Stapleton's Fortresse of the Faith, (1565.) fol. 68.

BRAG.* n. s. A name given to a game at cards from the nature of it; the principal stake being won by him who brags with most confidence and address, i. e. who challenges the other gamesters to produce cards equal to his. Chambers.

If they happen to rise above brag or whist, [they] infallibly stop short of every thing either pleasing or instructive.

Ld. Chesterfield.

BRAGGADO'CIO.† n. s. [from brag, adopted from Spenser's vain-glorious knight, Braggadocchio.] A puffing, swelling, boasting fellow.

The world abounds in terrible fanfarons, in the masque of men of honour; but these braggadocios are easy to be detected.

L'Étrange.

By the plot, you may guess much of the characters of the persons; a braggadocio captain, a parasite, and a lady of pleasure. Dryden.

BRA'GGARDISE.* n. s. [old Fr. bragardise.] Gloriation; a bragging. Minsheu and Sherwood.

BRA'GGARDISM.† n. s. [from braggardise.] Boastfulness; vain ostentation.

Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

BRA'GGART.† n. s. [sometimes written braggard, as in Minsheu's and Sherwood's dictionaries; old Fr. bragard.] A boaster.

Who knows himself a braggart,

Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,

That every braggart shall be found an ass.

Shakespeare, All's well.

Pox upon your women,
And your half-man there, court-sir Ambergia,
A perfum'd braggart. B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady.

BRA'GGART. adj. [from the substantive.] Boastful; vainly ostentatious.

Shall I, none's slave, of high-born or rais'd men

Fear frowns; and my mistress, truth, betray thee?

To th' huffing, braggart, puff nobility?

Donne

BRA'GGER.† n. s. [from brag, old Fr. bragueur, Kelham.] A boaster; an ostentatious fellow.

Many ydell wytted braggers, which judge them selves learned, and are nothing lesse. Bale, in Leland's New Year's Gifte.

The loudest braggers of Jews or Grecians are found guilty of spiritual ignorance. Hammond's Sermons, p. 627.

Such as have had opportunity to sound these braggers thoroughly, by having sometimes endured the penance of their sottish company, have found them, in converse, empty and insipid. South.

BRA'GGET.* n. s. [Welsh, bragod, bragard; Cornish, bragard; a very old Eng. word, and sometimes written bracket, or braket. It is still in use in the north, as well as in Wales, for a compound drink.] A sweet drink, usually made of the wort of ale, spice, and honey; a kind of mead.

His mouth was swete as braket or the meth,
Or hord of apples, laid in hay or heth. Chaucer, Miller's Tale.

Armed all in ale,
With the brown bowl, and charg'd in braggat stale.
B. Jonson, Masques.

One that knows not neck-beef from a pheasant,
Nor cannot relish braggat from ambrosia.

Beaumont and Fl. Little Thief.

BRA'GGINGLY.* adv. [from brag.] Boastingly; in an insulting manner. Huloet.

BRA'GLESS. adj. [from brag.] Without a boast; without ostentation.

The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles. —

—If it is so, bragless let it be,

Great Hector was as good a man as he.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

BRA'GLY. adv. [from brag.] Finely; so as it may be bragged.

Seest not thilk same hawk'torn stud,

How bragly it begins to bud,

And utter his tender forth?

Flora now calleth forth each flower,

And bids make ready Maia's bower.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

To BRAID.† v. a. [briedan, Saxon; often written brede, in our older language, agreeably to the etymology; and perhaps for another reason, which also has here escaped the notice of Dr. Johnson; namely, that the verb to braid for upbraid, was once in use, and therefore the distinction of orthography might be nicely regarded. See Huloet in V. To BRAIN, exprobro, reprocher.] To weave together.

She anointed herself with precious ointment, and braided the hair of her head. Judith, x. 3.

Close the serpent sly,

Insinuating, wove with gordian twine

His braided train, and of his fatal guile

Gave proof unheeded.

Milton, P. L.

Osier wands, lying lopsely, may each of them be easily dissociated from the rest; but when braided into a basket, they cohere strongly. Boyle.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,

The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind.

Dryden.

Since in braided gold her foot is bound,

And a long trailing manteau sweeps the ground,

Her shoe disdains the street.

Gay, Trivia.

BRAID. n. s. [from the verb.] A texture; a knot, or complication of something woven together.

Listen where thou art sitting,

Under the glossy, cool, translucent wave,

In twisted braids of lilies knitting

The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair.

Milton, Comus.

No longer shall thy comely tresses break

In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck,

Or behind thy head, an ample round,

In graceful braids, with various ribbon bound.

Prior.

BRAID.† adj. [from Sax. bried, deceit; perhaps from the Iceland. bragd, fraud or deceit. Mr. Horne Tooke gives the interpretation of beaten up, as it were, in a mortar, from bray, to pound, instead of the sense, which Johnson and other commentators on Shakespeare had given the word, of deceitful; and, ridiculing them, he contends, that the expression alludes to Prov. xxvii. 20. "Though thou shouldst bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him." The context of the poet, however, does not seem to warrant Mr. Tooke's conclusion, that "Diana does not confine herself merely to the craft and deceit of Bartram, but includes also all the other bad qualities of which she supposes him to be confounded, and would not depart from him, though bray'd in a mortar." The allusion, throughout the scene points merely at his deceit.] Crafty; deceitful.

My mother told me just how she would woo,
As if she sat in his heart: he had sworn to marry me,
When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him,
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braud,
Marry that will, I'll live and die a maid:
Only, in this disguise, I think 't no sin
To cozen him, that would unjustly win.

Shakespeare, All's Well, &c. iv. 2.

BRAID.* n. s. [from afraid, to awake. See To

ABRAID. "At a braide," on a sudden, at the instant, Chauc. Rom. R. 1336.] A start. Obsolete.

O, what a ruthless, stedfast eye, methought,

He fix'd upon my face, which to my death

Will never part from me! when with a braid,

A deep-set sigh he gave, and there withal

Clasping his hands, to heaven he cast his sight.

Sackville, Trag. of Gorboduc.

To BRAID.* v. a. [Sn. Goth. brigda; Icelandic, bregða; to reproach. This is the parent of our verb upbraid, though it has fallen into disuse. Huloet's old dictionary presents not only the verb, but also the substantive braider, as a reproacher.] To upbraid; to reproach. Obsolete.

BRAILS. n. s. [sea term.] Small ropes reeved through blocks, which are seized on either side the ties, a little off upon the yard; so that they come down before the sails of a ship, and are fastened at the skirt of the sail to the crengles. Their use is when the sail is furled across, to haul up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken up or let fall.

BRAIN.† n. s. [bpaegen, Sax. breyne, Dutch.]

1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebellum.

Cerebrum is that part of the brain, which possesses all the upper and forepart of the cranium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater, under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the brain is distinguished into outer and inner; the former is called corticalis, cinerea, or glandulosa; the latter, medullaris, alba, or nervæ. Cheselden.

If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

That man proportionably hath the largest brain, I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large cranies, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes and woodcocks; but, upon trial, I find it very true. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one but in their brains, the other on their shoulders. Hammond on Fundamentals.

A man is first a geometrician in his brain, before he be such in his hand. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. Sometimes the affections: this is not common, nor proper.

My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this, a heart and brain to breed it in? Shakespeare, K. Lear.

4. Fancy; imagination.

God will be worshipped and served according to his prescript word, and not according to the brain of man.

Ahp. Sandys, Sermons, fol. 128. b.

Ladies that call themselves collegiates, an order between courtiers and country-madams, that live from their husbands; and give entertainment to all the wits, and braveries o' the time, as they call 'em; cry down, or up, what they like or dislike in a brain or fashion, with most masculine or rather hermaphroditical authority. B. Jonson, Epicoene.

To BRAIN. † v. [from the noun.] To dash out the brains; to kill by beating out the brains.

Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him i' th' afternoon to sleep; there thou may'st brain him. Shakespeare, Tempest.

They invent a slander—that the Jews were naturally to their wives the cruellest men in the world; would poison, brain, and do know not what, if they might not divorce. Milton, Tetrachordon.

Outlaws of nature,
He shot and brain'd, without a process,
To stop infection; that's their proper death. Dryden.

Next seiz'd two wretches more, and headlong cast,
Brain'd on the rock, his second dire repast. Pope, Odyssey.

BRA'INISH. adj. [from brain.] Hotheaded; furious; as cerebrosus in Latin.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And, in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseengood old man. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

BRA'INLESS. adj. [from brain.] Silly; thoughtless; witless.

Some brainless men have, by great travel and labour, brought to pass, that the church is now ashamed of nothing more than of saints. Hooker, v. 20.

If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

The brainless stripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damn'd the stiff college, and pedantick gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb. Tickell.

BRA'INPAN. † n. s. [from brain and pan.] The skull containing the brains.

And a certain woman cast a piece of milstone on Abimelech, and all to brake his brayne-panne. Judges, ix. 53. (Bible of Hen. VIII.)

You are wise,
Your honourable brain-pan full of crotchets. Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca, v. 2.

With those huge bellows in his hands, he blows
New fire into my head: my brainpan glows. Dryden.

BRA'INSICK. adj. [from brain and sick.] Diseased in the understanding; addleheaded; giddy; thoughtless.

Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad; her brainsick raptures
Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

They were brainsick men, who could neither endure the government of their king, nor yet thankfully receive the authors of their deliverance. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

BRA'INSICKLY. † adv. [from brainsick.] Weakly; headily.

Why, worthy thane,
You do unbend your noble strength to think
So brainsickly of things. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

In the question about curious, M. Parsons, venting his acerbity, saith; "M. Morton hath a shift to deceive his reader." Bitterly and brainsickly too, by your leave; for afterwards he was compelled to confess, that the letters set down, for his direction, in the margin, were so dim, that he mistook them. Bp. Morton's Discharge, p. 219.

BRA'INSICKNESS. n. s. [from brainsick.] Indiscretion; giddiness.

BRAIT. n. s. Among jewellers for a rough diamond. Dict.

BRACE. The preterite of break.
He thought it sufficient to correct the multitude with sharp words, and brake out into this cholerick speech. Knolles.

BRACE. † n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. A thicket of brambles, or of thorns.

A dog of this town used daily to fetch meat, and to carry the same unto a blind master, that lay in a brake without the town. Carew, Sur. of Cornwall.

If I'm tradit'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person; let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake.
That virtue must go through. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping. Milton, P. L.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Who, flying death, had there conceal'd his flight;
In brakes and brambles hid, and shunning mortal sight. Dryden, Fables.

It is said originally to mean fern, Dr. Johnson says. It has still this meaning. See BRACKEN.

In a canvas tfin he was bedight,
And girded with a belt of twisted brake. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xi. 22.

Other [leaves] are parted small, like our fern or brakes. Terry's Voyage, p. 103.

BRACE. † n. s.

1. An instrument for dressing hemp or flax.
2. The handle of a ship's pump.
3. A baker's kneading trough.
4. A sharp bit or snaffle for horses. A smith's brake is a machine in which horses unwilling to be shod, are confined during that operation. Used figuratively by our old poets.

Who rules his rage with reason's brake. Turberville.

Drest, you still for man should take him,
And not think he had eat a stake,
Or were set up in a brake. B. Jonson.

BRACE.* n. s. [Fr. braquer un canon, to level or plant a cannon.] That which moves a military engine to any particular point.

They view the iron rams, the brakes, and slings. Fairfax, Tasso.

BRA'KY. † adj. [from brake.] Thorny; prickly; rough.

Redeem arts from their rough and braky seats, where they lay hid and overgrown with thorns, to a pure, open, and flowery light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

If He lead us through braky thickets and deep sloughs, know, that He knows this the nearer way, though more cumbersome. Bp. Hall, Heaven upon Earth.

BRA'MBLE. † n. s. [Sax. bræmbe], formerly written bramble.]

1. The blackberry bush; the raspberry bush, or hind-berry. Miller.

Content with food, which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed:
'Curculs and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden, Ovid.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bower,
The woods can witness many a woful store. Spenser, Past.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakespeare, As You Like It.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No thrustles shrill the bramble bush forsake. Gay, Past.

BRA'MBLED.* adj. [from bramble.] Overgrown with brambles or briars.

Beneath yon tower's unvaulted gate,
Forlorn she sits upon the brambled foot. T. Warton, Ode iii.

Halked's Pref. to Code of Gentoo Laws.

BRAN.† n. s. [old Fr. brén, bran; bas Bret. brén; Ital. bienna.] The husks of corn ground; the refuse of the sieve.

From me do back receive the flower of all.

And leave me but the bran.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

The citizens were driven to great distress for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarsest bran, moulded in cloaths; for otherwise it would not cleave together.

Huyward.

In the sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out, could not be pure meal, but must have, among it, a certain mixture of padar and bran, in this lower age of human fragility.

Wotton.

Then water him, and drinking what he can,

Encourage him to thirst again with bran.

Dryden.

Figuratively used, like the Latin farina.

They add more particulars of the same bran.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 3. § 3.

BRAN-NEW.* [Teut. brand-new; and so written and pronounced in some parts of the north of England.]

This expression, still common in colloquial language, might be perhaps originally brent-new, or brén-new, from the Sax. brennan, to burn; equivalent in meaning to fire-new, i. e. to any thing new from the forge; hence the secondary sense, just finished, quite new.

Kilian explains the Teut. expression by vier-nu.

BRANCARD.* n. s. [Fr. brancal and brancar. V. Colgrave in both.] A horse-litter; or any thing that has arms or outbearing side-beams, and is to be carried by or between two.

The gentleman — proposed, that he would either make use of a boat to Newport or Ostend, or a brancard to St. Omer's; either of which he would cause to be provided against the next morning.

Life of Lord Clarendon, iii. 891.

BRANCH.† n. s. [branche, Fr. in Provence, branchia, from the Lat. brachium.]

1. The shoot of a tree from one of the main boughs.

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?

Why, wither not the leaves that want their sap? Shakespeare.

2. Any member or part of the whole; any distinct article; any section or subdivision.

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,

That his own hand may strike his honour down,

That violates the smallest branch herein.

Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

The belief of this was of special importance, to confirm our hopes of another life, on which so many branches of christian piety immediately depend.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in these general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable.

To BRANCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.

They were trained together in their childhoods, and there rooted betwixt them such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The cause of scattering of the boughs is the hasty breaking forth of the sap; and therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the pyramid, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it when it beginneth to branch, by equal degrees.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Plant it round with shade

Of laurel ever-green, and branching palur.

Milton, S. A.

Straight as a line in beauteous order stood,

Of oaks unshorn a venerable wood;

Fresh was the grass beneath, and every tree

At distance planted in a due degree,

Their branching arms in air, with equal space,

Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace.

Dryden.

One sees her thighs transform'd, another views

Her arms shot out, and branching into boughs.

BRA'SIL.† n. s. An American wood, commonly BRA'ZIL. } supposed to have been thus denominated, because first brought from Brasil: though Huet shews it had been known by that name many years before the discovery of that country; and the best sort comes from Fernambuc. It is used by turners, and takes a good polish, but chiefly in dying, though it gives but a spurious red.

Chambers.

The following passage of an English author proves also that the Brazil wood was long known by that name, before the discovery of the country so called in America.

He loketh as a sparhawk with his eyen;
Him nedeth not his colour for to dien
With Brasil, ne with grain of Portingale.

Chaucer, Nun's Pr. Tale.

Spenser, F. Q.

BRAT.† n. s. [its etymology is uncertain; bratt, in Saxon, signifies a blanket; from which, perhaps, the modern signification may have come, Dr. Johnson says. Bratt has a kindred meaning in the Welsh, viz. a rag, a clout. In Chaucer, the word is used for a coarse mantle. So in the Gael, brat, is a mantle or covering. And, to this day, in Cumberland and Westmorland, brat means a coarse apron. If the application of brat to a child be not owing to these terms, may we not consider it as the past participle of bred, viz. bred, then softened into bret, and finally corrupted into brat?

1. A child, so called in contempt.

He leads them like a thing

Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better; and they follow him,

Against us brats, with no less confidence

Than boys pursuing summer butterflies.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

This brat is none of mine:

Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The friends that got the brats, were poisoned too;

In this sad case what could our vermin do?

Roscommon.

From armed foes to bring a royal prize,
Shows your brave heart victorious as your eyes. Waller.

2. Gallant; having a noble mien; lofty; graceful.

I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with a braver grace. Shakespeare.

3. Magnificent; grand.

Rings put upon his fingers,
And brave attendants near him when he wakes,
Would not the beggar then forget himself? Shakespeare.

But whoso'er it was nature design'd
First a brave place, and then as brave a mind. Denham.

4. Excellent; noble: it is an indeterminate word, used to express the superabundance of any valuable quality in men or things.

Let not old age disgrace my high desire,
O heavenly soul in human shape contain'd;
Old wood inflam'd doth yield the bravest fire,
When younger doth in smoke his virtue spend. Sidney.

If there be iron ore, and mills, iron is a brave commodity where wood aboundeth. Bacon.

If a statesman has not this science, he must be subject to a braver man than himself, whose province it is to direct all his actions to this end. Digby, on the Soul, Deduc.

He upbraids Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the watch. Shakespeare.

My nobles leave me, and my state is brav'd.
Ev'n at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers. Shakespeare.

The ills of love, not those of fate I fear;
These I can brave, but those I cannot bear. Dryden.

Like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
The raging tempest and the rising waves. Dryden.

2. To carry a boasting appearance of.

Both particular persons and factions are apt enough to flatter themselves, or, at least, to brave that which they believe not.

Bacon, Essays.

3. To make fine or splendid, in the sense of bravery for show. Not now in use.

He [the sun] disdains to shine; for, by the book,
He should have brav'd the east an hour ago:

A black day will it be to somebody. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

BRAVELY.† adv. [from brave.]

1. In a brave manner; courageously; gallantly.

Martin Swart, with his Germans, performed bravely. Bacon.

BRAVERY.† n. s. [from brave.]

1. Courage; magnanimity; generosity; gallantry.

It denotes no great bravery of mind, to do that out of a desire of fame, which we could not be prompted to do by a generous passion for the glory of him that made us.

Spectator, No. 255.

Juba, to all the bravery of a hero,
Adds softest love, and more than female sweetness. Addison.

2. Splendour; magnificence; finery.

Where all the bravery that eye may see,
And all the happiness that heart desire,
Is to be found. Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments.

Like a stately ship —

With all her bravery on, and tackle trim,
Sails fill'd, and streamers waving. Milton, S. A. v. 717.

3. Show; ostentation.

Let princes choose ministers more sensible of duty than of rising, and such as love business rather upon conscience than upon bravery.

Bacon, Essays.

4. Bravado; boast.

Never could man, with more unmanlike bravery, use his tongue to her disgrace, which lately had sung sonnets of her praises.

For a bravery upon this occasion of power, they crowned their new king in the cathedral church of Dublin. Bacon.

There are those that make it a point of bravery, to bid defiance to the oracles of divine revelation. L'Estrange.

His divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads; one power against the French,
And one against Glendower. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

3. To make a noise. This is little used, Dr. Johnson says: but both the poets cited use it beautifully.

As he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakspeare.

Up among the loose disjointed cliffs,
And fractur'd mountains wild, the brawling brook
And cave, presageful, send a hollow moan.
Thomson, Winter, 69.

To BRAWL.* v. a.

1. To drive away by noise.

Your deep wit —
Reason'd not brawl'd her [Truth] thence, and woo'd her hither.
Verses prefixed to Digby on Souls and Bodies.

2. Figuratively, to beat down.

By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon, 'charged to the mouths;
Till their soul-fearing clamours have brawl'd down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city. Shakspeare, K. John.

BRAWL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Quarrel; noise; scurrility.

He findeth, that controversies thereby are made but brawls;
and therefore wisheth, that, in some lawful assembly of churches, all these strifes may be decided.

Hooker, Ecc. Pol. Preface.

Never since that middle summer's spring
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport.

Shakspeare, Mid. N. Dream.

That bontum is an animal,
Made good with stout polemick brawl. Hudibras.

2. A dance. See BRANSLE.

Thence did Venus learn to lead
The Italian brawls, and so to tread
As if the wind, not she, did walk. B. Jonson, Masques.

His usual songs are certain catches and roundelays he [the nightingale] hath, much after the manner of the French braudes; you would take him verily to be a monsieur of Paris straight, if you heard but his preludiums; for then indeed is he set on a merry pin. Parthenia Sacra, (1633,) p. 139.

My grave lord-keeper led the brauls:
The real and maces danc'd before him.

Gray, Long Story, v. II.

BRA'WLER.† n. s. [from brawl.] A wrangler; a squarrelsome, noisy fellow.

Not a brawler, nor covetous. 1 Tim. iii. 3.
To be no brawlers, but gentle. Tit. iii. 2.

An advocate may incur the censure of the court, for being a brawler in court, on purpose to lengthen out the cause.

Ayliffe.

BRAWLING.* n. s. [from the verb.] The act of brawling.

Concerning prayer, who is more against it than you, which have clearly changed the right use of it into a brawlynge in the temple and a bletynge in the streets, in a foren speeche and in the sight of men.

Bale's Yet a Course at the Romish Foxe, fol. 65.

She troubled was, alas! that it might be,
With tedious brawlings of her parents dear. Sidney.

BRA'WLINGLY.* adv. [from brawling.] In a quarrelsome manner. Hulot.

BRAWN.† n. s. [of uncertain etymology, Dr.
Johnson says: which is certainly not the case, as far as the fourth and fifth definitions are concerned; bap, Sax. a boar, pronounced bap, and the pl. bapen, bapern, offering the explanation of boar's-flesh; bawren or boaren flesh, and by transposition brawn. And hence secondarily, perhaps, the application of brawn to any muscular and fleshy appearance or substance.]

1. The fleshy or muscular part of the body.

The brawn of the arm must appear full, shadowed on one side, then shew the wrist-bone thereof. Peacham.

But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
His double kiting ax, and beamy spear,
Each asking a giantick force to rear.

Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

2. The arm, so called from its being muscularous.

I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vanbrace put this wither'd brawn. Shakspeare.

Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn. Shakspeare.

3. Bulk; muscular strength.

The boisterous hands are then of use, when I,
With this directing head, those hands apply;
Brawn without brain is thine. Dryden, Fab.

4. The flesh of a boar, prepared in a particular manner.

The best age for the boar is from two to five years, at which time it is best to geld him, or sell him for brawn. Mortimer.

Intending, as soon as it can be ready, to entertain you with a strange collar of brawn.

Sir H. Wotton's Letters, Rem. p. 578.

5. A boar. In the north of England a boar is still called a brawn.

Her grace sits mumping,
Like an old ape eating a brawn.

Beaumont and Fl. Mad Lover, v. i.

BRA'WNED.* adj. [from brawn; in our old dictionaries, defined "well armed or legged," and
"brawnd like a boar."] Strong; brawny.

His rawbone arms, whose mighty brawned bows
Were wont to rive steele plates, and helmets hew,
Were elene consum'd. Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 41.

BRA'WNER. n. s. [from brawn.] A boar killed for the table.

At Christmas time be careful of your fame,
See the old tenant's table be the same;
Then if you would send up the brawner head,
Sweet rosemary and bays around it spread. King.

BRA'WNINESS.† n. s. [from brawny.] Strength;
hardness.

Stalled up and fed to such a brawniness, that neither the understanding nor the affection were capable of any impression. Hammond, Serm. p. 651.

This brawniness and insensibility of mind, is the best armour against the common evils and accidents of life. Locke.

BRA'WNY.† adj. [from brawn.]

1. Muscular; fleshy; bulky; of great muscles and strength.

The brawny fool, who did his vigour boast,
In that presuming confidence was lost. Dryden, Juv.

The native energy
Turns all into the substance of the tree,
Starves and destroys the fruit, is only made
For branny bulk, and for a barren shade.

Dryden, Virg.

2. Figuratively, hard; unfeeling.

Those who have a hard and branny conscience, which hath no feeling in it. Medea's Apostasy of the Latter Times, P. 2.

To BRAY. † v. a. [bracan, Sax. braier, Fr.]

1. To pound, or grind small.

I'll burst him; I will bray

His bones as in a mortar.

Chapman, Iliad.

Except you would bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of a holy war.

Bacon.

2. To emit; to give vent to. [Gr. βράχω.] Dr.
Johnson has cited the passage of Milton for an example of the verb neuter; and omits this usage of the word as a verb active. But it is one of our oldest actives, and is supported by the best authority.

Not spending, but, as a wilde bull, roaring and braying out wordes despitefull and venomous.

Sir T. Elyot's Governour, fol. 100.

Blasphemous words, which she doth bray out of her poisonous entrails fraught with dire decay.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 20.

The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out

The triumph of his pledge.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Arms on armour clashing bray'd

Horrible discord.

Milton, P. L. vi. 209.

To BRAY. † v. n. [broire, Fr. barrio, Lat.]

1. To make a noise as an ass.

Laugh, and they

Return it louder than an ass can bray.

Dryden, Juv.

'Agad if he should hear the lion roar, he'd cudgel him into an ass, and to his primitive braying.

Congreve, Old Bachelor.

2. To make an offensive, harsh or disagreeable noise.
[Gr. βράχω.]

As the hart panteth [in the margin, brayeth] after the water-brooks.

Psal. xlii. 1.

What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd men?

Shall braying trumpets, and loud churlish drums,

Clamours of hell, be measures to our pomp?

Shakspeare.

Hearl ye the din of battle bray?

Gray, The Bard.

BRAY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Voice of an ass.

2. Harsh sound.

Boisterous untun'd drums,

And harsh resounding trumpets dreadful bray.

Shakspeare.

BRAY.* n. s. [probably from brox; the upper part of a hill being, in some places, called both broo, and brac. Welsh, bre; Gael. brigh, from the Celt.
briga, a mountain or high place.] Ground raised as a fortification; a bank of earth.

Order was given that bulwarks, brays, and walls, should be raised in his castles and strong-holds on the sea-side.

Ld. Herbert, Hist. K. Hen. VIII. p. 28.

On that steep bray lord Guelfo would not then Hazard his folk.

Fairfax, Tasso, ix. 96.

BRA'YER. † n. s. [from bray.]

1. One that brays like an ass.

Hold! cry'd the queen; a cat-call each shall win;

Equal your merits, equal is your din!

But that this well-disputed game may end,

Sound forth my brayers! and the welkin rend.

Pope.

2. [With printers; from To bray or beat.] An instrument to temper the ink.

3. A brayer, [Fr. broyeur.] is a pounder or beater of things till they be made small.

Colgrave and Sherwood.

BRA'YING.* n. s. [from bray.] Clamour; noise.

In a foughten field, where trumpets blow, the clarions sound, the guns thunder, the noise of the strokes, the clashing of armour, the clattering of harness, the braying of the horses, the groaning of men dying, and the gasping of the dead
reacheth almost to heaven.

Sir T. Smith, Append. to his Life, p. 33.

Angry, that none are frighted at their noises and loud bray- ings under their asses skins.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

To BRAZE. † v. a. [from brass.]

1. To solder with brass.

If the nut be not to be cast in brass, but only hath a worm brazed into it, this niceness is not so absolutely necessary because that worm is first turned up, and howed into the grooves of the spindle, and you may try that before it is brazed in the nut.

Moxon.

2. To harden to impudence.

I have so often blushed to acknowledge him, that now I am
braz'd to it.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If damned custom hath not braz'd it so,

That it is proof and bulwark against sense.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

BRA'ZEN. adj. [from brass.]

1. Made of brass. It was anciently and properly written brasen.

Get also a small pair of brazen compasses, and a fine ruler, for taking the distance.

Peachment.

A bough his brazen helmet did sustain;

His heavier arms lay scatter'd on the plain.

Dryden, Virg.

2. Proceeding from brass: a poetical use.

Trumpeters

With brazen din blast you the city's ear,

Make mingled with your rattling tabourines.

Shakspeare.

3. Impudent.

To BRA'ZEN. v. n. To be impudent; to bully.

When I reprimanded him for his tricks, he would talk saucily, lye, and brazen it out, as if he had done nothing amiss.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

BRA'ZENBROWED.* adj. [from brazen and brow.]
Shameless; impudent.

Noon-day vices, and brazen-browed iniquities.

Broune, Chr. Mor. i. 35.

BRA'ZENFACE. n. s. [from brazen and face.] An impudent wench: in low language.

You do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty. — Well said;
brazenface; hold it out.

Shakspeare.

BRA'ZENFACED. adj. [from brazenface.] Impudent;
shameless.

What a brazenfaced varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me? Is it two days ago, since I tript up thy heels, and beat thee before the king?

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Quick-witted, brazenfac'd, with fluent tongues,

Patient of labours, and dissembling wrongs.

Dryden.

BRA'ZENLY.* adv. [from brazen.] In a bold, impudent manner.

BRA'ZENNESS. n. s. [from brazen.]

1. Appearance like brass.

2. Impudence.

BRA'ZIER. n. s. See BRASIER.

The halfpence and farthings in England, if you should sell them to the brazier, you would not lose above a penny in a shilling.

Swift, Drap. Letters.

BREACH. n. s. [from break; breche, Fr.]

1. The act of breaking any thing.

This tempest

Dashing the garment of this peace, abode

The sudden breach on't.

Shakspeare.

2. The state of being broken.

O you kind gods!

Cure this great breach in his abused nature.

Shakspeare.

3. A gap in a fortification made by a battery.

The wall was blown up in two places; by which breach the Turks seeking to have entered, made bloody fight.

Knotter.

Till mad with rage upon the breach he fir'd,
Slew friends and foes, and in the smoke retir'd.

Dryden.

4. The violation of a law or contract.

That oath would sure contain them greatly, or the breach of it bring them to shorter vengeance.

Spenser on Ireland.

What are those breaches of the law of nature and nations, which do forfeit all right in a nation to govern?

Bacon.

Breach of duty towards our neighbours, still involves in it a breach of duty towards God.

South.

The laws of the gospel are the only standing rules of morality; and the penalties affixed by God to the breach of those laws, the only guards that can effectually restrain men within the true bounds of decency and virtue.

Rogers.

5. The opening in a coast.

But th' heedful boatman strongly forth did stretch

His brawny arms, and all his body strain,

That th' utmost sandy beach they shortly fetch,

While the dread danger does behind remain.

Spenser, F. Q.

6. Difference; quarrel; separation of kindness.

It would have been long before the jealousies and breaches between the armies, would have been composed.

Clarendon.

7. Intrusion; injury.

This breach upon kingly power was without precedent.

Clarendon.

BREAD.† n. s. [bpeod, Saxon. Bread is brayed grain, Mr. Tooke says; bread being the past part. of bray, Fr. braier, to pound or beat to pieces. It is full as probable, I think, that the Sax. bpeod, whence our bread, is from the verb bpeodan, to nourish.]

1. Food made of ground corn.

Mankind have found the means to make grain into bread, the lightest and properest aliment for human bodies.

Arbuthnot.

Bread, that decaying man with strength supplies,
And gen'rous wine, which thoughtful sorrow flies.

Pope.

2. Food in general, such as nature requires: to get bread, implies, to get sufficient for support without luxury.

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread.

Genesis, iii. 19.

If pretenders were not supported by the simplicity of the inquisitive fools, the trade would not find them bread.

L'Estrange.

This dowager on whom my tale I found,
A simple sober life in patience led,
And had but just enough to buy her bread.

Dryden.

When I submit to such indignities,
Make me a citizen, a senator of Rome;

To sell my country, with my voice, for bread.

Philips.

I neither have been bred a scholar, nor to any kind of business; this creates uneasiness in my mind, fearing I shall in time want bread.

Spectator, No. 203.

3. Support of life at large.

God is pleased to try our patience by the ingratitude of those who, having eaten of our bread, have lift up themselves against us.

King Charles.

But sometimes virtue starves, while vice is fed;

What then? is the reward of virtue bread?

Pope.

TO BREAD, OR BREADE.* v. a. [Sax. bpeodan. See TO ABROAD.] To spread; to make broad. A word used in the north of England.

Ray.

BREAD-CHIPPER. n. s. [from bread and chip.] One that chips bread; a baker's servant; an under butler.

No abuse, Hal, on my honour; no abuse. — Not to dispraise me, and call me pantler, and bread-chipper, and I know not what?

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

BREAD-CORN. n. s. [from bread and corn.] Corn of which bread is made.

There was not one drop of beer in the town; the bread, and bread-corn, sufficed not for six days.

Maynard.

When it is ripe, they gather it, and, bruising it among bread-corn, they put it up into a vessel, and keep it as food for their slaves.

Broomé, Notes on the Odyssey.

BREAD-ROOM. n. s. [In a ship.] A part of the hold separated by a bulk-head from the rest, where the bread and biscuit for the men are kept.

1. To part by violence.

When I brake the five loaves among five thousand, how many baskets of fragments took ye up?

Mark, viii. 19.

Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us.

Psalms ii. 3.

A bruised reed shall he not break.

Isaiah.

See, said the sire, how soon 'tis done;

The sticks he then broke one by one;

So strong you'll be in friendship ty'd;

So quickly broke, if you divide.

Swift.

2. To burst, or open by force.

O could we break our way by force.

Milton, P. L.

Moses tells us, that the fountains of the earth were broke open, or clove asunder.

Burnet, Theory.

Into my hand he forc'd the tempting gold,

While I with modest struggling broke his hold.

Gay.

3. To pierce; to divide, as light divides darkness.

By a dim winking lamp, which feebly broke

The gloomy vapour, he lay stretch'd along.

Dryden.

4. To destroy by violence.

This is the fabrick, which, when God breaketh down, none can build up again.

Burnet, Theory.

5. To batter; to make breaches or gaps in.

I'd give bay Curtal, and his furniture,

My mouth no more were broken than these boys

And writ as little beard.

Shakespeare, All's well.

6. To crush or destroy the strength of the body.

O father abbot!

An old man, broken with the storms of state,

Is come to lay his weary bones among ye;

Give him a little earth for charity.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The breaking of that parliament

Broke him; as the dishonest victory

At Chaeronea, seal'd liberty,

Kill'd with reproach that old man eloquent.

Milton, Sonnet.

- Have not some of his vices weaken'd his body, and broke his health? have not others dissipated his estate, and reduced him to want? Tillotson.
7. To sink or appal the spirit.
The defeat of that day was much greater than it then appeared to be; and it even broke the heart of his army. Clarendon.
I'll brave her to her face;
I'll give my anger its free course against her:
Thou shalt see, Phoenix, how I'll break her pride. Philips.
8. To crush; to shatter.
Thou art the Lord that breakest the battles. Judith, ix. 7.
Your hopes without are vanish'd into smoke;
Your captains taken, and your armies broke. Dryden.
9. To weaken the mental faculties.
Opprest nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses,
Which, if convenience will not allow,
Stand in hard cure. Shakespeare.
If any dabbler in poetry dares venture upon the experiment,
he will only break his brains. Fellon on the Classics.
10. To tame; to train to obedience; to enure to docility.
What boots it to break a colt, and to let him straight run loose at random? Spenser on Ireland.
Why, then, thou can'st not break her to the lute. —
— Why, no; for she hath broke the lute to me. Shakespeare.
So fed before he's broke, he'll bear
Too great a stomach patiently to feel
The lashing whip, or chew the curbing steel. May's Virgil.
That hot-mouth'd beast that bears against the curb,
Hard to be broken even by lawful kings. Dryden.
No sports but what belong to war they know,
To break the stubborn colt, to bend the bow. Dryden.
Virtues like these,
Make human nature shine, reform the soul,
And break our fierce barbarians into men. Addison, Cato.
Behold young Juba, the Numidian prince,
With how much care he forms himself to glory,
And breaks the fierceness of his native temper. Addison.
11. To make bankrupt.
The king's gown bankrupt, like a broken man. Shakespeare.
For this few know themselves: for merchants broke,
View their estate with discontent and pain. Davies.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause. Dryden.
17. To stop; to make cease.
Break their talk, mistress Quickly, my kinsman shall speak for himself. Shakespeare.
18. To intercept.
- Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, yet so as if the first fall be broken, by means of a sop, or otherwise, it stayeth above. Bacon.
Think not my sense of virtue is so small;
I'll rather leap down first, and break your fall. Dryden.
As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short, and looks about for some kind shrub,
To break his dreadful fall. Dryden.
She held my hand, the destin'd blow to break,
Then from her rosy lips began to speak. Dryden.
19. To interrupt.
Some solitary cloister will I choose,
Coarse my attire, and short shall be my sleep,
Break by the melancholy midnight bell. Dryden.
The father was so moved, that he could only command his voice, broke with sighs and sobbings, so far as to bid her proceed. Addison, Spect. No. 164.
The poor shade shiv'ring stands, and must not break
His painful silence, till the mortal speak. Tickell.
Sometimes in broken words he sigh'd his care,
Look'd pale, and trembled when he view'd the fair. Gay.
20. To separate company.
Did not Paul and Barnabas dispute with that vehemence, that they were forced to break company? Atterbury.
21. To dissolve any union.

Roscommon.

4. To pass as air.

Shall I not then be stilled in the vault,
To whose soul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,
And there be strang'd ere my Romeo comes? Shakspeare.

To BREATHE.* v. a.

1. To inspire, or inhale into one's own body, and eject or expire out of it.

They wish to live,
Their pains and poverty desire to bear,
To view the light of heav'n, and breathe the vital air,

Dryden.

They here began to breathe a most delicious kind of ether, and saw all the fields about them covered with a kind of purple light. Tatler, No. 81.

2. To inject by breathing: with into.

He breathed into us the breath of life, a vital active spirit; whose motions, he expects, should own the dignity of its original. Decay of Piety.

I would be young, be handsome, be belov'd,
Could I but breathe myself into Adrastus.

Dryden.

3. To expire; to eject by breathing: with out.

She is called, by ancient authors, the tenth muse; and, by Plutarch, is compared to Caius, the son of Vulcan, who breathed out nothing but flame. Spectator, No. 223.

4. To exercise; to keep in breath.

Thy greyhounds are as swift as breathed stags. Shakspeare.

5. To inspire; to move or actuate by breath.

The artful youth proceed to form the quire;
They breathe the flute, or strike the vocal wire.

Prior.

6. To exhale; to send out as breath.

His altar breathes
Ambrosial odours, and ambrosial flow'rs.

Milton, P. L.

7. To utter privately.

I have toward heaven breath'd a secret vow,
To live in prayer and contemplation.

Shakspeare, Mer. of Ven.

8. To give air or vent to.

B R E

The ready cure to cool the raging pain,
Is underneath the foot to breathe a vein.

Dryden, Virg.

BREATHER. n. s. [from breathe.]

1. One that *breathe*s, or lives.

She shows a body rather than a life,
A statue than a *breathe*r. Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.
I will chide no *breathe*r in the world but myself.

Shakspeare.

2. One that utters any thing.

No particular scandal once can touch,

But it confounds the *breathe*r.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Measure.

3. Inspirer; one that animates or infuses by inspiration.

The *breathe*r of all life does now expire:

His milder father summons him away.

Norris.

BREATHFUL.* adj. [from breathe.]

1. Full of breath.

And eke the breathful bellows blew amaine,
Like to the northren wind, that none could heare.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 38.

2. Full of odour.

Fresh costumarie, and breathful canonile.

Spenser, Muipotmos, v. 195.

BREATHING. n. s. [from breathe.]

1. Aspiration; secret prayer.

His meals are hunger; his breathings, sighs; his linen, hair-cloth.

Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 329.

While to high heaven his pious breathings turn'd,

Weeping he hop'd, and sacrificing mourn'd.

Prior.

2. Breathing place; vent.

The warmth distends the chinks, and makes

New breathings, whence new nourishment she takes.

Dryden.

3. An accent; as, a rough breathing.

BREATHING-PLACE.* n. s. [from breathe and place.]

A pause.

That cæsura, or breathing-place, in the midst of the verse, neither Italian nor Spanisk have, the French and we almost never fail of.

Sidney, Defence of Poesy.

BREATHING-TIME.* n. s. [from breathe and time.]

Relaxation; time for *breath*ing; rest.

Neither doth it a little conduce to our safety, that since marriage, once passed, is irreversible, we may have some breathing-time betwixt our promise and accomplishment.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

He does not allow the poor devoted peer a moment's breathing-time.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope, ii. 323.

BREATHLESS. adj. [from breathe.]

1. Out of breath; spent with labour.

Well knew

The prince, with patience and sufferance sly,

So hasty heat soon cooled to subdue;

Tho' when he breathless wax, that battle 'gan renew.

Spenser, F. Q.

I remember, when the fight was done,

When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,

Breathless, and faint, leaning upon my sword,

Came there a certain lord.

Shakspeare, Henry IV.

Many so strained themselves in their race, that they fell down breathless and dead.

Hayward.

Breathless and tir'd, is all my fury spent?

Or does my glutt'd spleen at length relent?

Dryden, Æn.

2. Dead.

Knelling before this ruin of sweet life,

And breathing to this breathless excellence,

The incense of a vow, a holy vow.

Shakspeare, King John.

Yielding to the sentence, breathless thou

And pale shalt lie, as what thou huriest now.

Prior.

BREATHLESSNESS.* n. s. [from breathless.] The state of being out of breath.

Metthink I hear the soldiers and busie officers when they were rolling that other weighty stone, (for such we probably conceive,) to the mouth of the vault with much toil and sweat and breathlessness, how they bragged of the sureness of the place.

Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 276.

B R E

BRED. participi pass. [from To breed.]

Their malice was bred in them, and their cogitation would never be changed.

Wisdom, xii. 10

BREDE. n. s. See BRAID.

In a curious brede of needlework, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety without being able to distinguish the total vanishing of the one, from the first appearance of the other.

Dryden.

BREECH. n. s. [supposed from bpaecan, Sax.

Dr. Johnson says. But see BREECHES.]

1. The lower part of the body; the back part.

When the king's pardon was offered by a herald, a lewd boy turped towards him his paked breech, and used words suitable to that gesture.

Hayward.

The storks devour snakes and other serpents; which when they begin to creep out at their breeches, they will presently clap them close to a wall, to keep them in.

Grew, Museum.

2. Breeches.

Ah! that thy father had been so resolv'd I—

— That thou might still have worn the petticoat,

And ne'er had stol'n the breech from Lancaster.

Shakspeare.

3. The hinder part of a piece of ordnance.

So cannons, when they mount vast pitches,

Are tumbld back upon their breeches.

Anonymous.

4. The hinder part of any thing.

To BREECH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into breeches.

2. To fit any thing with a breech; as, to breech a gun.

Their daggers

Unmannerly breech'd with gore.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. To whip on the breech. [breeched or jerked, fessé, fonetté. Sherwood.]

Cry like a breech'd boy, not eat a bit.

Beaumont, and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

BREECHES. n. s. [bpaec, Sax. from bracca, an old Gaulish word; so that Skinner imagines the name of the part covered with breeches, to be derived from that of the garment. In this sense it has no singular, Dr. Johnson says; and yet he has, in the preceding article, given it in the singular number, under the second definition. Mr. Horne Tooke inclines to the Sax. bpyce, because, he says,
" breeches cover those parts where the body is broken into two parts." But, from this ludicrous refinement of etymology, I pass on to direct the reader to the Celtick and Gothick languages;
brek old Goth. the knee, brok, the covering or breeches; brug, Celt. whence the old Fr. bragues, and then broches; Sax. bpaec, whence also breeks, still a common word for breeches in the north of England; and sometimes found in our writings.]

1. The garment worn by men over the lower part of the body.

Petruchio is coming in a new hat and an old jerkin, and a pair of old breeches, thrice turned.

Shakspeare, Taming of the Shrew.

Rough satires, sly remarks, ill-natur'd speeches,

Are always aim'd at poets that wear breeches.

Prior.

Give him a single coat to make, he'd do't;

A vest or breeches, singly; but the brute

Could ne'er contrive all three to make a suit.

King.

A parliament-man is one that hath turned his leather-breeks into the new fashion.

Characters, written about 1661.

2. To wear the breeches, is, in a wife, to usurp the authority of the husband.

Children rule, old men go to school, women wear the breeches.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

B R E

The wife of Xanthus was domineering, as if her fortune, and her extraction, had entitled her to the breeches. L'Esrange.

BREECHING.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A whipping. Sherwood.
Memorandum, that I owe Ananias a breeching. Brewer's Lingua, iii. 1.
2. In naval language, the ropes with which the great guns are lashed to the side of a ship are called breechings, because brought about the breech of the piece, in order to secure it. Chambers.

To BREED. v. a. preter. I bred, I have bred. [briean, Sax.]

1. To procreate; to generate; to produce more of the species.

None fiercer in Numidia bred,
With Carthage were in triumph led. Roscommon.

2. To produce from one's self.

Children would breed their teeth with less danger. Locke.

3. To occasion; to cause; to produce.

Thereat he roared for exceeding pain,
That, to have heard, great honour would have bred.

Spenser, F. Q.

Our own hearts we know, but we are not certain what hope the rites and orders of our church have bred in the hearts of others. Hooker.

What hurt ill company, and overmuch liberty, breedeth in youth! Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Intemperance and lust breed infirmities and diseases, which, being propagated, spoil the strain of a nation. Tillotson.

4. To contrive; to hatch; to plot.

My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this! a heart and brain to breed it in! Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. To give birth to; to be the native place: so, there are breeding ponds, and feeding ponds.

Mr. Harding, and the worthiest divine Christendom hath bred for the space of some hundreds of years were brought up together in the same university. Hooker.

Hail, foreign wonder!

Whom, certain these rough shades did never breed.

Milton, Comus.

6. To educate; to form by education.

Whoe'er thou art, whose forward ears are bent
On state affairs to guide the government;

Hear first what Socrates of old has said,
To the lov'd youth, whom he at Athens bred, Dryden.

To breed up the son to common sense,
Is evermore the parent's least expense. Dryden, Juvenal.

And left their pillagers, to rapine bred,
Without controul, to strip and spoil the dead. Dryden.

His farm may not remove his children too far from him, or the trade he breeds them up in. Locke.

7. To bring up; to take care of from infancy.

Ah! wretched me! by fates averse decreed
To bring thee forth with pain, with care to breed. Dryden.

8. To conduct through the first stages of life.

Bred up in grief, can pleasure be our theme?

Our childless anguish, does not nature claim?

Reason and sorrow are to us the same.

Prior.

To BREED. v. n.

1. To bring young.

Lucina, it seems, was breeding, as she did nothing but entertain the company with a discourse upon the difficulty of reckoning to a day. Spectator, No. 431.

2. To be increased by new production.

But could youth last, and love still breed,

Had joys no date, and age no need;

Then these delights my mind might move

To live with thee, and be thy love.

Raleigh.

3. To be produced; to have birth.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd,
The air is delicate. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

There is a worm that breedeth in old snow, and dieth soon after it cometh out of the snow. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

B R E

The caterpillar is one of the most general of worms, and breedeth of dew and leaves. Bacon.

It hath been the general tradition and belief, that maggots and flies breed in putrefied carcases. Beniley.

4. To raise a breed.

In the choice of swine choose such to breed of as are of long large bodies. Mortimer.

BREED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A cast; a kind; a subdivision of species.

I bring you witnesses,

Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed. Shakspeare.

The horses were young and handsome, and of the best breed in the north. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Walled towns, stored arsenals, and ordnance; all this is but a sheep in a lion's skin, except the breed and disposition of the people be stout and warlike. Bacon, Essays.

Infectious streams of crowding sins began,

And through the spurious breed and guilty nation ran.

Roscommon.

Rode fair Ascanius on a fiery steed,

Queen Dido's gift, and of the Tyrian breed. Dryden.

2. A family; a generation: in contempt.

A cousin of his last wife's was proposed; but John would have no more of the breed. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

3. Progeny; offspring.

If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friend; for when did friendship take
A breed of barren metal of his friend?

Shakspeare, Mer. of Ven.

4. A number produced at once; a hatch.

She lays them in the sand, where they lie till they are hatched; sometimes above an hundred at a breed. Grew.

BREEDBATH. n. s. [from breed and bate.] One that breeds quarrels; an incendiary.

An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal; and, I warrant you, no telltale, nor no breedbate.

Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

BREEDER. n. s. [from breed.]

1. That which produces any thing.

Time is the nurse and breeder of all good. Shakspeare.

2. The person which brings up another.

Time was, when Italy and Rome have been the best breeders and bringers up of the worthiest men. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

3. A female that is prolific.

Get thee to a nunnery; why would'st thou be a breeder of sinners? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad,

Amongst the fairest breeders of our time. Til. Andronicus.

Let there be an hundred breeders in London, as many in the country, we say, that if there be sixty of them breeders in London, there are more than sixty in the country. Graunt.

Yet if a friend a night or two should need her,

He'd recommend her as a special breeder. Cope.

4. One that takes care to raise a breed.

The breeders of English cattle turned much to dairy, or else kept their cattle to six or seven years old. Temple.

BREEDING. n. s. [from breed.]

1. Education; instruction; qualifications.

She had her breeding at my father's charge,

A poor physician's daughter. Shakspeare, All's Well.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I hope to see it a piece of none of the meanest breeding, to be acquainted with the laws of nature. Glanville, Scipias, Pref.

2. Manners; knowledge of ceremony.

As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,

To avoid great errors, must the less commit. Pope.

The Graces from the court did next provide

Breeding, and wit, and air, and decent pride. Swift.

3. Nurture; care to bring up from the infant state.

Why was my breeding order'd and prescrib'd,

As of a person separate to God,

Design'd for great exploits?

Milton, S. I.

BREESE. n. s. [briosa, Saxon.] A stinging fly; the gadfly.

Cleopatra,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sail, and flies. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The learned write, the insect breeze
Is but the mongrel prince of bees. Hudibras.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze, their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood. Dryden.

BREEZE. † n. s. [brezza, Ital. brise, Fr. a term in Provence for a fresh wind which blows upon that coast from nine in the morning till the evening.] A gentle gale; a soft wind.

We find, that these hottest regions of the world, seated under the equinoctial line, or near it, are so refreshed with a daily gale of easterly wind, which the Spaniards call breeze, that doth ever more blow stronger in the heat of the day. Raleigh.

From land a gentle breeze arose by night,
Serenely shone the stars, the moon was bright,
And the sea trembled with her silver light. Dryden.

Gradual sinks the breeze
Into a perfect calm; that not a breath
Is heard to quiver through the closing wood. Thomson.

BREEZELESS. * adj. [from breeze and less.] Wanting a breeze.

Yet here no fiery ray inflames
The breezeless sky. W. Richardson's Poems.

A stagnate breezeless air becalms my soul. Shenstone's Poems.

BREEZY. † adj. [from breeze.]

1. Fanned with gales.

The seer, while zephyrs curl the swelling deep,
Basks on the breezy shore, in grateful sleep,
His oozy limbs. Pope.

2. Full of gales.

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn.

Gray, Elegy, st. 5.

BREHON. † n. s. [An Irish word, from breath, judgement. The word was once in use in Scotland also.
See Jamieson's Dict. In the example, from Spenser, given by Dr. Johnson, a curious error occurs in all the editions of the dictionary, which presents a specimen of that pleasant mode of blundering, so often attributed to the Irish; though Spenser does not warrant it; and therefore Spenser is now vindicated. Dr. Johnson's reading is, "the judge will compound between the murderer and the party murdered."]

In the case of murder, the brehon, that is, their judge, will compound between the murderer and friend of the party murdered, which prosecute the action, that the malefactor shall give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that is slain, a recompence, which they call an eriaich. Spenser on Ireland.

BREME. † adj. [from brēmman, Sax. to rage or fume, often written brim and bryme in our old language.
Brim or fierce, ferox, Prompt. Parv. Su. Goth.
brumma, to rage.] Cruel; sharp; severe. Not used.

Thistles thicke,
And breis brimme for to pricke. Chaucer, Rom. R. 1836.

And when the shining sun laugheth once,
You deem the spring come at once:
But est, when you count, you freed from fear,
Comes the breme winter, with chamfred brows,
Full of wrinkles, and frosty furrows. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Baleful shrieks of ghosts are heard most brim.

Sackville's Induction, Mfr. for Mag.

TO BREN. * v. a. [Iceland. brenn, to burn; Goth.
brinnan; Sax. brennan. This verb, instead of burn, is usual in our old authors. It continued in use till the reign of Elizabeth.] To burn. Obsolete.

On the wicked flame his bowels brent.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 16.

BRENT. † part. adj. [from bren.] This word is given by Johnson merely as an adjective; without any notice of the verb, which formerly both as an active and neuter verb was common.] Burnt.

What flames, quoth he, when I thee present see
In danger rather to be brent than drent? Spenser, F. Q.

BRENT, or BRANT. * adj. [Su. Goth. bryn, the top of a hill.] Steep; high. A brent brow is yet distinguished, in some places, as a high hill; in the north, it is brant or brunt; "as brant as the side of a house." Ray.

The grapes grow on the brant rocks so wonderfully, that ye will marvell how men dare to climb up to them.

Ascham, Lett. to Raven.

BREST. n. s. [in architecture.] That member of a column, called also the torus, or tore.

BREST Summers. The pieces in the outward parts of any timber building, and in the middle floors, into which the girders are framed. Harris.

BRIT. n. s. A fish of the turbot kind, also burt or brut. Dict.

BRIMFUL. * adj. [Cockran gives this word, and defines it topfull; but says, that then (1622) it was obsolete. The etymology is uncertain; but, in Gloucestershire, the breeds of a hat are said to mean the brims of a hat, Grose's Prov. Gloss. This may serve perhaps to confirm the meaning, in our old poets, of brimful, which this obsolete word exhibits.]
Brimful.

His wallet lay before him in his lappe,
Bretful of pardons come from Rome all hote.

Chaucer, Prolog. C. T. 689.

A frere on a bench—

With a face so fat, as a ful bledde,
Blowen bretful of breath.

P. Plowman's Crede, (1554.) sign. B. i. b.

BRETHREN. † n. s. [the plural of brother, Goth.
brothrahans.] See BROTHER.

All these sects are brethren to each other in faction, ignorance, iniquity, perverseness, pride. Swift.

BREVE. † n. s. [in music.] A note or character of time, equivalent to four minims.

BREVE. * n. s. [Lat. breve; whence the Icelandick bréf, a diploma; the Germ. and Dutch brief, a letter; Sax. brave; and our own word brief, now used instead of breve, which however is found in good authors. Originally, "breve nihil aliud erat quàm rescriptum quoddam principis, quo ordinario judici mandabat, ut de querelâ ad eum delatâ jus diceret breviter, ita ut ampliùs super eâ querelâ rex non molestetur." Cragii Jus Feudale, lib. ii. tit. xvii.]
An official writing; a letter of state. In the common law, a writ or brief; in the civil, a short note or minute.

The breve rather than the bull should have larger dispensation. Id. Herbert's Hist. of Hen. VIII. p. 227.

Neither the popes themselves, nor those of the court, the secretaries and dataries, which pen their bulls and breves, have any use or exercise in Holy Scripture.

Bp. Bedell's Letters, &c. p. 356.

BREVET. * n. s. [Fr. from the low Lat. brevevium, of breve, short.] A military phrase of modern times.
For Cotgrave renders brevet "a brief, note, breviate, little writing, short declaration, ticket, or bill of one's hand." But brevet now means appointment in the army, and rank above the specifick appointment for which pay is received; as, a lieutenant-colonel, being made colonel by brevet, enjoys the pay only of the former, but the honour and privileges of the latter, station. A brevet is a warrant, without seal.

BREVIARY. † n. s. [breviaire, Fr. breviarium, Lat.]

1. An abridgement; epitome; a compendium.

Cresconius, an African bishop, has given us an abridgement or breviary thereof.

Some few naked breviaries of their wars and leagues.

Peter Comestor's Historia Scholastica, a sort of breviary of the Old and New Testament.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 108.

2. The book containing the daily service of the church of Rome, as contradistinguished from the missal.

The sermon of the martyrs, which is found among the homilies of St. Augustine and Leo, and in the Roman breviary is appointed to be read at the common festival days of many martyrs.

Abp. Usher's Answer to the Jesuit Malone, p. 333.

If you say they were not saved, then your Roman martyrology, all your missals and breviaries are manifestly false.

Rp. Barlow's Remains, p. 460.

BREVIATE. † n. s. [from brevis, brevio, Lat.]

1. A short compendium.

He shall less need the help of breviates, or historical rhapsodies.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

It is obvious to the shallowest discourses, that the whole counsel of God, as far as it is incumbent for man to know, is comprised in one breviate of evangelical truth.

Decay of Piety.

2. A lawyer's brief.

First, he that led the cavalcade

Wore a sow-gelder's flagellet,

On which he blew as strong a levet,

As well-fer'd lawyer on his breviate.

To BREVIATE. * v. a. [Lat. brevio.] To abbreviate.

Sherwood.

BREVIATURE. n. s. [from brevio, Lat.] An abbreviation.

BREVIER. n. s. A particular size of letter used in printing; so called, probably, from being originally used in printing a breviary; as,

Nor love thy life, nor hate, but what thou liv'st,

Live well; how long or short, permit to Heav'n.

Milton.

BREVITY. † n. s. [brevitas, Lat. brieveté, Fr.] Conciseness; shortness; contraction into few words.

Virgil, studying brevity, and having the command of his own language, could bring those words into a narrow compass, which a translator cannot render without circumlocutions.

Dryden.

To BREW. † v. a. [brouwen, Dutch; bräuen, German; brujan, Saxon; brugga, Goth. bruer, old Fr.]

1. To make liquours by mixing several ingredients.

We have drinks also brewed with several herbs, and roots, and spices.

Bacon.

Mercy guard me!

Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver.

Milton, Comus.

2. To put into preparation.

Here's neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

3. To mingle.

Take away these chalices; go, brew me a pottle of sack finely.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Pope seems to use the word indeterminately.

Or brew fierce tempests on the watery main,

Or o'er the globe distil the kindly rain.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

5. To contrive; to plot.

I found it to be the most malicious and frantick surmise, and the most contrary to his nature, that, I think, had ever been brewed from the beginning of the world, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician, even in print.

Wotton.

To BREW. v. n. To perform the office of a brewer.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds, and do all myself.

Shakespeare.

BREW. † n. s. [from the verb.] Manner of brewing; or thing brewed.

Trial would be made of the like brew with potatoe roots, or burr roots, or the pith of artichokes, which are nourishing meats.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Above the northern nests of feather'd snows,

The brew of thunders, and the flaming forge

That forms the crooked lightning.

Young, Night Th. 9.

BREWAGE. † n. s. [from brew.] Mixture of various things.

Go, brew me a pottle of sack finely.

— With eggs, sir? —

— Simple of itself: I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

After the malmsey, or some well-spiced brewage.

Milton, Areopagitica.

BREWER. n. s. [from brew.] A man whose profession it is to make beer.

When brewers marr their malt with water.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Men every day eat and drink, though I think no man can demonstrate out of Euclid or Apollonius, that his baker, or brewer, or cook, has not conveyed poison into his meat or drink.

Tillotson.

BREWERY. * n. s. [from brewer.] The place appropriated to brewing.

Over the bridge is a great porter-brewery.

Pennant.

I could not but be somewhat diverted by hearing Johnson talk in a pompous manner of his new office, and particularly of the concerns of the brewery, which it was at last resolved should be sold.

Boswell, Life of Johnson.

BREWHOUSE. n. s. [from brew and house.] A house appropriated to brewing.

In our brewhouses, bakehouses, and kitchens, are made divers drinks, breads, and meats.

Bacon, Atlantis.

BREWING. * n. s. See To BREW, 4th sense. In naval language, the appearance of black tempestuous clouds, arising gradually, from a particular part of the hemisphere, and indicating an approaching storm.

Chambers.

BREWING. n. s. [from brew.] Quantity of liquor brewed at once.

A brewing of new beer, set by old beer, maketh it work again.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

BREWIS. † n. s. [Sax. brup, pl. brupar, sops, or little pieces of meat. In Yorkshire, breaus is the term for such brewis. In Welsh, brw is a morsel. Huloet calls it "brottesse made with bread or fat meat."] A piece of bread soaked in boiling fat pottage, made of salted meat. It seems anciently to have meant broth, with meat in it.

Clerks of the kitchen, yeomen of the horse, to have a soupe [sup] at their maister's broth and brewes.

Harmar's Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 334.

He, going to their stately place, did find in every dish,

Fat beef and brewis, and great store of dainty fowl and fish.

Warner's Albion's England.

We eating rascals,

Whose gods are beef and brewis!

Bacon, and Fl. Bonduca.

What an ocean of brewis shall I swim in.

Bacon, and Fl. D.

BRIAR. n. s. See BRIER.

BRIBE. † n. s. [Bribe, in French, original. is to be fies a piece of bread, and is applied to as, in his taken from the rest; it is therefore likely, A new bribe originally signified, among us, a share thing unjustly got. This etymological des given by Dr. Johnson, is not complete. B pears to have formerly signified what is given to a beggar; and in old Fr. is sometimes written briba, "reste de pain d'un repas, morceau de telle chose que ce soit." Roquet. Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. Bribeur is both a beggar, and a greedy devourer, in old Fr. V. Cotgrave and Roquetfort. Hence, from the latter acceptation, bribe is used by Chaucer for what is given to an extortioner, Canterb. T. ver. 6960, ed. Tyrwhitt. Brib is also a scrap or morsel in Welsh. In the writers of the middle age, a bribe given to a judge is called quota litis, and the receiver campi or cambi particeps; because the spoils of the field, i. e. the profits of the cause were thus shared with the giver. V. Chambers, in V. BRIBE. This obsolete meaning seems to have been assumed, in the time of James the First, by the lord keeper Williams; for he can only mean fees (which word, by the way, is also used for pittance) in his letter to the Duke of Buckingham, where he says, "my charge is exceeding great, my bribes are very little." See Cabala, or Mysteries of State, 1654, p. 85.] A reward given to pervert the judgement or corrupt the conduct.

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella,
For taking bribes here of the Sardians. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.
Nor less may Jupiter to gold ascribe,
When he had turn'd himself into a bribe. Waller.

If a man be covetous, profits or bribes may put him to the test. L'Estrange.

There's joy when to wild will you laws prescribe,
When you bid fortune carry back her bribe. Dryden.

To BRIBE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gain by bribes; to give bribes, rewards, or hire, to bad purposes.

The great, 'tis true, can still th' electing tribe,
The bard may supplicate, but cannot bribe.
1. Argue to Good-natured Man.

2. It is seldom, and not properly, used in a good sense.

How pow'rful are chaste vows! the wind and tide
You brib'd to combat on the English side. Dryden.

BRIBER.† n. s. [old Fr. bribeur. See BRIBE.] One that pays for corrupt practices.

Affection is still a briber of the judgement; and it is hard for a man to admit a reason against the thing he loves; or to confess the force of an argument against an interest. South.

BRIBERY. n. s. [from bribe.] The crime of taking or giving rewards for bad practices.

There was a law made by the Romans, against the bribery and extortion of the governours of provinces: before, says Cicero, the governours did bribe and extort as much as was sufficient for themselves; but now they bribe and extort as much as may be enough not only for themselves, but for judges, jurors, and magistrates. Bacon.

No bribery of courts, or cabals of factions, or advantages of fortune, can remove him from the solid foundations of honour and fidelity. Dryden, Aureng. Pref.

BRICK. n. s. [brick, Dutch; brigue, Fr. according to Baillet; Menage, from imbrex, Lat. whence brica.]

BRICK-EARTH. n. s. [from brick and earth.] Earth used in making bricks.

They grow very well both on the hazelly brickearths, and on gravel. Mortimer.

BRICK-KILN. n. s. [from brick and kiln.] A kiln; a place to burn bricks.

Like the Israelites in the brick-kilns, they multiplied the more for their oppression. Decay of Piety.

BRICKLAYER. n. s. [from brick and lay.] A man whose trade it is to build with bricks; a brick-mason.

The elder of them, being put to nurse,
And ignorant of his birth and parentage,
Became a bricklayer when he came to age. Shakspeare.

If you had liv'd, sir,
Time enough to have been interpreter
To Babel's bricklayers, sure the tow'r had stood. Donne.

BRICKLE.* adj. [Teut. brokel, from broken, to break. Formerly written brokle by us. See Huloet in BRITTLE, "brickle or broke." Huloet and Barret explain bryckle as "soon broken, easy to be broken." In Cheshire, brichoe is brittle.] Brittle; frail; apt to break.

The altar, on the which this image staid,
Was, O great pity! built of brickle clay.

The brickle and variable doctrine of John Calvin in his institutions. Stapleton's Fortress of the Faith, (1565.) fol. 24. b.

BRICKY.* adj. [old Fr. briqueux. See BRICKLE.] Full of bricks; fit for bricks.

Cotgrave in V. Briqueux.

BRIDAL.† n. s. [Sax. brydal, signifying both the wedding, and the wedding feast; epulum nuptiale, nuptie. Lye, in V. Brydal, edit. Manning. But Butler, in his English Grammar of 1634, says "A brideale [is] of bride and ale; the word signifying not the wedding, but the wedding feast, Ind. a. 2. Some have asserted, that the bridal is so denominated from the circumstance of the bride, in our northern counties, selling ale on the wedding-day, for which she received handsome presents from her friends. The word bride-bush is attributed to the same custom, and is only another expression for bride-ale; a bush at the end of a stake being once the usual sign in country places for the alehouse. A divine of James the First's time has published "a bride-bush or wedding sermon; compendiously describing the duties of married persons, &c." 1st edit. 1617. A bride-wain, which in the north, means a bidden wedding, i. e. a wedding to which guests are invited, is attended with presents also for the bride.] The nuptial festival.

The bridale was fulfilled with men sitting at the mete.

Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxii.

I saw nuns and papists dance at a bridal.

Ascham, Lett. to Raven.

Looke! how the crowne, which Ariadne wore
Upon her ivory forehead that same day
That Theseus her unto his bridale bore.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 13.

Nay, we must think, men are not gods;

Nor of them look for such observance always,

As fits the bridal.

Shakespeare, Othello.

A man that's bid to bride-ale, if he ha' cake

And drink enough, he need not wear his stake.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,

The bridal of the earth and sky,

Sweet dews shall weep thy fall to-night;

For thou must die.

Herbert.

In death's dark bow'rs our brides we will keep,
And his cold hand

Shall draw the curtain when we go to sleep.

Dryden.

BRIDAL.† adj. [from the substantive.] Belonging to a wedding; nuptial; connubial.

Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast;

Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change,

Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse.

Shakespeare.

Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.

Shakespeare.

The amorous bird of night

Sung spousal, and bid haste the evening star,

On his hill-top to light the bridal lamp.

Milton, P. L.

Your ill-meaning politician lords,

Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,

Appointed to await me thirty spies.

Milton, S. A.

When to my arms thou brought'st thy virgin love,

Fair angels sung our bridal hymn above.

Dryden.

With all the pomp of woe, and sorrow's pride,

Oh, early lost! oh, fitter to be led

In cheerful splendour to the bridal bed!

Walsh.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring,

For her white virgins hymeneals sing.

Pope, El. to Abelard.

BRIDALTY.* n. s. [from bridal.] Celebration of the nuptial feast.

At quintin he,

In honour of this bridaltie,

Hath challeng'd either wide countee.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

BRIDE.† n. s. [bryð, Saxon; brudur, in Runick; signifies a beautiful woman, Dr. Johnson says. But the Goth. bruth is perhaps the original; bruth, the daughter in law, St. Matt. x. 35. M. Goth. Vers. The Sn. brud, a bride, is from this word.] A woman new married.

Help me mine own love's praises to resound,

No let the fame of any be envy'd;

So Orpheus did for his own bride.

Spenser, Epithal.

The day approach'd, when fortune should decide

Th' important enterprize, and give the bride.

Dryden, Fab.

These are tributes due from pious brides,

From a chaste matron, and a virtuous wife.

Smith, Phaed. and Hip.

BRIDEBED.† n. s. [from bride and bed, Sax. bryðbeb.] Marriage-bed.

Now until the break of day,

Through this house each fairy stray;

To the best bridebed will we,

Which by us shall blessed be.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

Would David's son, religious, just, and brave,

To the first bridebed of the world receive

A foreigner, a heathen, and a slave?

Prior.

BRIDEBUSH.* n. s. See BRIDAL.

BRIDECAKE. n. s. [from bride and cake.] A cake distributed to the guests at the wedding.

With the phant'sies of hey-troll,

Troll about the bridal bowl,

And divide the broad bridecake

Round about the bride's stake.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

The writer, resolved to try his fortune, fasted all day, and, that he might be sure of dreaming upon something at night, procured an handsome slice of bridecake, which he placed very conveniently under his pillow.

Spectator, No. 597.

BRIDECAMBER.* [from bride and chamber. Sax. bryðbupe, the bride-boxer or chamber.] The nuptial chamber.

Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them?

St. Matt. ix. 15.

BRIDEGROOM.† n. s. [from bride and groom, Dr. Johnson says. The Saxon word is bryðguma, the Tent. brautigam, and the Dutch brydgom; the two latter of which Minshew notices, and adds a very ancient German word for it, viz. brutigomo;

the etymology of which he plausibly refers to the Germ. braut, a bride, and the Gr. γαμος, to marry. Skinner, noticing the collateral words which want the r in groom, contends, however, that bridegroom is manifestly the groom or servant

of the bride, he being so called on the wedding-day. But the word means literally the bride's man, gumme being the old Gothick for a man; guma,

the M. Gothick; whence the Germ. gomo, and the Sax. guma, a man. Gom was so used in our own language. See Gom. Mr. Horne Tooke, as plausibly as Minshew and Skinner, argues in support of an etymology which he offers, that groom is applied to the person by whom something is attended; and that notwithstanding the introduction of the letter r into it, for which, he says, he cannot account, he is persuaded that it is the past participle of the A. Sax. verb gyman, curare, regere, custodire, cavere, attendere. But he had not considered the Gothick word; or the remark of another etymologist, that the Lat. homo is perhaps only another form of gomo or guma; by which the omission of the r is at once accounted for. See Whiter's Etymolog. Magnum, p. 355. It is obvious, that our word yeoman (the original of which Dr. Johnson has not rightly explained) is to be found in this northern etymology. Coles, in his dictionary, has bridgume for bridegroom.] A new married man.

As are those dulcet sounds in break of day,

That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's ear,

And summon him to marriage.

Shakespeare.

B R I

Why, happy bridegroom!

Why dost thou steal so soon away to bed?

Dryden.

BRIDEMAID.† n. s. [from bride and maid.] She who attends upon the bride.

In came the bridemaids with a posset.

Sir J. Suckling, Song on a Wedding.

The bride [among the Anglo-Saxons] was led by a matron, who was called the bride's woman, followed by a company of young maidens, who were called the bride's maids.

Strutt, Manners and Customs of the Eng. i. 76.

BRIDEMAN.† n. s. [from bride and man.] He who attends the bride and bridegroom at the nuptial ceremony; formerly called a bride-knight, and a bride-squire; as in Selden's Uxor Ebraica, and B. Jonson's Underwoods.

My virtuous maid, this day I'll be your *bride*man.

Beaumont and Fl. Wife for a Month.

The friends [of persons to be married] may be understood such as the ancients called *paranymphe*s or *bride*men.

Wheatly on the Common Prayer.

BRIDESTAKE. n. s. [from bride and stake.] It seems to be a post set in the ground, to dance round, like a maypole.

Round about the *bride*stake. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

BRIDEWELL. n. s. [The palace built by St. Bride's, or Bridget's well, was turned into a workhouse.] A house of correction.

He would contribute more to reformation than all the work-houses and Bridewells in Europe. Spectator, No. 157.

BRIDGE.† n. s. [Su. Goth. brygga; Sax. brýcge, brugg; old Fr. brug, bruge, and brige; the common word, in the north of England, for a bridge. Ihre states the Su. Goth. "bro, stratum aliquod," as the root of brygga.]

1. A building raised over water for the convenience of passage.

What need the bridge much broader than the flood?

Shakespeare.

And proud Araxes, whom no bridge could bind. Dryden.

2. The upper part of the nose.

The raising gently the bridge of the nose, doth prevent the deformity of a saddle nose. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. The supporter of the strings in stringed instruments of music.

To BRIDGE.† v. a. [from the noun.] Of this unusual word Dr. Johnson cites only the following example in the passage of Milton, whom a literary friend supposes to have coined this verb. But I find bridged in Sherwood's dictionary of 1632, with the explanation, "that hath a bridge over it."

To raise a bridge over any place.

Xerxes, the liberty of Greece to yoke,

From Susa, his Memnonian palace high,

Came to the sea; and, over Hellespont

Bridging his way, Europe with Asia join'd.

Milton, P. L. x. 310.

BRIDGY.* adj. [from bridge.] Full of bridges.

Sherwood.

BRIDLE.† n. s. [old Fr. bridel, Sax. bríðl.]

1. The headstall and reins by which a horse is restrained and governed.

They seiz'd at last

His courser's bridle and his feet embrac'd.

Dryden, Fab.

2. A restraint; a curb; a check.

The king resolved to put that place, which some men fancied to be a bridle upon the city, into the hands of such a man as he might rely upon. Clarendon.

A bright genius often betrays itself into many errors, without a continual bridle on the tongue. Watts.

B R I

To BRIDLE.† v. a. [Sax. bríðlian.]

1. To restrain, or guide by a bridle.

I bridle in my struggling muse with pain,
That longs to launch into a bolder strain.

Addison.

2. To put a bridle on any thing.

The queen of beauty stopp'd her bridled doves;
Approv'd the little labour of the Loves.

Prior.

3. To restrain; to govern.

The disposition of things is committed to them, whom law may at all times bridle, and superiour power controul.

Hooker, § 9.

With a strong, and yet a gentle hand,
You bridle faction, and our hearts command.

Waller.

To BRIDLE.† v. n. To hold up the head.

How the fool bridles! how she twitters at him!

Beaumont and Fl. Pilgrim.

BRIDLEHAND. n. s. [from bridle and hand.] The hand which holds the bridle in riding.

In the turning, one might perceive the bridlehand something gently stir; but, indeed, so gently, as it did rather distil virtue than use violence. Sidney, b. ii.

The heat of summer put his blood into a ferment, which affected his bridlehand with great pain. Wiseman's Surgery.

BRIDLER.* n. s. [from bridle.] He who directs or restrains as by a bridle.

The prelates—boast themselves the only bridlers of schism.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. B. i. ch. 7.

A goose-bridler; a nick-name for a lawyer.

Cotgrave, in V. Brydoye.

BRIEF. adj. [brevis, Lat. brief, Fr.]

1. Short; concise. It is now seldom used but of words.

A play there is, my lord, some ten words long,

Which is as brief as I have known a play;

But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,

Which makes it tedious.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

I will be mild and gentle in my words,—

—And brief, good mother, for I am in haste.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

I must begin with rudiments of art,

To teach you gumut in a *brief*er sort,

More pleasant, pretty, and effectual.

Shakespeare, Tam. of Shrew.

They nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus

The brief stile is that which expresseth much in little.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

If I had quoted more words, I had quoted more profaneness; and therefore Mr. Congreve has reason to thank me for being brief. Collier, View of the Stage.

2. Contracted; narrow.

The shrine of Venus, or straight pight Minerva,

Postures beyond brief nature.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

BRIEF.† n. s. [Icelandick, bréf, diploma; Dutch, brief. See BREVE.]

1. A writing of any kind.

There is a brief, how many sports are ripe;

Make choice of which your highness will see first.

Shakespeare.

The apostolical letters are of a twofold kind and difference, viz. some are called briefs, because they are comprised in a short and compendious way of writing. Ashtiff.

2. A short extract, or epitome.

But how you must begin this enterprise,

I will your highness thus in brief advise.

Spenser, F. Q.

I doubt not but I shall make it plain, as far as a sum or brief can make a cause plain.

Bacon, Holy War.

The brief of this transaction is, these springs that arise here are impregnated with vitriol.

Woodward, on Fossils.

3. [In law.] A writ whereby a man is summoned to answer to any action; or it is any precept of the king in writing, issuing out of any court, whereby he commands any thing to be done.

Cowel.

4. The writing given the pleaders, containing the case.

The brief with weighty crimes was charg'd,
On which the pleader much enlarg'd. Suiff.

The young fellow had a very good air, and seem'd to hold his brief in his hand rather to help his action, than that he wanted notes for his further information. Tatler, No. 186.

5. Letters patent, giving licence to a charitable collection for any public or private loss.

6. [In musick.] A measure of quantity, which contains two strokes down in beating time, and as many up. Harris.

BRIEFLY.† adv. [from brief.]

1. Concisely; in few words.

I will speak in that manner which the subject requires; that is, probably, and moderately, and briefly. Bacon.

The modest queen a while, with downcast eyes,
Ponder'd the speech; then briefly thus replies. Dryden.

2. Quickly.

Ant. Go, put on thy defences. Er. Briefly, sir. •

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BRIEFNESS.† n. s. [from brief.] Conciseness; shortness.

They excel in grandity and gravity, in smoothness and propriety, in quickness and briefness. Camden.

As Quintilian saith, there is a briefness of the parts sometimes that makes the whole long. B. Jonson's Discoveries.

My lord, long wish'd for, welcome!

'Tis a sweet briefness; yet in that short word

All pleasures, which I may call mine, begin;

And may they long increase, before they find

A second period! Beaumont and Fl. Martial Maid.

BRIER. n. s. [briær, Sax.] A plant. The sweet and the wild sorts are both species of the rose.

What subtle hole is this,

Whose mouth is cover'd with rude growing briers?

Shakspeare.

Then thrice under a brier doth creep,

Which at both ends was rooted deep,

And over it three times doth leap;

Her magick much availing.

Drayton's Nymphid.

BRIERY.† adj. [from brier.] Rough; thorny; full of briers. Sherwood.

BRIERY.* n. s. [from brier; so we say a shrubbery.]

A place where briers grow. Hulot.

BRIG, and possibly also BRIX, is derived from the Saxon, briex, a bridge; which, to this day, in the northern counties, is called a brigg, and not a bridge. Gibson's Camden.

BRIG.* n. s. [an abbreviation perhaps of brigantine, which see.] A light vessel with two masts.

BRIGADE.† n. s. [brigade, Fr. It is now generally pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, Dr. Johnson says; but nothing more. Milton wrote it brigad in order to urge, perhaps, an accentuation opposite to that of the French on the second syllable. He was no friend to the French language. But, in his own time, and long before the publication of the Paradise Lost, brigade was so written, and also accented on the first syllable. The etymology perhaps may be traced to the Goth. brigd. See BRIGUE. But some deduce it from brigandine, armour, or brigand, an ill-disciplined soldier.] A division of forces; a body of men, consisting of several squadrons of horse, or battalions of foot.

Can Lesley's regiment thus wheel about

The brigade of our clergy? put to rout

Our bishops, deans, and doctors?

Rome for Canterbury, (1641,) p. 7.

Thither, wing'd with speed,

A numerous brigad hasten'd. Milton, P. L. i. 674.

With rapid wheels, or fronted brigade, form'd. Ibid. ii. 532.

Here the Bavarian duke his brigades leads,

Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold.

Philips.

TO BRIGADE.* v. a. [old Fr. brigader, "to associate, to troop together," Cotgrave. That such a verb should escape especial notice in a Military Dictionary, is curious; but the reader will look for it in vain, at least in modern compilations of that kind.] To form into a brigade; to apportion a body of military forces.

BRIGADE Major. An officer appointed by the brigadier [or general] to assist him in the management and ordering of his brigade; and he there acts as a major does in an army. Harris.

BRIGADIER General.† An officer who commands a brigade of horse or foot in an army; next in order below a major general.

The Austrians have no brigadiers, and the French have no major-generals. Ld. Chesterfield.

BRIGAND. n. s. [brigand, Fr.] A robber; one that belongs to a band of robbers.

There might be a rout of such barbarous thievish brigands in some rocks; but it was a degeneration from the nature of man, a political creature. Bramhall against Hobbes.

BRIGANDAGE.* n. s. [Fr. brigandage.] Theft; plunder.

It was not at all for the publick good, to suffer peasants and mechanicks to run up and down the woods and forests, armed; which not only brings them to neglect their proper trades and employments to the damage of the publick and their families, but in time inevitably draws them on to robbery and brigandage.

Warburton, Alliance of Ch. and State, (1st. ed.) p. 129.

BRIGANDINE.† n. s.

1. A light vessel; such as has been formerly used by corsairs or pirates. [old Fr. brigandin; "brigantin, sort de vaisseau léger." Roquefort.]

Like as a warlike brigandine, apply'd

To fight, lays forth her threatful pikes afore

The engines, which in them sad death do hide.

Spenser.

2. A coat of mail. [old Fr. brigandine.]

Furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines.

Jerem. xlv. 4.

Then put on all thy gorgeous arms, thy helmet

And brigandine of brass, thy broad habergeon,

Vambrace, and greves.

Milton, S. A.

BRIGANTINE.† n. s. [Fr. brigantin. See BRIGANDINE.] A light vessel.

In your brigantine you sail'd to see

The Adriatick wedded.

Ottway, Venice Preserved.

The consul oblig'd him to deliver up his fleet, and restore the ships, reserving only to himself two brigantines.

Arbutnot.

BRIGHT.† adj. [Goth. bairht; Sax. beopht, briht, splendid, clear. Some have thought the Welsh brith, painted, as the origin of our word.]

1. Shining; full of light.

Through a cloud

Drawn round about thee like a radiant shrine,

Dark, with excessive bright, thy skirts appear. Milton, P. L.

Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light

Sprang through the roof, and made the temple bright. Dryden.

2. Shining as a body reflecting light.

Bright brass, and brighter domes.

Chapman.

Thy eyes are seen in diamonds bright.

Gay.

Bright as the sun her eyes the gazers strike.

Pope.

3. Clear; transpicious.

From the brightest wines

Hé turn'd abhorrent.

Thomson.

While the bright Seine t'exalt the soul,

With sparkling plenty crowns the bowl.

Benton.

4. Clear; evident.

He must not proceed too swiftly, that he may with more ease, with brighter evidence, and with surer success, draw the learner on. Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

5. Resplendent with charms.

Thy beauty appears,
In its graces and airs,
All bright as an angel new dropp'd from the sky. Parnel.
O Liberty, thou goddess heavenly bright,
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight! Addison.
Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair,
Such Chloe is, and common as the air. Granville.
To-day black omens threat the brightest fair
That e'er engag'd a watchful spirit's care. Pope.
Thou more dreaded foe, bright beauty, shine. Young.

6. Illuminated with science; sparkling with wit.

Generous, gay, and gallant nation,
Great in arms, and bright in art. Pope.
If parts allure thee, think how Bacon shin'd,
The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind. Pope.

7. Illustrious; glorious.

This is the worst, if not the only stain,
In the brightest annals of a female reign. Cotton.
To BRIGHTEN.† v. a. [from bright, Goth. bairtjan, to make manifest.]

1. To make bright; to make to shine.

The purple morning rising with the year,
Salutes the spring, as her celestial eyes
Adorn the world, and brighten up the skies. Dryden.

2. To make luminous by light from without.

An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart, and brightens all my sorrow,
Like gleams of sunshine in a lowering sky. Philips.

3. To make gay, or cheerful.

Hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton, P. L.
This makes Jack brighten up the room wherever he enters, and changes the severity of the company into that gaiety and good humour, into which his conversation generally leads them.
Tailler, No. 206.

4. To make illustrious.

The present queen would brighten her character if she would exert her authority to instil virtues into her people. Swift.
Yet time ennobles, or degrades each line;
It brighten'd Craggs's, and may darken thine. Pope.

5. To make acute, or witty.

To BRIGHTEN.† v. n. To grow bright; to clear up;
as, the sky brightens.

But let a lord once own the happy lines;
How the stile brightens, how the sense refines. Pope.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength;
to consider that she is to shine for ever in new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity; that she will still be adding virtue to virtue, and knowledge to knowledge; carries in it something wonderfully agreeable to that ambition which is natural to the mind of man. Addison, Spect. No. III.

*BRIGHTBURNING.* adj.* [from bright and burning.]

Burning brightly or briskly.

What fool hath added water to the sea,
Or brought a faggot to bright-burning Troy? Titus Andr. iii. 1.

*BRIGHTEYED.* adj.* [from bright and eye.] Having bright eyes.

Bright-eyed science watches round. Gray, Install. Ode.

*BRIGHTHAIR.* adj.* [from bright and hair.] Having hair of a bright colour.

Ther, bright-hair'd Vesta long of yore,
To solitary Saturn bore. Milton, Il Pens. ver. 23.

*BRIGHTHARNESSED.* adj.* [from bright and harness.]

Having bright armour. See HARNESSED.
And all about the courtly stable
Bright-harnessed angels sit in order servicable.
Milton, Ode on the Nativity.

*BRIGHTLY.* adv.* [Sax. brihtlice.] Splendidly; with lustre.

Safely I slept, till brightly dawning shone
The morn conspicuous on her golden throne. Pope.

BRIGHTNESS. n. s. [from bright.]

1. Lustre; splendour; glitter.

The blazing brightness of her beauty's beam,
And glorious light of her sun-shining face,
To tell, were as to strive against the stream. Spenser, F. Q.
A sword, by long lying still, will contract a rust, which shall deface its brightness. South.

The moon put on her veil of light,
Mysterious veil of brightness made,
That's both her lustre and her shade. Hudibras.

Vex'd with the present moment's heavy gloom,
Why seek we brightness from the years to come? Prior.

2. Acuteness.

The brightness of his parts, the solidity of his judgement, and the candour and generosity of his temper, distinguished him in an age of great politeness. Prior.

*BRIGHTSHINING.* part. adj.* [from bright and shine.]

Shining brightly.

The light of your brightshining starre.
Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Beauty.

In the midst of this bright-shining day,
I spy a black, suspicious, threatening cloud.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

*BRIGOSE.* adj.* [from the old Fr. Germ. or low Lat.

briga, contention. See BRIGUE.] Quarrelsome; contentious.

Which two words, as conscious that they were very brigose and severe, (if too generally taken, therefore) he softens them in the next immediate words by an apology.

Puller's Moderation of the Ch. of Eng. p. 324.

*BRIGUE.* n. s.* [Goth. brigd, Germ. briga, old Fr.

briga, low Lat. briga. Cotgrave translates the Fr.
word into "a canvas, a private suit, an underhand labouring for an office." In this softened sense both the verb and substantive are found in our modern language. In our old language, the substantive implies open and violent contention.] Strife; quarrel.

Ye knowen wel that mine adversaries han begonne this debat and brige by their outrage. Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus.

The rise and decay of the papal power, the politicks of the court, the brigues of the cardinals, the tricks of the conclave.

Ld. Chesterfield.

To *BRIGUE.* v. a.* [Fr. briguer.] To canvas; to solicit. See BRIGUE.

Though I think too justly of myself to believe I am qualified to enter into the former of these lists; you may conclude, if you please, that I am too proud to brigue for an admission into the latter. Hurd.

BRIILLIANCY. n. s. [from brilliant.] Lustre; splen-dour.

*BRIILLIANT.* adj.* [Brillant, Fr. briller, old Fr. to glitter, from bril, a sparkle.] Shining; sparkling; splendid; full of lustre.

So have I seen in larger dark
Of veal a lucid loin,
Replete with many a brilliant spark,
As wise philosophers remark,
At once both stink and shine. Dorset.

BRIILLIANT. n. s. A diamond of the finest cut, formed into angles, so as to refract the light, and shine more.

In deference to his virtues I forbear
To shew you what the rest in orders were;
This brilliant is so spotless and so bright,
He needs not foil, but shines by his own proper light.
Dryden.

*BRIILLIANTLY.* adv.* [from brilliant.] Splendidly.

One of these [banners] is most brilliantly displayed.
Warton's Hist. Eng. Poetry. ii. 56.

B R I

BRI'LLIANTNESS. n. s. [from brilliant.] Splendour; lustre.

BRILLS. n. s. The hair on the eyelids of a horse.

Dict.

BRIM.† n. s. [brim, Icelandic, brum, Sax.]

1. The edge of any thing.

His hat being in the form of a turban, daintily made, the locks of his hair came down about the brims of it. Bacon.

This cited place lies upon the very brim of another corruption. Milton, of Prelat. Episcopacy.

2. The upper edge of any vessel.

How my head in ointment swims!

How my cup o'erlooks her brims! Cragshaw.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,

The bubbling waters from the bottom rise,

Above the brims they force their fiery way. Dryden, Æn.

Thus in a basin drop a shilling,

Then fill the vessel to the brim,

You shall observe, as you are filling,

The pond'rous metal seems to swim. Swift.

3. The top of any liquor.

The feet of the priests, that bare the ark, were dipped in the brim of the water. Joshua, iii. 15.

4. The bank of a fountain, river, or the sea: the shore.

As the bright sunne, what time his fiery teme

Towards the western brim begins to draw,

'Gins to abate the brightness of his beme.

Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 35.

It [the fountain] told me it was Cynthia's own,

Within whose cheerful brims

That curious nymph had oft been known

To bathe her snowy limbs. Drayton, Quest. of Cynthia.

By dimpled brook and fountain-brim,

The wood-nymphs deck'd with daisies trim,

Their merry wakes and pastimes keep. Milton, Com. ver. 119.

The sun ———

With wheels yet hovering o'er the ocean-brim,

Shot parallel to the earth his dewy ray. Milton, P. L. v. 140.

BRIM.* adj. [Sax. brýme, conspicuous. The adjective breme, i. e. fiery, is often written by our old authors brim or bryme. See BREME.] Publick; well-known. Obsolete.

That thou dost hold me in disdain,

Is brim abroad, and made a gibe to all that keep this plain.

Waver, Albion's England.

To BRIM. v. a. [from the noun] To fill to the top.

May thy brimmed waves, for this,

Their full tribute never miss,

From a thousand petty rills. Milton, Com. ver. 924.

This said, a double wreath Evander twin'd;

And poplars black and white his temples bind:•

Then brims his ample bowl; with like design

The rest invoke the gods, with sprinkled wine. Dryden.

To BRIM. v. n. To be full to the brim.

Now horrid frays

Commence, the brimming glasses now are hurl'd

With dire intent. Philips.

To BRIMFILL.* v. a. [from brim and fill.] To fill to the top.

By all thy brim-fill'd bowls of fierce desire.

Crashaw's Poems, p. 197.

BRIMFUL. adj. [from brim and full.] Full to the top; overcharged.

Measure my case, how by thy beauty's filling,

With seed of woes my heart brimful is charged. Sydney.

We have try'd the utmost of our friends;

Our legions are brimful, our cause is ripe. *Shakspeare, J. Cas.**

Her brimful eyes, that ready stood,

And only wanted will to weep a flood,

Releas'd their watery store. Dryden, Fables.

The good old king at parting wrung my hand,

His eyes brimful of tears, then sighing cry'd,

Prithee, be careful of my son. Addison, Cato.

B R I

BRIMFULNESS. n. s. [from brimful.] Fulness to the top.

The Scot, on his unfurnish'd kingdom,

Came pouring like a tide into a beach,

With ample and brimfulness of his force. Shakspeare, Hen V.

BRIMLESS.* adj. [from brim and less.] Without an edge or brim.

They [the Jews] wear little black brimless caps, as the Moors red. L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 10.

BRIMMER. n. s. [from brim.] A bowl full to the top.

When healths go round, and kindly brimmers flow,

Till the fresh garlands on their foreheads glow.

Dryden, Lucret. b. iii.

BRIMMING. adj. [from brim.] Full to the brim.

And twice besides her bestings never fail,

To store the dairy with a brimming pail. Dryden.

BRIMSTONE. n. s. [corrupted from brin or brinstone, that is, fiery stone.] Sulphur. See SULPHUR.

From his infernal furnace, forth he threw

Huge flames that dimm'd all the heavens' light,

Enroll'd in duskish smoke and brimstone blue. Spenser, F. Q.

The vapour of the grotto del Cane is generally supposed to be sulphureous, though I can see no reason for such a supposition: I put a whole bundle of lighted brimstone matches to the smoke, they all went out in an instant. Addison on Italy.

BRIMSTONY.† adj. [from brimstone.] Full of brimstone; containing sulphur; sulphureous.

The Ismaelite

King of Thogarma, and his habergions

Brimstony, blue, and fiery.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

BRINDED.† adj. [brin, Fr. a branch, according to Dr. Johnson, who defines the word streaked, or tabby.

The Fr. brin, is indeed a little sprig, and generally any small substance. But it is hardly the etymology of brinded, which is only another form of brended, from the Sax. brēnman, to burn; and means a reddish broken colour, which, in the north of England, is often applied to cattle; as, a branded cow. See BROWN.] Of a brown colour, originally; thence,

Of a varied colour; streaked.

Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd. Shakspeare, Macb.

She tam'd the brinded lioness,

And spotted mountain pard. Milton, Comus.

My brinded heifer to the stake I lay,

Two thriving calves she suckles twice a-day. Dryden.

BRINDLE. n. s. [from brinded.] The state of being brinded.

A natural brindle.

Clarissa.

BRINDLED. adj. [from brindle.] Brinded; streaked.

The boar, my sisters! aim the fatal dart,

And strike the brindled monster to the heart. Addison, Ovid.

BRINE.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. But the word is the Sax. brýne, salt liquor, perhaps from brým, the sea, which is the old Goth. brim.]

1. Water impregnated with salt.

The encreasing of the weight of water, will encrease its power of bearing; as we see brine, when it is salt enough, will bear an egg. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Dissolve sheeps dung in water, and add to it as much salt as will make a strong brine, in this liquor steep your corn. Mortimer.

2. The sea, as it is salt.

All, but mariners,

Plung'd in the foaming brine, did quit the vessel,

Then all afire with me. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The air was calm, and, on the level brine,

Sleek Panope, with all her sisters, play'd. Milton, Lucidas.

As when two adverse winds

Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine

Roars stormy. Philips.

3. Tears, as they are salt.

B R I

What a deal of brine

Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline! Shakespeare.
To BRINE.* v. a. In husbandry, to brine corn is an operation performed on the wheat seed, by a liquor prepared for the purpose, to prevent the smut. Chambers.

BRINEPIT. n. s. [from brine and pit.] Pit of salt water.

Then I lov'd thee,
 And shew'd thee all the qualities o' th' isle,
 The fresh springs, brinepits, barren place, and fertile.
Shakespeare, Tempest.

To BRING.† v. a. [Goth. briggau, brunzan, Sax. preter. I brought; part. pass. brought; brahta, Goth. broht, Sax.]

1. To fetch from another place; distinguished from to carry, or convey, to another place.

I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
 And I'll be chief to bring him down again. Shakespeare.
 And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said,
Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thy hand.

Kings, xvii. 11.

A registry of lands may furnish easy securities of money, that shall be brought over by strangers. Temple.

2. To convey, or carry to another place; the preceding distinction not being always observed, which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. This sense, however, is rarely used.

Thou shalt go unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac. And the servant said unto him, Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I needs bring thy son again unto the land from whence thou earnest? Genesis, xxiv. 4, 5.

"Must I needs bring thy son again, &c." His doubt was, whether, if a woman would not come with him into Canaan, he should be bound to go again, a second time, and carry Isaac to her. Bp. Patrick on Genesis.

The steward demanded, whether, if he could not persuade the person, whom Isaac was to marry, to come and dwell with Isaac in Canaan, he might carry him to her, into that country which Abraham had forsaken. Pyle on Genesis.

3. To convey in one's own hand; not to send by another.

And if my wish'd alliance please your king,
 Tell him he should not send the peace, but bring. Dryden.

4. To produce; to procure, as a cause.

There is nothing will bring you more honour, and more ease, than to do what right in justice you may. Bacon.

5. To reduce; to recal.

Bring back gently their wandering minds, by going before them in the train they should pursue, without any rebuke. Locke.

Nathan's fable had so good an effect, as to bring the man after God's own heart to a right sense of his guilt. Spectator, No. 83.

6. To attract; to draw along.

In distillation, the water ascends difficultly, and brings over with it some part of the oil of vitriol. Newton, Opticks.

7. To put into any particular state or circumstances, to make liable to any thing.

Having got the way of reasoning, which that study necessarily brings the mind to, they might be able to transfer it to other parts of knowledge, as they shall have occasion. Locke.

The question for bringing the king to justice was immediately put, and carried without any opposition, that I can find. Swift, Presbyterian Plea.

8. To lead by degrees.

A due consideration of the vanities of the world, will naturally bring us to the contempt of it; and the contempt of the world will as certainly bring us home to ourselves. L'Estrange.

The understanding should be brought to the difficult and shabby parts of knowledge, by insensible degrees. Locke.

9. To recal; to summons.

B R I

But those, and more than I to mind can bring,
 Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

10. To induce; to prevail upon.

The nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, how, or whensoever, he is brought to reflect on them. Locke.

It seems so preposterous a thing to men, to make themselves unhappy in order to happiness, that they do not easily bring themselves to it. Locke.

Profitable employments would be no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men could but be brought to delight in them. Locke.

11. To attend; to accompany.

Yet, give leave, my lord,
 That we may bring you something on the way. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

Honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines. Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

12. To bring about. [See ABOUT.] To bring to pass; to effect.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,
 If all of you would join to help him out. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

This turn of mind threw off the oppositions of envy and competition; it enabled him to gain the most vain and impracticable into his designs, and to bring about several great events, for the advantage of the publick. Addison, Frecholder.

13. To bring forth. To give birth to; to produce.

The good queen,
 For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter:
 Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing. Shakespeare.

More wonderful
 Than that which, by creation, first brought forth
 Light out of darkness! Milton, P. L.

Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works
 It hath brought forth, to make thee memorable
 Among illustrious women, faithful wives. Milton, S. A.

Bellona leads thee to thy lover's hand,
 Another queen brings forth another brand,
 To burn with foreign fires her native land! Dryden, Æneid.

Idleness and luxury bring forth poverty and want; and this tempts men to injustice; and that causeth enmity and animosity. Tillotson.

The value of land is raised, when it is fitted to bring forth a greater quantity of any valuable product. Locke.

14. To bring forth. To bring to light.

The thing that is hid, bringeth he forth to light. Job, xxxviii. 11.

15. To bring in. To place in any condition.

He protests he loves you,
 And needs no other sutor, but his liking,
 To bring you in again. Shakespeare, Othello.

16. To bring in. To reduce.

Send over into that realm such a strong power of men, as should perforce bring in all that rebellious rout, and loose people. Spenser on Ireland.

17. To bring in. To afford gain.

The sole measure of all his courtesies is, what return they will make him, and what revenue they will bring him in. South.

Trade brought us in plenty and riches. Locke.

18. To bring in. To introduce.

Entertain no long discourse with any; but, if you can, bring in something to season it with religion. Taylor.

There is but one God, who made heaven and earth, and winds; but the folly and madness of mankind brought in the images of gods. Stillington.

The fruitfulness of Italy, and the like, are not brought in by force, but naturally rise out of the argument. Addison.

Since he could not have a seat among them himself, he would bring in one who had more merit. Tatler.

Quotations are best brought in, to confirm some opinion controverted. Swift.

19. To bring off. To clear; to procure to be acquitted; to cause to escape.

I trusted to my head, that has betrayed me; and I found fault with my legs, that would otherwise have brought me off. L'Estrange.

Set a kite upon the bench, and if it is forty to one he'll bring off a crow at the bar. L'Estrange.

The best way to avoid this imputation, and to bring off the credit of our understanding, is to be truly religious. Tillotson.

20. To bring on. To engage in action.

If there be any that would reign, and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on. Bacon.

21. To bring on. To produce as an occasional cause.

The fountains of the great deep being broke open, so as a general destruction and devastation was brought upon the earth, and all things in it. Burnet, Theory.

Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour

Friendliest to sleep and silence. Milton, P. L. v. 607.

The great question, which, in all ages, has disturbed mankind, and brought on them those mischiefs. Locke.

22. To bring over. To convert; to draw to a new party.

This liberty should be made use of upon few occasions, of small importance, and only with a view of bringing over his own side, another time, to something of greater and more publick moment. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of Engl. man.

The protestant clergy will find it, perhaps, no difficult matter to bring great numbers over to the church. Swift.

23. To bring out. To exhibit; to shew.

If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearers prove sheep, let me be unrolled. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

Which he could bring out, where he had,

And what he bought them for, and paid. Hudibras.

These shake his soul, and, as they boldly press,

Bring out his crimes, and force him to confess. Dryden.

Another way made use of, to find the weight of the denarii, was by the weight of Greek coins; but those experiments bring out the denarius heavier. Arbuthnot.

To bring to. In naval language, to check the course of a ship, when she is advancing, by arranging the sails in such a manner, as that they shall counteract each other, and prevent her either from retreating or moving forward. In this situation, the ship is said to lie-by, or to lie-to. Chambers.

24. To bring to pass. To effect.

The thing is established by God, and God will bring it to pass. Genesis, xli. 32.

[She] in time's long and dark prospective glass,

Foresaw what future days should bring to pass.

Milton, Vac. Exerc. v. 72.

25. To bring under. To subdue; to repress.

That sharp course which you have set down, for the bringing under of those rebels of Ulster, and preparing a way for their perpetual reformation. Spenser on Ireland.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon, Holy War.

26. To bring up. To educate; to instruct; to form.

The well bringing up of the people, serves as a most sure bond to hold them. Sidney, b. i.

He that takes upon him the charge of bringing up young men, especially young gentlemen, should have something more in him than Latin. Locke.

They frequently conversed with this lovely virgin, who had been brought up by her father in knowledge. Addison, Guardian.

27. To bring up. To introduce to general practice.

Several obliging deferences, condescensions, and submissions, with many outward forms and ceremonies, were first of all brought up among the politer part of mankind, who lived in courts and cities. Spectator, No. 119.

28. To bring up. To cause to advance.

Bring up your army; but, I think, you'll find,

They've not prepar'd for us. Shakespeare, Coriol.

29. To bring up. To bring back.

I will go down with thee into Egypt, and will also bring thee up again. Genesis, xlv. 4.

30. To bring up. To introduce; to occasion.

VOL. I.

And the men which Moses sent to search the land, who returned, and made all the congregation to murmur against him by bringing up a slander upon the land; even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the Lord. Numbers, xiv. 36, 37.

31. Bring retains in all its senses the idea of an agent, or cause producing a real or metaphorical motion of something towards something; for it is oft said; that he brought his companion out. The meaning is, that he was brought to something that was likewise without.

BRINGER.† n. s. [from bring.] The person that brings any thing.

Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news

Hath but a losing office: and his tongue

Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,

Remember'd tolling a dead friend. Shakespeare.

Best you see safe the bringer

Out of the host: I must attend mine office. Shakespeare.

The good king adores the books; feasts the bringers, who after fall to the business, and translated it out of the Hebrew into the Greek.

Donne, Hist. of the Sept. Epistle to the Reader.

BRINGER IN.* n. s. The person who introduces any thing.

Lucifer is a bringer in of light; and therefore the harbinger of the day. Sandys, Christ's Passion, Notes, p. 79.

BRINISH.† adj. [from brine.] Having the taste of brine; salt.

Nero would be tainted with remorse

To hear and see her complaints, her brinish tears. Shakespeare.

For now I stand, as one upon a rock,

Environ'd with a wilderness of sea,

Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave;

Expecting ever when some envious surge

Will, in his brinish bowels, swallow him.

Shakespeare, Titus Andron.

Which saltness, [of the sea,] Aristotle says, is caused by the sun's exhaling the thinner and fresher parts thereof, leaving behind what is thick and brinish.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 188.

BRINISHNESS. n. s. [from brinish.] Saltness; tendency to saltness.

BRINK. n. s. [brink, Danish.] The edge of any place, as of a precipice or a river.

Th' amazed flames stand gather'd in a heap,

And from the precipice's brink retire,

Afraid to venture on so large a leap.

We stand therefore on the brinks and confines of those states at the day of doom. Dryden.

So have I seen, from Severn's brink,

A flock of geese jump down together;

Swim where the bird of Jove would sink.

And, swimming, never wet a feather. Swift.

BRINY. adj. [from brine.] Salt.

He, who first the passage try'd,

In harden'd oak his heart did hide;

Or his, at least, in hollow wood,

Who tempted first the briny flood. Dryden.

Then, bring seas, and tasteful spring, farewell,
Where fountain nymphs, confus'd with Nereids, dwell.

Addison on Italy.

A muriatick or bring taste seems to be produced by a mixture of an acid and alkaline salt; for spirit of salt, and salt of tartar, mixed, produce a salt like sea salt.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

BRI'ONY. See BRYONY.

BRITISH.* adj. [Sax. brýttir.]

1. What relates to THE LAND WE LIVE IN, "our not-fearing Britain," as Shakspeare describes this country.

Imploing Divine assistance, that it may redound to his glory, and the good of the British nation, I now begin.

Milton, Hist. of England, B. i.

The British cannon formidably roars;

While, starting from his oozy bed,

The asserted ocean rears his reverend head;

To view and recognize his ancient lord again;

And, with a willing hand, restores

The fates of the main.

Dryden, Threnod. Augustalis.

2. Applied to language, it means the Welsh.

What I here offer to the publick, is an explication of the antient British tongue, once the common language of Britain, and still preserved in the principality of Wales.

On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd;
These morsels stay'd their stomachs. Dryden.

2. An opener, or utterer of any thing; the first author.

There is much pride and vanity in the affectation of being the first broacher of an heretical opinion. L' Estrange.

Numerous parties denominate themselves, not from the grand Author and Finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions. Decay of Piety.

This opinion is commonly, but falsely, ascribed to Aristotle, not as its first broacher, but as its ablest patron. Cheyne.

BROAD.† adj. [Celt. brayd, vast; Goth. braid; Sax. brad; Su. bred, broad.]

1. Wide; extended in breadth; distinguished from length; not narrow.

The weeds that his broad spreading leaves did shelter
Are pull'd up root and all. Shakspeare.

The top may be justly said to grow broad, as the bottom narrower. Temple.

Of all your knowledge this vain fruit you have,
To walk with eyes broad open to your grave. Dryden.

So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow,
With vigour drawn, must send the shaft below,
The bottom was full twenty fathoms broad. Dryden.

He launch'd the fiery bolt from pole to pole,
Broad burst the lightnings, deep the thunders roll. Pope.

2. Large.

To keep him at a distance from falsehood and cunning, which has always a broad mixture of falsehood; this is the fittest preparation of a child for wisdom. Locke.

3. Clear; open; not sheltered, not affording concealment.

In mean time he, with cunning to conceal
All thought of this from others, himself bore
In broad house, with the wooers us before. Chapman, Odyssey.

It no longer seeks the shelter of night and darkness, but appears in the broadest light. Decay of Piety.

If children were left alone in the dark, they would be no more afraid than in broad sunshine. Locke.

4. Gross; coarse.

The reeve and the miller are distinguished from each other, as much as the lady prioress and the broad speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

Love made him doubt his broad barbarian sound;
By love, his want of words and wit he found. Dryden.

If open vice be what you drive at,
A name so broad will ne'er connive at. Dryden.

The broadest mirth unfeeling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than virtue's very tears. Pope.

Room for my lord! three jockeys in his train;
Six huntsmen with a shout precede his chair;
He grins, and looks broad nonsense with a stare. Pope.

5. Obscene; fulsome; tending to obscenity.

As chaste and modest as he is esteemed, it cannot be denied but in some places he is broad and fulsome. Dryden, Juv. Ded.

Though now arraign'd, he read with some delight;
Because he seems to chew the cud again,
When his broad comment makes the text too plain. Dryden.

6. Bold; not delicate; not reserved.

Who can speak *broad*er than he that has no house to put his head in? Such may rail against great buildings. Shakspeare.

From broad words, and 'cause he fail'd
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,
Macduff lives in disgrace. Shakspeare.

BROAD as long. Equal upon the whole.

The mobile are still for levelling; that is to say, for advancing themselves: for it is as broad as long, whether they rise to others, or bring others down to them. L'Estrange.

BRO'ADAXE.* n. s. [Sax. bryad-axe.] Formerly a military weapon.

Should you the rich brocaded suit unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold. Gay.

BRO'CAGE. † n. s. [from broke. Written frequently brokag.]

1. The gain gotten by promoting base bargains.

Yet sure his honesty
Got him small gains, but shameless flattery,
And filthy brocage, and unseemly shifts,
And borrow base, and some good ladies gifts.

Spenser, M. Hubb. Tale.

It served well Pandar's purpose for the bolstering of his bawdy brocage. Epist. prefix. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

2. The hire given for any unlawful office.

As for the politick and wholesome laws, they were interpreted to be but brocage of an usurer, thereby to woo and win the hearts of the people. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Many in this city grow exceeding wealthy by unlawful means; usury, brokage, bribery.

Dr. J. White's Sermons, (1615,) p. 59.

When 'tis said that merchandize is the Jews' general profession in Barbary, it is not to exclude their darling brokage and usury, in which they are very serviceable both to Christians and Moors. L. Addison's State of the Jews, p. 10.

3. The trade of dealing in old things; the trade of a broker.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are e'en the frippery of wit,
From brocage is become so bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it. B. Jonson.

Unless we do so, our charity is mercenary, and our friendships are direct merchandize, and our gifts are brokage.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. 8.

4. The transaction of business for other men.

So much as the quantity of money is lessened, so much must the share of every one that has a right to this money be the less, whether he be landholder, for his goods, or labourer, for his hire, or merchant, for his brocage. Locke.

BRO'CCOLI. n. s. [Italian.] A species of cabbage.

Content with little, I can pickle here,
On broccoli and mutton round the year;
But ancient friends, though poor or out of play,
That touch my bell, I cannot turn away. Pope.

To BROCH. v. a. See To BROACH.

So Geoffry of Bouloigne, at one draught of his bow, shooting against David's tower in Jerusalem, broched three feeble birds. Camden's Remains.

BROCK. † n. s. [broc, Saxon: broc, Irish; broch, Welsh and Cornish.] A badger.

That a brock or badger hath the legs on one side shorter than of the other, though an opinion perhaps not very ancient, is yet very general. Brown, Vulg. Err.
Or with pretence of chasing thence the brock,
Add in a cur to worry the whole flock.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

BRO'CKET. † n. s. A red deer, two years old.

What with us is termed a brocket, or a pricket, the whole space of the second year of his age.

Knatchbull's Annot. Tr. p. 9.

To BRO'GGLE.* v. n. To fish for eels. This is, in some places, the word for sniggle, better known to anglers in general. See To SNIGGLE.

BROGUE. † n. s. [brog, Irish, and brog, Gael. a shoe.]

1. A kind of a shoe.

I thought he slept; and put
My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose rudeness
Answer'd my steps too loud. Shakespeare.

Sometimes it is given out, that we must either take these halfpence, or eat our brogues. Swift.

2. A cant word for a corrupt dialect, or manner of pronunciation.

His brogue will detect mine.

Farquhar.

What we call the Irish brogue, is no sooner discovered, than it makes the deliverer, in the last degree, ridiculous and despised; and from such a mouth, an Englishman expects nothing but bulls, blunders, and follies!

Swift, on Barb. Denom. in Ireland.

BROGUE-MAKER.* n. s. [from brogue and make.] A maker of brogues; a shoemaker.

I supposed that the husband made brogues as the wife made an apron, till next day it was told me, that a brogue-maker was a trade, and that a pair would cost half a crown.

Johnson, Journ. Western Islands.

BRO'DEKIN.* n. s. [Fr. brodequin, Dutch, broseken.]

A buskin, or half-boot.

It [K. Charles the Second's apparel] was strait Spanish breeches; instead of a doublet, a long vest down to the mid-leg; and above that a loose coat, after the Moscovite or Polish way; the sword girt over the vest; and, instead of shoes and stockings, a pair of buskins or brodekens.

Echard, Hist. of Eng. ii. 836.

To BROID.* v. a. [The old word for braid or bread, i. e. to plait; which Barret gives in his old dictionary, and which is found in our early translations of the New Testament; and had long before been used by Chaucer. Our last authorized translation of the New Testament gives broidered, not accurately, for broided; but in the margin, plaited.]
To braid or weave together.

Her yellow hair was broided in a tresse. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

Likewise also the women, that they array themselves in comely apparel, with shamedness and modesty, not with broided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly apparel.

1 Tim. ii. 9. (Transl. of 1578.)

To BRO'IDER. † v. a. [brodir, Fr.] To adorn with figures of needle work.

A robe, and a broider'd coat, and a girdle.

Exodus, xxviii. 4.

Infant Albion lay

In mantles broider'd o'er with gorgeous pride. Tickell.

BRO'IDERER.* n. s. [from broider; sometimes written broderer; as broder is for broider. V. Barret and Sherwood. So the Fr. bordeur for brodeur. V. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. and Gr.] An embroiderer.

Hudoe.

BRO'IDERY. n. s. [from broider.] Embroidery; flower-work; additional ornaments wrought upon cloth.

Lie rent and mangled.

Tickell.

BROIL. n. s. [brouiller, Fr.] A tumult; a quarrel.

Say to the king thy knowledge of the broil,
As thou dost leave it. Shakespeare.
He has sent the sword both of civil broils, and publick war, amongst us. Wake.

Rude were their revels, and obscene their joys,
The broils of drunkards, and the lust of boys. Granville.

To BROIL. † v. a. [bruler, Fr.] To dress or cook by laying on the coals, or before the fire.

They gave him a piece of a broiled fish. Luke, xxiv. 42.
Some strip the skin, some portion out the spoil,
Some on the fire the seeking entrails broil. Dryden.

To BROIL. v. n. To be in the heat.

Where have you been broiling ?—

— Among the croud i' th' abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedged in more.

Shakespeare.

Long ere now all the planets and comets had been broiling in the sun, had the world lasted from all eternity.

Cheyne.

BRO'ILER.* n. s.

2. That which dresses by cookery; "a broiler, grill, Fr."

Sherwood.

TO BROKE.† v. n. [of uncertain etymology, Dr.

Johnson says. Skinner seems inclined to derive it from To break, because broken men turn factors or brokers. Casaubon from apartiv. Skinner thinks, again, that it may be contracted from procurer.

Mr. Lye more probably deduces it from brycan,
Sax. to be busy; to discharge an office; whence bryac, St. Luke, i. 8.] To transact business for others, or by others. It is used, generally, in reproach, Dr. Johnson says; he should have said, occasionally.

He does, indeed;

And brokes with all that can, in such a suit,
Corrupt the tender honour of a maid.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

The gains of bargains are of a more doubtful nature, when men should wait upon others necessity; broke by servants and instruments to draw them on.

Bacon.

Mr. Egerton and he [Dr. Field] being acquainted, and Mr.
Egerton's mind being troubled with the ill success of this business, ventured it to this divine, who, contrary to his profession, took upon him to broke for him in such a manner, as was never precedented by any. He made Egerton to acknowledge a recognition of 1000*l.* with a defeasance, &c.

Proceedings in the H. of Com. against Ld. Bacon, p. 6.

BRO'KING. part. adj. Practised by brokers.

Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt.

Shakespeare.

BRO'KEN.† part. pass. of break. [Sax. brocen.]

Preserve men's wits from being broken with the very bent of so long attention.

Hooker.

BRO'KEN-BELLIED.* adj. [from broken and belly.]

Having a ruptured belly. Used also figuratively.

Such is our broken-bellied age, that this astutia is turned into vernutia; and we term those most astute which are most versute.

Sir M. Sandys, Essays, p. 168.

BRO'KEN MEAT. Fragments; meat that has been cut.

Get three or four chair-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay at small charges; only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders.

Swift.

BRO'KENHEARTED. adj. [from broken and heart.]

Having the spirits crushed by grief or fear.

He hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted.

Isaiah, lxi. 1.

BRO'KENLY.† adv. [from broken.] Without any regular series.

Sir Richard Hopkins hath done somewhat of this kind, but brokenly and glancingly; intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage.

Hakewill.

The mind of a man distracted amongst many things, must needs entertain them brokenly and imperfectly.

Hales, Rem. p. 219.

BRO'KENNESS. n. s. [from broken.] The state of being broken unevenness.

Those infirmities that are incident to them [the teeth] whether looseness, ho-wness, rottenness, brokenness.

Smith, Old Age, p. 85.

It is the brokenness the ungrammatical position, the total want of charms me.

Gray, Letter to Mason.

BRO'KENWINDED.* adj. [from broken and wind; formerly written broke-winded.] Having short breath.

And in the hospital were heard at once,
Brokenwinded murmurings, howlings, and sad groans.

May's Lucan, b. v.

BRO'KER.† n. s. [from To broke. Brokers in old Fr.
are termed broggours; and brokage, broggage. V.
Kelham's Norman Dict. Hence perhaps our low word, to prog.]

1. A factor; one that does business for another; one that makes bargains for another.

Brokers, who, having no stock of their own, set up and trade with that of other men; buying here, and selling there, and commonly abusing both sides, to make out a little pauntry gain.

Temple.

Some South-Sea broker from the city,

Will purchase me, the more's the pity;

Lay all my fine plantations waste,

To fit them to his vulgar taste.

Swift

2. One who deals in old household goods. A seller of old apparel, &c. "because he buyeth old and broken apparel, &c." Minsheu. Sherwood calls the broker of this kind, "a fripperer."

3. A pimp; a match-maker.

A goodly broker!

Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines;

To whisper and conspire against my youth?

Shakespeare.

In chusing for yourself, you shew'd your judgement;

Which being shallow, you shall give me leave

To play the broker in mine own behalf.

Shakespeare.

BRO'KERAGE. n. s. [from broker.] The pay or reward of a broker. See BROCAGE.

BRO'KENLY.* adj. [from broker.] Partaking of the character of a broker; mean; servile.

We had determin'd that thou shouldst ha' come,

In a Spanish suit, and ha' carried her so; and he,

A brokerly slave, goes, puts it on himself.

B. Jonson, Alchem.

BRO'KERY.* n. s. [from broker.] The business of a broker.

Let them that meane by bookish businesse

To earne their bread, or hope to professe

Their hard-got skill, let them alone for me,

Busie their brains with deeper brokerie.

Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 2.

More knavery, and usury,

And foolery and brokerie, than dog's-ditch.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

BRO'NCHOCELE. n. s. [βρογχόκηλη.] A tumour of that part of the aspera arteria, called the bronchus.

tion in a quinsy.

Quincy.

The operation of bronchotomy is an incision into the aspera arteria, to make way for the air into the lungs, when respiration is obstructed by any tumour compressing the larynx.

Sharp's Surgery.

BROND.† n. s. [Sax. bryond.] See BRAND. A sword.

Foolish old man, said then the pagan wroth,

That weenest words or charms may force withstond,

Soon shalt thou see, and then believe for troth,

That I can carve with this enchanted brond.

Spenser

BRONTO'LOGY. [n. s. ἐπὶ τῇ καὶ λογία.] A dissertation upon thunder.

Dict.

BRONZE.† n. s. [bronze, Fr. bronzo, Ital.]

1. Brass.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henley stands,

Tuning his voice, and balancing his hands.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. Relief, or statue, cast in brass and copper mixed.

I view with anger and disdain,
How little gives thee joy or pain;
A print, a bronze, a flower, a root.
A shell, a butterfly can do't.

Prior.

3. In chemistry, a factitious metal compounded of copper and tin, to which sometimes other metallick substances are added, particularly zinc. Chambers.

To BRONZE.* v. a. [old Fr. bronzer, to braze. Cotgrave.] To harden as brass.

Art, cursed art, wipes off the indebted blush
From nature's cheek, and bronzes every shame.

Young, Night Th. 5.BROOCH.† n. s. [broke, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says.

But it is the Fr. broche, a spit. See BROACH. The ornament called a brooch was, in elder times, a buckle to fasten girdles, mantles, and the like; with a little pin, or spit, by which it was fixed to the respective part of the dress; and sometimes a twisted pin, with a jewel at the top of it, worn upon the hat or cap.]

1. A jewel; an ornament of jewels.

With gold rings upon their fingers, with broches and aiglets of gold upon their caps, which glistened full of pearls and precious stones. Robinson's Tr. of Sir T. More's Utopia, ii. 6.

Ay, marry, our chains and our jewels.—

Your brooches, pearls, and owches.

Shakespeare.

Richly suited, but unseasonable; just like the brooch and the toothpick, which we wear not now.

Shakespeare.

I know him well; he is the brooch, indeed,

And gem of all the nation.

Shakespeare.

2. [With painters.] A painting all of one colour. Dict.

To BROOCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with jewels.

Not th' imperious shew

Of the full-fortun'd Cæsar, ever shall

Be brooch'd with me.

Shakespeare.

To BROOD.† v. n. [Sax. brood, from brædan; old
Fr. brode.]

1. To sit, as on eggs; to hatch them.

Thou from the first

Wast present, and, with mighty wings outspread,

Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,

And mad'st it pregnant.

Milton, P. L.

Here nature spreads her fruitful sweetness round,

Breathes on the air, and broods upon the ground.

Dryden.

2. To cover chickens under the wing.

Exalted hence, and drunk with secret joy,

Their young succession all their cares employ;

They breed, they brood, instruct, and educate,

And make provision for the future state.

Dryden.

Find out some uncouth cell,

Where brooding darkness spreads his jealous wings,

And the night raven sings.

Milton.

3. To remain long in anxiety, or solicitous thought.

Defraud their clients, and, to lucre sold.

Sit brooding on unprofitable gold.

Dryden.

As rejoicing misers

Brood o'er their precious stores of secret gold.

Smith, Phæd. and Hip.

4. To mature any thing by care.

It was the opinion of Clinias, as if there were ever amongst nations a brooding of a war, and that there is no sure league but impuissance to do hurt.

Bacon, War with Spain.

To BROOD.† v. a. To cherish by care.

Mark the boy well;

If we could take or kill him —

— See how he broods the boy.

Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca, iv. 2.

Of crouds afraid, yet anxious when alone,

You'll sit and brood your sorrows on a throne.

Dryden.

He nor heaps his brooded stores,

Nor on all profusely pours.

Gray, *Ode x.*BROOD.† n. s. [Sax. brood, old Fr. brode.]

1. Offspring; progeny; it is now hardly used of human beings, but in contempt.

The heavenly father keep his brood

From foul infection of so great a vice.

Fairfax.

With terrors and with clamours compass'd round,

Of mine own brood, that on my bowels feed.

Milton, P. L.

Or any other of that heavenly brood,

Let down in cloudy throne, to do the world some good.

Milton, Ode.

Ælian discourses of storks, and their affection toward their brood whom they instruct to fly.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Thing bred; species generated.

Have you forgotten Libya's burning wastes,

Its barren rocks, parch'd earth, and hills of sand,

Its tainted air, and all its broods of poison?

Addison, Cato.

3. A hatch; the number hatched at once.

I was wonderfully pleased to see the different workings of instinct in a hen followed by a brood of ducks.

Spectator, No. 121.

4. Something brought forth; a production.

Such things become the hatch and brood of time.

Shakespeare.

5. The act of covering the eggs.

Something's in his soul,

O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;

And, I do doubt, the hatch and the disclose

Will be some danger.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.Bro'ODY.† adj. [Sax. brodige henne, a broody hen;

A term for a hen that sits on eggs, Holland's

Transl. of Pliny's Nat. Hist. p. 301. edit. 1601.]

In a state of sitting on the eggs; inclined to sit.

The common hen, all the while she is broody, sits, and leads her chickens, and uses a voice which we call clocking.

Ray.

Brook.† n. s. [broc broca, Sax. from the Goth.

brikan, to burst forth; to break out, i. e. where a river breaks into lesser streams, and the broken parts become brooks and rivulets. The old orthography, as Mr. Horne Tooke has also observed, was broke;

and an example which he brings from Fletcher's

Faithful Shepherdess, confirms the etymology and explanation given.] A running water, less than a river.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,

Until a king be by; and then his state

Empties itself, as doth an inland brook

Into the main of waters.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Underneath the ground,

In a long hollow, the clear spring is bound;

Till on yon side, where the morn's sun doth look,

The struggling water breaks out in a brook.

Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

Or many grateful altars I would rear,

Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone,

Of lustre, from the brook; in memory,

Of monument to ages.

Milton, P. L.

And to Cephissus' brook their way pursue:

The stream was troubled, but the ford they knew.

Dryden.

Springs make little rivulets; those united, make brooks; and those coming together, make rivers, which empty themselves into the sea.

Locke.

To BROOK. v. a. [brocan, Sax.] To bear; to endure; to support.

Even they which brook it worst, that men should tell them of their duties, when they are told the same by a law, think very well and reasonably of it.

Hooker.

A thousand more mischances than this one,

Have learned me to brook this patiently.

Shakespeare.

How use doth breed a habit in a man!

This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,

I better brook than flourishing peopl'd towns.

Shakespeare.

Heav'n, the seat of bliss,

Brooks not the works of violence, and war.

Milton, P. L.

Most men can much rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools.

South.

Restraint thou wilt not brook; but think it hard,
Your prudence is not trusted as your guard.

Dryden.

TO BROOK. v. n. To endure; to be content.

He, in these wars, had flatly refused his aid; because he could not brook, that the worthy prince Plangus was by his chosen Tiridates, preferred before him.

Sidney.

Leinster's brooky tract.

Dyer.

BROOM. n. s. [genista; brpom, Saxon.]

1. A small tree.

Even humble broom, and osiers, have their use,
And shade for sheep, and food for flocks, produce.

Dryden.

2. A besom; so called from the matter of which it is sometimes made.

Not a mouse

Shall disturb this hallow'd house;

I am sent with broom before,

To sweep the dust behind the door.

Shakespeare.

If they came into the best apartment, to set any thing in order, they were saluted with a broom.

Arbutnot.

TO BROOM, or BREAM.* v. a. [from the noun.] In naval language, to clean the ship; burning off the filth she has contracted on her sides, with straw, reeds, broom, or the like, when she is on a career, or on the ground. See Coles, Blount, and Chambers. See also TO CAREEN.

BRO'OMLAND. n. s. [broom and land.] Land that bears broom.

I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, by being put into broomlands.

Mortimer.

BRO'OMSTAFF. n. s. [from broom and staff.] The staff to which the broom is bound; the handle of a besom.

They fell on; I made good my place: at length they came to the broomstaff with me; I defied 'em still.

Shakespeare.

From the age,

That children tread this worldly stage,

Broomstaff, or poker, they bestride,

And round the parlour love to ride.

Prior.

Sir Roger pointed at something behind the door, which I found to be an old broomstaff.

Spectator, No. 117.

BRO'OMSTICK. n. s. The same as broomstaff.

When I beheld this, I sighed and said within myself, SURELY MORTAL MAN IS A BROOMSTICK!

The kennel edge, where wheels had worn the place.

Swift.

BROTH.* n. s. [broð, Sax. probably from brp, whence our northern word breau, spoon meat. See BREWIS.] Liqueur in which flesh is boiled.

You may make the broth for two days, and tak' the one half every day.

Bacon, Phys. Rem.

Instead of light deserts and luscious froth,

Our author treats to-night with Spartan broth.

Southerne.

If a nurse, after being suck'd dry, eats broth, the infant will suck the broth almost unaltered.

Arbutnot.

BROTHEL. } n. s. [borde, Fr.] A house of
BROTHELHOUSE. } lewd entertainment; a bawdy-house.

Perchance

I saw him enter ~~in~~ a house of sale,
Videlicet, a brothel.

Shakespeare.

Then courts of kings were held in high renown,

Ere made the common brothels of the town;

There, virgins honourable vows receiv'd,

But chaste as maids in monasteries liv'd.

Dryden, Fab.

From its old ruins brothelhouses rise,
Scenes of lewd loves, and of polluted joys.

Dryden, Mac. Fleet.

The libertine retires to the stews, and to the brothel.

Rogers.

BRO'THELLER.* n. s. [from brothel.] He who frequents a brothel-house. Gower uses brothel for such a person, Conf. Am. (15) fol. clvi. col. 2.

BRO'THELRY.* n. s. [from brothel.]

1. Whoredom.

Huloet.

Ye bastard poets, see your pedigree

From common trulls, and loathsome brothelry!

Bp. Hall, Satires, i. 2.

Shall Furia brook her sister's modesty,
And prostitute her soul to brothelry?

Marston's Scourge of Vill. i. 3.

2. Obscenity.

So bold prolepses, so racked metaphors, with brothelry, able to violate the ear of a pagan.

B. Jonson's Fox, Dedication.

BROTHER.* n. s. [Goth. brothr, from bru, Celt. the womb; Sax. broðer; Bret. breur. The Persian word also is broder.] Plural, brothers or brethren; Goth. brothrahans.

1. One born of the same father and mother.

Be sad, good brothers:

Sorrow so royally in you appears,

That I will deeply put the fashion on.

Shakespeare.

Whilst kin their kin, brother the brother foils,

Like ensigns all, against like ensigns bend.

Daniel.

These two are brethren, Adam, and to come

Out of thy loins.

Milton, P. I.

Comparing two men, in reference to one common parent, it is very easy to form the ideas of brothers.

Locke.

2. Any one closely united; associate; and hence the old phrase sworn brothers, i. e. persons who, in the days of adventure, swore to share in each other's fortune, and to divide what they gained.

Thou wotest well thou art my sworn brother.

Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale.

He hath every month a new sworn brother.

Shakespeare, Much Ado.

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;

For he, to-day that sheds his blood with me,

Shall be my brother.

Shakespeare.

3. Any one resembling another in manner, form, or profession.

He also that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster.

Proverbs, xviii. 9.

4. Brother is used, in theological language, for man in general.

I will eat no meat while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

1 Cor. viii. 13.

1. The state or quality of being a brother.

This deep disgrace of brotherhood

Touches me deeper than you can imagine.

Shakespeare.

Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?

Shakespeare.

So it be a right to govern, whether you call it supreme brotherhood, or supreme brotherhood, will be all one, provided we know who has it.

Locke.

2. An association of men for any purpose; a fraternity.

There was a fraternity of men at arms, called the brotherhood of St. George, erected by parliament, consisting of the most noble and worthy persons.

Davies on Ireland.

3. A class of men of the same kind.*

He was sometimes so engaged among the wheels, that not above half the poet appeared; at other times, he became as conspicuous as any of the brotherhood. Addison, Guardian.

BRO'THERLESS.* adj. [from brother and less.] Without a brother.

The brotherless Heliades
Melt in such amber trees as these. Andrew Marvel.

BRO'THERLIKE.* adj. [Sax. broðerlice.] Becoming a brother.

Welcome, good Clarence; this is brotherlike.
Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. III.

Nor can any sever
His love, but brotherlike affects them ever.
Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 2.

BRO'THERLOVE.* n. s. [from brother and love.] Brotherly affection.

With a true heart,
And brother-love, I do it. Shakespeare, K. Hen. VIII.

BRO'THERLY.* adj. [Sax. broðerlice.] Natural; such as becomes or becoms a brother.

He was a priest, and looked for a priest's reward; which was our brotherly love, and the good of our souls and bodies. Bacon.

Though more our money than our cause,
Their brotherly assistance draws. Denham.

They would not go before the laws, but follow them; obeying their superiors, and embracing one another in brotherly piety and concord. Addison, Freeholder.

BRO'THERLY. adv. After the manner of a brother; with kindness and affection.

I speak but brotherly of him; but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep. Shakespeare.

BROUGHT. [participle passive of bring.]

The Turks forsook the walls, and could not be brought on again to the assault. Knolles.

The instances brought by our author are but slender proofs. Locke.

BROW.* n. s. [Sax. bræp, pl. bræpar, the brows.]

1. The arch of hair over the eye.

'Tis now the hour which all to rest allow,
And sleep sits heavy upon every brow. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

2. The forehead.

She could have run and waddled about;
For even the day before she broke her brow. Shakespeare.

So we some antique hero's strength,
Learn by his lance's weight and length;
As these vast beams express the beast,
Whose shady brows alive they drest. Waller.

3. The general air of the countenance.

Then call them to our presence, face to face,
And frowning brow to brow. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Though all things foul would bear the brows of grace,
Yet grace must look still so. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

4. The edge of any high place. [Gael. bre; Welsh, bre, a hill; and in our northern dialect, broo, the upper part of a hill. See BRAY.]

The earl, nothing dismayed, came forwards that day unto a little village, called Stoke, and there encamped that night, upon the brow or hanging of a hill. Bacon.

On the brow of the hill beyond that city, they were somewhat perplexed by espying the French embassador, with the king's coach, and others, attending him. Wotton.

Them with fire, and hostile arms,
Fearless assault; and, to the brow of heav'n Pursuing, drive them out from God and bliss. Milton, P. L.

TO BROW. v. a. [from the noun.] To bound; to limit; to be at the edge of.

Tending my flocks hard by i' th' hilly crofts,
That brow this bottom glade. Milton, Comus.

TO BRO'WBEAT.* v. a. [from brow and beat.] To depress with severe brows, and stern or lofty looks.

Young men, prentices, servants, the common sort, are so far from hiding themselves, or rising up, that I have often seen the magistrate faced, and almost brow-beaten, as he hath passed by. Dr. J. White, Sermons, (1615,) p. 54.

It is not for a magistrate to frown upon, and browbeat those who are hearty and exact in their ministry; and, with a grave nod, to call a resolved zeal, want of prudence. South.

Court Tariff endeavoured to browbeat the plaintiff, while he was speaking; but though he was not so impudent as the count, he was every whit as sturdy. Addison.

I will not be browbeaten by the supercilious looks of my adversaries. Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

BRO'WBEATING.* n. s. [from brow and beat.] The act of depressing by stern or lofty looks.

What man will voluntarily expose himself to the imperious browbeatings and scorns of great men? J. Strange.

BRO'WBOUND. adj. [from brow and bound.] Crowned; having the head encircled as with a diadem.

In that day's feats,
He prov'd the best man i' the field, and, for his meed,
Was brow-bound with the oak. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

BRO'WLESS.* adj. [from brow and less.] Without shame; frontless.

So browless was this heretick, [Manomet,] that he was not ashamed to tell the world, That all he preached was sent him immediately from heaven. L. Addison's Life of Mahomet, p. 84.

BRO'WSICK. adj. [from brow and sick.] Dejected; hanging the head.

But yet a gracious influence from you,
May alter nature in our browsick crew. Suckling.

BROWN.* adj. [Sax. brun, from brennan, to burn, the colour of a burnt object being brown. The Germ. braun is burnt. Bret. brun; Su. brun, from brenna, Serenius.] The name of a colour, compounded of black and any other colour.

Brown, in High Dutch, is called braun; in the Netherlands, bruyun; in French, couleur brune; in Italian, bruno. Peacham.

I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a little browner. Shakespeare.

From whence high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'ercharging shades and pendent woods. Pope.

Long untravell'd heaths;
With desolation brown, he wanders waste. Thomson.

BRO'WBILL.* n. s. [from brown and bill.] The ancient weapon of the English foot; why it is called brown, I have not discovered, but we now say broken musket from it, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably so called, as Mr. Malone observes, from the weapons being sanguined or rubbed over with blood, to preserve them from rust, which gave them a brown colour.

And browbills, levied in the city,
Made bills to pass the grand committee. Hudibras.

BRO'WNISH. adj. [from brown.] Somewhat brown. A brownish grey iron-stone, lying in thin strata, is poor, but runs freely. Woodward.

BRO'WNISM.* n. s. The heresy of those who adopted the opinions of Robert Brown. See BROWNIST.

That schism would be the sorest schism to you; that would be Brownism and Anabaptism indeed.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. B. i.

BRO'WNIST.* n. s. One of the sect of Robert Brown, a noted sectarist in the time of Queen Elizabeth, whose opinions were very licentious.

These sectaries are called Brownists from one master Robert Brown, a Northamptonshire man, who was schoolmaster of the free-school of St. Olave's in Southwark.—The Brownists confine the church of God to their conventicles, excluding all other Christians out of the pale of the church that are not of their sect. Pagitt's Heresiography, p. 51—53.

I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

The word Puritan seems to be quashed, and all that heretofore were counted such, are now Brownists.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. i. 6.

BROWNNESS. n. s. [from brown.] A brown colour.

She would confess the contention in her own mind, between that lovely, indeed most lovely, brownness of Musidorus's face, and this colour of mine. Sidney, B. ii.

BROWNSTUDY. n. s. [from brown and study.] Gloomy meditations; study in which we direct our thoughts to no certain point.

They live retired, and then they doze away their time in drowsiness and brownstudies; or, if brisk and active, they lay themselves out wholly in making common places. Norris.

BROWNWORT. n. s. [Sax. brunewyrt.] In botany, the fig-wort.

BROWNIE.* n. s. A spirit, till of late years supposed to haunt old houses in Scotland; and conjectured by Ruddiman to be so called from its pretended swarthy or tawny colour, in contradistinction to fairy from its fairness. The northern mythology exhibits, in the Edda, the swartalfar, i. e. swarthy or black elves, corresponding nearly, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, to the Brownie. Milton certainly adverted to this distinction, in mentioning the "swart fairy" in his Masque of Comus. This spirit is said to have been very friendly and serviceable to the family where he fixed his abode. In Iceland, almost every family had familiar spirits. See Burton's Anat. of Melancholy, p. 47. The Brownie seems to have belonged to that class, which Burton represents as frequenting forlorn houses, and for the most part innocuous.

BROWN.* adj. Brown.

His brown locks did hang in crooked curls.

Shakespeare, Lover's Complaint.

TO BROWSE. v. a. [brouser, Fr.] To eat branches, or shrubs.

And being down, is trod in the dirt
Of cattle, and browsed, and sorely hurt. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

Thy palate then did deign
The roughest berry on the rudest hedge;
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The barks of trees thou browsedst. Shakespeare.

TO BROWSE. v. n. To feed: it is used with the participle on.

They have scared away two of my best sheep; if any where I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, browsing on ivy. Shakespeare.

A goat, hard pressed, took sanctuary in a vineyard; so soon as he thought the danger over, he fell presently a browsing upon the leaves. L'Estrange.

Could eat the tender plant, and, by degrees,
Browse on the shrubs, and crop the budding trees. Blackmore.

The Greeks were the descendants of savages, ignorant of agriculture, and browsing on herbage, like cattle. Arbutnot.

BROWSE. n. s. [from the verb.] Branches, or shrubs, fit for the food of goats, or other animals.

The greedy lioness the wolf pursues,
The wolf the kid, the wanton kid the browse. Dryden.

On that cloud-piercing hill,
Plinlimmon, from afar the traveller kens,
Astonish'd, how the goats their shrubby browse
Gnaw peopled. Philips.

BROWSING.* n. s. [from browse.] Food which deer find in young coppices, continually sprouting anew.

The stables butt upon the park, which for a cheerful rising ground, for groves and browsings for the deer, for rivulets of water, may compare with any for its highness in the whole land. Howell, Lett. i. ii. 8.

TO BRUISE. v. a. [Sax. brýðan, to bruise; anciently written brise, and brese; Fr. briser, old Fr. bracer, broyeur, to pound, or bruise; from the Lat. brachium.] To crush or mangle with the heavy blow of something not edged or pointed; to crush by any weight; to beat into gross powder; to beat together coarsely.

It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. Gen. iii. 15.

Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
Bruis'd underneath the yoke of tyranny. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

And six far deeper in his head their stings,
Than temporal death shall bruise the victor's heel,
Or theirs whom he redeems. Milton, P. L.

As in old chaos heav'n with earth confus'd,
And stars with rocks together crush'd and bruis'd. Waller.

They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,
Till they turn livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryden.

BRUISE. n. s. [from the verb.] A hurt with something blunt and heavy.

There is no healing of thy bruise; thy wound is grievous. Nahum, iii. 19.

One arm'd with metal, th' other with wood,
This fit for bruise, and that for blood. Hudibras.

I since have labour'd

To bind the bruises of a civil war,
And stop the issues of their wasting blood. Dryden.

BRUISER.* n. s. [from bruise.]

1. In mechanics, a concave tool used for grinding and polishing the specula of telescopes. Chambers.

2. In vulgar language, a boxer.

BRUISEWORT. n. s. An herb; the same with COMFREY.

BRUIT. n. s. [old Goth. brut, report, from bridda, to declare; Fr. bruit, from the old Fr. bru.] Rumour; noise; report.

A bruit ran from one to the other, that the king was slain. Sidney.

Upon some bruits he apprehended a fear, which moved him to send to Sir William Herbert to remain his friend. Hayward.

I am not

One that rejoices in the common wreck,
As common bruit doth put it. Shakespeare.

TO BRUIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To report; to noise abroad; to rumour. Neither the verb nor the noun are now much in use.

His death,

Being bruited once, took fire and heat away
From the best temper'd courage in his troops. Shakespeare.

It was bruited, that I meant nothing less than to go to Guiana. Raleigh.

BRUMAL.* adj. [old Fr. brumal, from brumalis, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

About the brumal solstice, it hath been observed, even unto a proverb, that the sea is calm, and the winds do cease, till the young ones are excluded, and forsake their nests. Brown.

The brumal quarter, they fast from food.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 364.

BRUN, BRAN, BROWN, BOURN, BURN, are all derived from the Sax. boþn, bouþn, brunna, bupna; all signifying a river or brook. Gibson's Camden.

BRUNETT. n. s. [brunette, French.] A woman with a brown complexion.

Your fair women therefore thought of this fashion, to insult the olives and the brunettes. Addison, Guardian.

BRUNION. n. s. [brugnon, Fr.] A sort of fruit between a plum and a peach. Trevoux.

BRUNT.* n. s. [brunst, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says; which means heat. It may be, however, the participle of the Sax. brennan, to burn; brunt implying heat in the sense of violent action; as, "the brunt of war."]

1. Shock; violence.

Erona chose rather to bide the brunt of war, than venture him. Sidney.

God, who caus'd a fountain, at thy prayer,
From the dry ground to spring, thy thirst to allay
After the brunt of battle. Milton, S. A.

Faithful ministers are to stand and endure the brunt: a common soldier may fly, when it is the duty of him that holds the standard to die upon the place. South.

2. Blow; stroke.

A wicked ambush, which lay hidden long
In the close covert of her guileful eyen,
Thence breaking forth, did thick about me throng,
Too feeble I to abide the brunt so strong. Spenser, Sonn.

The friendly rug preserv'd the ground,
And headlong knight, from horse or wound,
Like featherbed betwixt a wall
And heavy brunt of cannon-ball. Hudibras.

3. A brief and sudden effort.

A brunt of holiness, and away! Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 153.

BRUSH.† n. s. [brosse, Fr. from bruscus, Lat.]

1. An instrument to clean any thing, by rubbing off the dirt or soil. It is generally made of bristles set in wood.

2. It is used for the larger and stronger pencils used by painters.

Whence comes all this rage of wit? this arming all the pencils and brushes of the town against me? Stillingfleet.

With a small brush you must smear the glue well upon the joint of each piece. Moxon.

3. A rude assault; a shock; rough treatment; which,
by the same metaphor, we call a scouring.

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,
And tempt not yet the brushes of the war. Shakespeare.

It could not be possible, that, upon so little a brush as Waller had sustained, he could not be able to follow and disturb the king. Clarendon.

Else when we put it to the push,
They had not giv'n us such a brush. Hudibras.

4. A thicket. See BRUSKET.

All suddenly out of the thickest brush,—
A goodly lady did foreby them rush. Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 15.

To BRUSH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sweep or rub with a brush.

If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs; he brushes his hat o' morning; what should that bode? Shakespeare.

2. To strike with quickness, as in brushing.

The wrathful beast about him turned light,
And him so rudely passing by, did brush
With his long tail, that horse and man to ground did rush. Spenser, F. Q.

Has Somnus brush'd thy eyelids with his rod? Dryden.

His son Cupavo brush'd the briny flood,
Upon his stern a brawny centaur stood. Dryden.

High o'er the billows flew the massy load,
And near the ship came thund'ring on the flood,
It almost brush'd the helm. Pope.

3. To paint with a brush.

You have commissioned me to paint your shop, and I have done my best to brush you up like your neighbours. Pope.

4. To carry away, by an act like that of brushing; to sweep.

And from the boughs brush off the evil dew,
And heal the harms of thwarting thunder blue. Milton, Arcades.

The receptacle of waters, into which the mouths of all rivers must empty themselves, ought to have so spacious a surface, that as much water may be continually brushed off by the winds, and exhaled by the sun, as, besides what falls again, is brought into it by all the rivers. Bentley.

5. To move as the brush.

A thousand nights have brush'd their balmy wings
Over these eyes. Dryden.

To BRUSH. v. n.

1. To move with haste: a ludicrous word, applied to men.

Nor wept his fate, nor cast a pitying eye,
Nor took him down, but brush'd regardless by. Dryden.

The French had gather'd all their force,
And William met them in their way;
Yet off they brush'd, both foot and horse. Prior.

2. To fly over; to skim lightly.

Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind,
Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And, brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool. Dryden, Fab.

BRUSHIER. n. s. [from brush.] He that uses a brush.

Sir Henry Wotton used to say, that critics were like brushers of noblemen's cloaths. Bacon, Apophthegms.

BRUSHET.* n. s. See BRUSKET.

BRUSHWOOD. n. s. [from brush and wood. I know not whether it may not be corrupted from brosc- wood.] Rough, low, close, shrubby thickets; small wood fit for fire.

It smokes, and then with trembling breath she blows;
Till in a cheerful blaze the flames arose.

With brushwood, and with chips, she strengthens these,
And adds at last the boughs of rotten trees. Dryden, Fab.

BRUSHY. adj. [from brush.] Rough or shaggy, like a brush.

I suspected, that it might have proceeded from some small unheeded drop of blood, wiped off by the brushy substance of the nerve, from the knife wherewith it was cut. Boyle.

BRUSK.* adj. [Fr. brusque, uncivil, harsh, Cotgrave.] Rude.

We are sorry to hear, that the Scottish gentleman, who has been lately sent to that king, found (as they say) but a brusk welcome. Sir H. Wotton's Letters, Rem. p. 582.

To BRUSTLE.† v. n. [braytan, Saxon, from braytl, a crackling or burning. In the north of England, "the sun brustles the hay," i. e. dries it, is yet a common phrase. And meat too much broiled is said to be brustled. The old Fr. brusler, to burn, (now written bruler,) may with the Saxon be traced to the Icelandick brys, a burning heat.] To crackle; to make a small noise. Skinner.

Right as a ship against the stream,
He routeth with a slepie noise;
And brustleth as a monk's froise,
When it is throwe into the panne. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.
Break 'em more, they are but brustled yet.

Beaum. and Fl. Wife for a Month.

BRUTAL. adj. [brutal, French; from brute.]

1. That which belongs to a brute; that which we have in common with brutes.

There is no opposing brutal force to the stratagems of human reason. L'Estrange.

2. Savage; cruel; inhuman.

The brutal bus'ness of the war
Is manag'd by thy dreadful servants care. Dryden.

BRUTALITY. n. s. [brutalité, Fr.] Savageness; chur-lishness, inhumanity.

Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality. Locke.

To BRUTALIZE. v. n. [brutaliser, Fr.] To grow brutal or savage.

Upon being carried to the Cape of Good Hope, he mixed, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his foreign acquaintance. Addison, Frecholder.

To BRUTALIZE.† v. a. To make brutal or savage.

Strange! that a creature rational, and cast
In human mould, should brutalize by choice
His nature. Cowper's Sofa, B. 1.

BRUTALLY. adv. [from brutal.] Churlishly; inhumanly; cruelly.

Mrs. Bull aimed a knife at John, though John threw a bottle at her head, very brutally indeed. Arbutnot.

BRUTE.† adj. [brutus, Latin.]

1. Senseless; unconscious.

But when at bar beneath we came to plead our case,
Our wits were in the wane, our pleading very brute.

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 277.

Nor yet are we so low and base as their atheism would depress us; not walking statues of clay, not the sons of brute earth, whose final inheritance is death and corruption. Bentley.

2. Savage; irrational; ferine.

Even brute animals make use of this artificial way of making divers motions, to have several significations to call, warn, chide, cherish, threaten. Holder.

In the promulgation of the Mosaic law, if so much as a brute beast touched the mountain, it was to be struck through with a dart. South.

3. Bestial; in common with beasts.

Then to subdue, and quell, through all the earth
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick power. Milton, P. R.

4. Rough; ferocious; uncivilized.

The brute philosopher, who ne'er has prov'd
The joy of loving, or of being lov'd. Pope.

BRUTE. n. s. [from the adjective.] An irrational creature; a creature without reason; a savage.

What may this mean? Language of man pronounce'd
By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd! Milton, P. L.

To those three present impulses, of sense, memory, and instinct, most, if not all, the sagacities of brutes may be reduced. Hall, Orig. of Mankind.

Brutes may be considered as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatic, or amphibious. I call those aerial which have wings, wherewith they can support themselves in the air; terrestrial are those, whose only place of rest is upon the earth; aquatic are those, whose constant abode is upon the water. Locke.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate,
All but the page prescrib'd, this present state;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope, Ess. on Man.

To BRUTE. v. a. [written ill for bruit.] To report.

This, once bruted through the army, filled them all with heaviness. Knolles.

BRUTELY.† adv. [from brute.] In a rough, uncivilized manner.

The vulgar expositor rushes brutely and impetuously against all the principles both of nature, piety, and moral goodness; and in the fury of his literal expounding overturns them all. Milton, Tetrachordon.

BRUTENESS. n. s. [from brute.] Brutality: a word not now used.

Thou dotard vile,
That with thy bruteness shend'st thy comely age.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 12.

To BRUTIFY.† v. a. [from brute.]

1. To make a man a brute.

O thou salacious woman! am I then brutified? Ay; feel it here; I sprout, I bud, I am ripe horn mad. Congreve, Old Bachelor.

2. To render the mind brutal.

Success in some petty sport and pastime can yield but a very thin and transitory satisfaction to a man not quite brutified, and void of sense. Barrow, Sermon iii. 50.

Drunkenness besots a nation, and brutifies even the bravest spirits. Pellham, Resolves, i. 84.

BRUTISH.† adj. [from brute.]

1. Bestial; resembling a beast.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek
Their wandering gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton, P. L.

2. Having the qualities of a brute; rough; savage; ferocious.

Brutes, and brutish men, are commonly more able to bear pain than others. Grew, Cosm. Sacra.

3. Gross; carnal.

For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself. Shakspeare, As you Like it.
After he has slept himself into some use of himself, by much ado he staggers to his table again, and there acts over the same brutish scene. South.

4. Ignorant; untaught; uncivilized.

They were not so brutish, that they could be ignorant to call upon the name of God. Hooker, v. § 35.

5. Unconscious; insignificant. [Lat. brutum fulmen.]

Thou great Director of the rolling stars,
Unless thou idly look'st on men's affairs,
And vainly we thy brutish thunder fear;
Why should thy land so dire a monster bear?

Judas, in Sandys's Christ's Passion, p. 29.

The philosophers will have two sorts of lightning; calling the one fatal, that is, pre-appointed and mortal; the other brutish, that is, accidental and flying at random.

Sandys's Christ's Passion, Notes, p. 100.

BRUTISHLY. adv. [from brutish.] In the manner of a brute, savagely; irrationally; grossly.

I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

For a man to found a confident practice upon a disputable principle, is brutishly to outrun his reason. South.

BRUTISHNESS.† n. s. [from brutish.] Brutality; savageness.

All other courage, besides that, is not true valour, but brutishness. Spratt.

Who would not presently discern the perfect brutishness of this kind of reasoning? Bp. Bull's Works, iii. 1162.

[The] message, through the negligence of the person employed, was not delivered till he that sent it was in the last agonies of death: the doctor was very much affected at it, passionately complaining of the brutishness of those that had so little sense of a soul in that sad state.

Fell's Life of Hammond, Sect. 2.

To BRUT, or BRUTTE.† v. n. [not from the Sax. bryttian, to enjoy, as Mr. Mason thinks in the additions to his Supplement; but from the Fr. brouter, to browse, to nibble; and that from the Gr. βρύττω, to eat. V. Hesychius. To brutte is a common expression still in Kent.] To browse.

What the goats so easily brutted upon.

Evelyn's Acetaria, after sect. 82.

BRUTTING.† n. s. [from the verb.] Browsing.

Of all the foresters, this [horn-beam] preserves itself best from the bruttings of the deer. Evelyn, i. vi. 2.

BRY'ONY.† n. s. [bryonia, Latin, βρυονία, vitis alba; vox Græco-barbara. V. Critopuli Emend. et Animadv. in Meursii Gloss. p. 24.] A plant.

The blue bindweed doth itself infold
With honeysuckle, and both these intwine Themselves with bryony and jessamine. B. Jonson, Masques.

BUB. n. s. [a cant word.] Strong malt liquor.

Or if it be his fate to meet
With folks who have more wealth than wit,
He loves cheap port, and double bub,
And settles in the humdrum club. Prior.

To BUB.† v. a. [An old English word for bubble. Mr. Horne Tooke, who considers ble as an unnecessary addition to our present word, would have been glad to meet with the following proof of the curtailed object of his approbation.] To throw out in bubbles. Obsolete.

Rude Acheron, a loathsome lake to tell,
That boils and bubs up swelth as black as hell.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Magistrates.

BU'BBLE.† n. s. [bobbel, Dutch; a corruption of the Latin bullæ.]

1. A small bladder of water; a film of water filled with wind.

B U B

Bubbles are in the form of a hemisphere; air within, and a little skin of water without: and it seemeth somewhat strange, that the air should rise so swiftly, while it is in the water, and, when it cometh to the top, should be stayed by so weak a cover as that of the bubble is. Bacon.

The colours of bubbles, with which children play, are various, and change their situation variously, without any respect to confine or shadow. Newton.

2. Any thing which wants solidity and firmness; any thing that is more specious than real.

The earl of Lincoln was induced to participate, not lightly upon the strength of the proceedings there, which was but a bubble, but upon letters from the lady Margaret.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Then a soldier,
Seeking the bubble reputation,
Even in the cannon's mouth. Shakespeare, As you Like it.

War, he sung, is toil and trouble,
Honour but an empty bubble,
Fighting still, and still destroying. Dryden.

3. A cheat; a false show.
The nation then too late will find
Directors promises but wind,
South-sea at best a mighty bubble. Swift.

4. The person cheated.
Cease, dearest mother, cease to chide;
Ganny's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;
Yet why this great excess of trouble? Prior.

He has been my bubble these twenty years, and, to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

To BU'BBLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise in bubbles.
Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stir'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall. Titus Andron.

Adder's fork, and blindworm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing:
For a charm of pow'rful trouble,
Like a hellbroth boil and bubble. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Still bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears. Dryden.
The same spring suffers at some times a very manifest remission of its heat: at others, as manifest an increase of it: yea, sometimes to that excess, as to make it boil and bubble with extreme heat. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. To run with a gentle noise.
For thee the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for thy return. Dryden.
Not bubbling fountains to the thirsty swain,
Not showers to larks, or sunshine to the bee,
Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.

To BU'BBLE. v. a. To cheat: a cant word.
He tells me, with great passion, that she has bubbled him out of his youth; and has drilled him on to five and fifty.

Addison, Spect. No. 89.

Charles Mather could not bubble a young bean better with a toy. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

BU'BBLER. n. s. [from bubble.] A cheat.
What words can suffice to express, how infinitely I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubblesters! Digby to Pope.

BU'BBLY.* adj. [from bubble; an adjective yet in use in the North of England; as, "the hairn has a bubbly nose." Grose.] Consisting of bubbles or froth.

They would no more live under the yoke of the sea, or have their heads washed with this bubbly spume.

Nashe's Lenten Stuffe, (1599,) p. 8.

BU'BBY.† n. s. [No etymology has been offered. It may have been adopted from the old Fr. bibbe or bube a push, or bump. Cotgrave. Buberon is a sucking-bottle.] A woman's breast.

Foh! say they, to see a handsome, brisk, genteel, young fellow, so much governed by a doating old woman; why don't you go and suck the bubbly? Arbuthnot, John Bull.

BU'BO. n. s. [Lat. from βουβων, the groin.] That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called bubors. Quincy.

B U C

I suppurated it after the manner of a bubo, opened it, and endeavoured detersion. Wiseman.

BUBONOELE. n. s. [Lat. from βουβων, the groin, and ελε, a rupture.] A particular kind of rupture, when the intestines break down into the groin. Quincy.

When the intestine, or omentum, falls through the rings of the abdominal muscles into the groin, it is called hernia inguinalis, or, if into the scrotum, scrotalis: these two, though the first only is properly so called, are known by the name of bubonoele. Sharp's Surgery.

BU'BUKLE. n. s. A red pimple.
His face is all bubukles, and whekks, and knobs, and flames of fire. Shakespeare.

BUCANI'ERS.† n. s. A cant word for the privateers, or pirates, of America, Dr. Johnson says. The men may have been so denominated from their manner of living; the first settlers in Hispaniola being said to be called buccaners from their custom of assembling themselves after a chase, in order to regale themselves with broiling the flesh of the cattle they had killed, and buccaning, that is, drying the rest: many of these afterwards turned pirates. Hist. of America, P. II. p. 18. Cotgrave gives the Fr. verb boucaner, which he renders "to imitate the goat, also to broyle or scorch on a wooden gridiron." This old verb boucaner, from bouc, certainly illustrates the character of these men.

Whether gold will not cause either industry or vice to flourish? And whether a country, where it flowed in without labour, must not be wretched and dissolute like an island inhabited by buccaners? Bp. Berkeley, Querist.

BUCCELLATION. n. s. [buccella, a mouthful, Lat.] In some chymical authors, signifies a dividing into large pieces. Harris.

BUCK.† n. s. [bauche, Germ. suds, or lye; Su. byke, from Goth. bucka, to beat. See BATLET. Ital. bucata, "lye to wash a buck with," Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598.]

1. The liquor in which clothes are washed.
Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck: I warrant you, buck, and of the season too it shall appear. Shakespeare.
2. The clothes washed in the liquor.

Of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home. Shakespeare.

BUCK.* n. s. A cant word for a bold, ostentatious, or forward person; a blood; whom Johnson calls a man of fire! From this word come the modern phrases buckish and buckism, applied both to the person and to the science which constitutes a man of such importance! Serenius has observed that the Gothick bucke, is a great man! Who is a greater, one may add, in his own estimation, than a buck?

Remember, lifeless drone,
I carry bucks and bloods alone!

T. Warton's Phaeton to the One-Horse Chair.

BUCK.† n. s. [buck, Welsh; bock, Dutch; bouc, Fr.; bucka, Sax.; becco, Ital. The Iceland. bekre is a ram.] The male of the fallow deer; the male of rabbits, and other animals.

Bucks, goats, and the like are said to be tripping or saliant, that is, going or leaping. Peachment.

To BUCK.† v. a. [Goth. bucka, Ital. bucare. See BUCK.] To wash clothes.

Here is a bucket; he may creep in here, and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking. Shakespeare.

To BUCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To copulate as bucks and does.

The chief time of setting traps, is in their ucking time.

BU'CKBASKET. n. s. The basket in which clothes are carried to the wash.

They conveyed me into a buckbasket; rammed me in with foul shirts, foul stockings, and greasy napkins. Shakspeare.

BU'CKBEAN. n. s. [bocksboonen, Dutch.] A plant; a sort of trefoil.

The bitter nauseous plants, as centaurry, buckbane, gentian, of which tea may be made, or wines by infusion. Floyer.

BU'CKET. † n. s. [baquet, French, Dr. Johnson says. But our original word is bouk, Sax. buc, a kind of vessel; low Lat. bauca; Gr. βουκη. Bouk is the present word, in Staffordshire and Cheshire, for a pail to hold water. Hence bouket, and bucket. Chaucer writes it boket.]

1. The vessel in which water is drawn out of a well.

Now is this golden crown like a deep well,

That owes two buckets, filling one another;

The emptier ever dancing in the air,

The other down unseen, and full of water. Shakspeare.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Bentley.

2. The vessels in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.

Now streets grow throng'd, and, busy as by day,

Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;

Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;

And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.

The porringers, that in a row

Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,

To a less noble substance chang'd,

Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

BUCKINGSTOOL.* n. s. [from buck and stool.] A low expression, of the same value as its modern synonyme, a washing block.

He lookt about, and saw under him (though afar off) his lord upon Rosinante, no bigger than a toad upon a bucking-stool.

Gayton's Notes on D. Quicote, B. 3. ch. 3.

BU'CKLE. n. s. [brecel, Welsh, and the same in the Armorick; boucle, French.]

1. A link of metal, with a tongue or catch made to fasten one thing to another.

Fair lined slippers for the cold,

With buckles of the purest gold. Shakspeare.

The chlamys was a sort of short cloak tied with a buckle, commonly to the right shoulder. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Three seal-rings; which after, melted down,

Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown, Pope.

2. The state of the hair crisped and curled, by being kept long in the same state.

The greatest beau was dressed in a flaxen periwig: the wearer of it goes in his own hair at home, and lets his wig lie in buckle for a whole half year. Spectator, No. 119.

That live long wig, which Gorgon's self might own,

Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone. Pope.

To BU'CKLE. † v. a. [from the noun, and old Fr. boucler.]

1. To fasten with a buckle.

Like saphire, pearl, and rich embroidery,

Buckled below fair knight-hood's bending knee. Shakspeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

France, whose armour conscience buckl'd on,

Whom zeal and charity brought to the field. Shakspeare.

Thus, ever, when I buckle on my helmet,

Thy fears afflict thee. Phillips.

When you carry your master's riding coat, wrap your own in it, and buckle them up close with a strap. Swift.

To prepare to do any thing: the metaphor is taken from buckling on the armour.

The Saracen, this hearing, rose amain;
And catching up in haste his three-square shield,
And shining helmet, soon him buckled to the field.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. To join in battle.

The lord Gray, captain of the men at arms, was forbidden to charge, until the foot of the avantguard were buckled with them in front. Hayward.

4. To confue.

How brief the life of man

Runs his erring pilgrimage!

That the stretching of a span

Buckles in his sum of age. Shakspeare.

5. A technical word among barbers; as, to buckle a wig, i. e. to put it into curl. [Germ. bucken. Sax. būgan, to bend.] See BUCKLE.

To BU'CKLE. v. n. [bucken, Germ.]

1. To bend; to bow.

The wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,

Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life

Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire

Out of his keeper's arms. Shakspeare.

2. To buckle to. To apply to; to attend. See the active, second sense.

Now a covetous old crafty knave,

At dead of night, shall raise his son, and cry,

Turn out, you rogue; how like a beast you lie;

Go buckle to the law. Dryden.

This is to be done in children, by trying them, when they are, by laziness unbent, or by avocation bent another way, and endeavouring to make them buckle to the thing proposed. Locke.

3. To buckle with. To engage with; to encounter; to join in a close fight, like men locked or buckled together.

For single combat, thou shalt buckle with me. Shakspeare.

Yet thou, they say, for marriage dost provide;

Is this an age to buckle with a bride? Dryden, Juvenal.

BU'CKLER. † n. s. [brecled, Welsh; boucler, Fr., Armorick; bouclier, Fr.] A shield; a defensive weapon buckled on the arm.

He took my arms, and while I forc'd my way,

Through troops of foes, which did our passage stay;

My buckler o'er my aged father east,

Still fighting, still defending as I past. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

This medal compliments the emperor as the Romans did dictator Fabius, when they called him the buckler of Rome. Addison on Medals.

To BU'CKLER. v. a. [from the noun.] To support; to defend.

Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee, Kate;

I'll buckler thee against a million. Shakspeare.

Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,

Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree? Shakspeare.

BU'CKLER-THORN. n. s. Christ's-thorn.

BU'CKMAST. n. s. The fruit or mast of the beech tree.

BU'CKRAM. n. s. [bougram, Fr.] A sort of strong linen cloth, stiffened with gum, used by taylors and staymakers.

I have peppered two of them; two, I am sure, I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. Shakspeare.

BU'CKRAM.* adj. [in allusion to the stiffness of buckram.] Stiff; precise; formal.

A few buckram bishops of Italy, and some other epicurean prelates of other countries. Fulke against Allen, p. 301.

One, that not long since was the buckram scribe,

That would run on men's errands for an asper. Beaumont and Fl. Spenn. Curate.

BU'CKRAMS. n. s. The same with wild garlic.

BU'CKSHORN PLANTAIN. n. s. [Euronopus, Lat. from the form of the leaf.] A plant. Miller.

B U D

BU'CKSKIN.* adj. [from buck and skin.] Made of the skin of a buck.

Mr. Humphry Trelooby, wearing his own hair, a pair of buckskin breeches, a hunting whip, with a new pair of spurs.

Tatler, No. 42

BU'CKSTALL.* n. s. [from buck and stall.] A net to catch deer.

Huloet.

A service in the forest in attending at a certain station to watch deer in hunting.

Burn, Gloss. Hist. of Cumberland.

BU'CKTHORN. n. s. [rhamnus, Lat. supposed to be so called from bucc, Saxon, the belly.] A tree that bears a purging berry.

BU'CKWHEAT. n. s. [buckweitz, Germ. fagopium, Lat.] A plant.

Miller.

BUCOLICAL.* adj. [Lat. bucolicus; Fr. bucolique; from the Gr. βουκολος, a cowherd. This adjective is of high antiquity in our language; though hitherto unnoticed.] Pastoral.

Old Quintilian with his declamations,
Theocritus with his bucolical relations. Skelton's Poems, p. 19.

BUCOLICK.† adj. [Fr. bucolique. See BUCOLICAL.] Pastoral.

The pastoral form is a fault of the poet's times: it contains also some passages, which wander far beyond the bounds of bucolick song.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BUCOLICK.* n. s.

1. A writer of bucolicks or pastorals.

Spenser is erroneously ranked as our earliest English bucolick.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 51.

2. A bucolick poem.

I look upon this bucolick as an inestimable treasure of the most ancient science.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

The first modern Latin bucolicks are those of Petrarch, in number twelve.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 255.

Theocritus and Moschus had respectively written a bucolick on the deaths of Daphnis and Bion.

Ib. Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BUD. n. s. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.

Be as thou was wont to be,

See as thou wast wont to see:

Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower

Hath such force and blessed power. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

Writers say, as the most forward bud,

Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,

Even so by love the young and tender wit

Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud

Losing his verdure even in the prime.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

When you the flow'rs for Chloë twine,

Why do you to her garland join

The meanest bud that falls from mine?

Prior.

Insects wound the tender buds, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liquour, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice. Bentley.

To BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To put forth young shoots or gems.

Bud forth as a rose growing by the brook of the field.

Eccles. xxxix. 13.

2. To rise as a gem from the stalk.

There the fruit, that was to be gathered from such a conflux, quickly budded out.

Clarendon.

Heaven gave him all at once, then snatch'd away,

Ere mortals all his beauties could survey;

Just like that flower that buds and withers in a day. Dryden.

Tho' lab'ring yokes on their own necks they fear'd,

And felt for budding horns on their smooth foreheads rear'd.

Dryden, Silenus.

3. To be in the bloom, or growing.

Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and sweet,

Whither away, or where is thy abode? Shakspeare.

B U D

To BUD. v. a. To inoculate; to graft by inserting a bud into the rind of another tree.

Of apricocks, the largest is much improved by budding upon a peach stock.

Temple.

BU'DRE.* n. s. In mineralogy, a sort of frame so called by the English dressers of the ores of metals, made to receive the ore after its first separation from its grossest foulness. Phil. Transact. No. 69.

Chambers.

To BUDGE.† v. n. [bouger, Fr.] To stir; to move off the place: a low word, Dr. Johnson says. Sir T. Herbert uses it not as such.

All your prisoners are

In the lime grove, which weatherfends your cell,

They cannot budge till you release. Shakspeare, Tempest.

The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge

From rascals worse than they. Shakspeare, Coriol.

When one is struck down, the residue budge not.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 385.

I thought th' hadst scorn'd to budge

For fear.

Hudibras.

BUDGE.† adj. [of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. He cites only the passage in Milton, and assigns to the word the meaning of stiff or surly; while others consider it as an academical phrase, denoting the scholastick habit, which was trimmed with budge or fur; [bouge furre, Fr. Palsgrave]; and Dr. Farmer has mentioned an order of the university of Cambridge in 1414, directing the bachelors of arts to be habited "tantum furraris buggeis aut agninis;" and Mr. Warton applies the word to this meaning; observing, however, that "the poet explains the obsolete budge, in which there is a tincture of ridicule, by the very awkward tautology of fur. See the substantive BUDGE. But Milton is perhaps equivocating. He is at least supported in the usage of the word as an adjective, in the sense of stiff, big, or pompous, by his friend Ellwood; and the etymology may then be referred to big, which see. He looks very bug of it;" for big; "a bog or bogge fellow," for bold or sarvey. The old substantive budgeness supports also this sense of the adjective; though another old adjective, budgy, countenances the academical application. See BUDGENESS and BUDGY.]

O foolishness of men! that lend their ears

To those budge doctors of the stoick fur.

Milton, Comus, ver. 707.

The warden was a budge old man; and I looked somewhat big too. Ellwood's Life, (written by Himself,) 3d edit. p. 60.

This was a budge fellow, and talked high. Ibid. p. 119.

BUDGE.† n. s. [Bouge furre, rommenis, peaux de Lombardie. Palsgrave.] The dressed skin or fur of lambs; and, in some countries, of kids.

Minsheu and Cockeram.

He's nought but budge, old guards, brown fox-fur face,
He hath no soul. Marston's Scourge of Vill. ii. 7.

They are become so liberal, as to part freely with their own budge-gowns, from off their backs, and bestow them on the magistrate. Milton, on the Art. of Peace with the Irish.

BU'DGENESS.* n. s. [from budge.] Sternness; severity.

A Sara for goodness, a great Bellona for budgenesse,

For myldnesse Anna, for chastitye godlye Susanna.

Stanyhurst, cited by Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. iii. 401.

BU'DGER. n. s. [from the verb.] One that moves or stirs from his place.

B U F

B U F

Let the first budget die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after. Shakespeare, Coriol.
BUDGET. † n. s. [bogette, French; formerly written bouget, which originally signified "a little coffer or trunk of wood, covered with leather, wherewith the women of old time carried their jewels, attires, and trinkets, at their saddle bowes, when they rid into the country." See Cotgrave in V. BOUGETTE. It may be from the Goth. balgs; but the Welsh have bolgan for a budget or mail of leather; and the Armorick, boulchet; low Lat. bulga. V. BU Cange.]

1. A bag, such as may be easily carried.
With that out of his bouget forth he drew
Great store of treasure, therewith him to tempt. Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 29.

If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the sowskin budget;
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
Sir Robert Clifford, in whose bosom or budget, most of Perkin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Bacon.
His budget with corruptions cramm'd,
The contributions of the damn'd. Swift.

2. It is used for a store, or stock.
It was nature, in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Estrange.

3. The statement made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the House of Commons, on a certain day in each session, of the finances of the kingdom, and of the ways and means of raising the revenue wanted for the ensuing year.

BUDGY.* adj. [from budget.] Consisting of fur. The example, like that from Milton, presents a tautology.

On whose furr'd chin did hang a budget fleece.
Thule, or Virtue's Historic, by F. R. 1598. sign. R. 2. b.

BUFF. † n. s. [from buffalo, Dr. Johnson says; noticing only the skin of the animal, or leather. It is the buffle or wild ox itself, Lat. bufalus, for bubalus, from the Gr. βουβαλος. See BUFFLE. Hulot, Barret, and Cotgrave, all mentioning the buff, with the variation of buffle or bugle, and with the definition of wild ox.]

1. A buffalo.
2. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.
A ropy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden, Juv.
3. The skins of elks and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.

4. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.
A fiend—a fairy, pitiless and rough,
A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

5. The colour of the leather, of a very light yellow.
6. In medicine, the sily, viscid, tough mass, which forms on the upper surface of the blood; what physicians call the coagulable lymph. Chambers.

To BUFF. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike: it is a word not in use.

There was a shock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From ought but a black. B. Jonson.

BUFFALO. n. s. [Ital.] A kind of wild ox.

Become the unworthy browse
Of buffaloes, salt goats, and hungry cows. Dryden.

BUFFET. † n. s. [buffeto, Ital. buffet, Fr. from the old Fr. buffe, which Barbazan derives from bouter, to strike, by the change of the t into f; others, from the Dan. puff, a stroke or blow. Su. Goth. baefwa, Iceland. bifu, to move.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

They gaven to him buffetis. Wicliffe, St. John, xix.
O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
Hast ta'en with equal thanks. Shakespeare.

What a manly body! methinks, she looks
As though she'd pitch the bar, or go to buffets. Beaum. and Fl. Loyal Subject.

Go, buffet coward, lest I run upon thee,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low. Milton, S. A.

Round his hollow temples, and his ears,
His buckler beats; the sun of Neptune stunn'd
With these repeated buffets, quits the ground. Dryden.

None knows what it is to be pursued and worried with the restless buffets of an impure spirit, but he who has endured the same terrible conflict himself. South, Sermons, vi. 180.

BUFFET. n. s. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to shew, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face. Pope, Moral Ess.

To BUFFET. † v. a. [old Fr. buffeter, Ital. bufettare. See BUFFET.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat. Wicliffe uses buffate.

An angel of Sathanas is given to me that he buffate me. Wicliffe, 2 Cor. xii. 7.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old luns again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, Peer out, peer out! that any madness I ever yet beheld, seemed but tameness.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
St. Paul tells us, he was buffeted. South, Serm. vi. 293.

Instantly I plung'd into the sea,
And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine. Otway.

2. A term applied to the mournful peal, or funeral peal, as it is called, of bells.

Buffeting the bells, that is, by tying pieces of leather, old hat, or any other thing that is pretty thick, round the ball of the clapper of each bell, and then, ringing them, they make a most-doleful and mournful sound.

The Art of Ringing, (1753,) p. 400.
To BUFFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

If I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher. Shakespeare, Henry V.

BUFFETER. † n. s. [from buffet.] A boxer; one that buffets. Sherwood.

BUFFETING.* n. s. [from buffet.] Stroke.
From the head these hysterick buffetings descended, and were plentifully bestowed upon the members.

Warburton, Dock. of Grace, i. 122.
BUFFLE. † n. s. [Germ. buffel, Fr. beuffle. The BUFF.] The same with buffalo; a wild ox.

Buffles big-boned, fat, and camel-backed. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 23.

To BUFFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To puzzle; to be at a loss.

This was the utter ruin of that poor, angry, buffing, well-meaning mortal, Pistorides, who lies equally under the contempt of both parties. Swift.

BUFFLEHEADED. † adj. [from buffle and head.] A man with a large head, like a buffalo; dull; stupid:

foolish. Dr. Johnson gives no example. Dr. Jamieson has produced the Scottish bluff-headed, as the synonyme, viz. having a large head, accompanied with the appearance of dulness of intellect; perhaps, he adds, from the English bluff. Our English of nearly two centuries back presents, however, buff-headed.

So fell this buff-headed giant by the hand of Don Quixote.
Gayton's Notes on D. Quixote, iii. 3.

BUFFOON.† n. s. [buffon, French; and buffon in old English. Teut. beffe, derision, and boef, a knave; but the word is perhaps from the Fr. bouffer, to puff.]

1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antick postures; a jackpudding.

And when such buffons ball, [bawl,] and cornets sound,
(The guests loud-laughing,) who can then be heard?

Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, sign. V. ii.

No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvassed on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons.
Watts.

2. A man that practises indecent railery.

It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others.
L'Estrange.

The bold buffoon, where'er they tread the green,
Their motion mimicks, but with jest obscene.
Garth.

To BUFFOON.* v. a. [from the noun, and Fr. bouffonner, Cotgrave.] To laugh at; to make ridiculous.

Oppression, and all the deadly sins; whatever is contrary to sound religion and true doctrine; reign, triumph, brave the sun, are fashionable, and almost creditable:—But virtue, sobriety, religion; religion, matter of the best, highest, truest, honour, despised, buffooned, exposed as ridiculous!

Glanville, Serm. ix. 343.

Let not so mean a style your muse debase,

But learn from Butler the buffooning grace.

Sir W. Soame's and Dryden's Art of Poetry.

BUFFOONERY. n. s. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.

Courage in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffoonery.
Locke on Education.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth.
Dryden places the accent, improperly, on the first syllable.

Where publick ministers encourage buffoonery, it is no wonder if buffoons set up for publick ministers.
L'Estrange.

And whilst it lasts, let buffoonery succeed,

To make us laugh; for never was more need.

Dryden, Ep. to Southerne.

BUFFOONING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Buffoonery; low jesting.

Leave your buffooning and lying; I am not in humour to bear it.
Dryden, Amphitryon.

These whiffers, who have neither learning nor good manners, are neither afraid nor ashamed, by their rude drolling and buffooning, to expose to contempt all that which the wisest and best men in the world have always had the greatest veneration for.
Hallywell's Discourses, p. 56.

BUFFOONISM.* n. s. [from buffoonize.] Jestings.

Minsheu, and Cotgrave.

To BUFFOONIZE.* v. n. [from buffoon.] To buffoonize it; to play the fool, jester, or buffoon; to get a living by jests.
Minsheu, and Cotgrave.

BUFFOONLIKE.* adj. [from buffoon and like.] Resembling a buffoon.
Sherwood.

BUFFOONLY.* adj. [from buffoon.] Scurrile; ridiculous.

Such men become fit only for toys and trifles, for apish tricks and buffoonly discourse.

Goodman's Wint. Ev. Conference, P. 1.

BUG.† n. s. A stinking insect bred in old household stuff; or, as in some places bug is used, any insect of the scarabæi kind.
Ray.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which stinks and stings.
Pope.

BUG.† } n. s. [It is derived by some from big, by Bu'GBEAR. } others from pug; breg, in Welsh, has the same meaning, Dr. Johnson says. Pug was an old term for the devil. See Puck. But bug is the Celtick bæg, a goblin; whence also bogle, which see. Bugbear was formerly written bearbug, in order, I suppose, to be represented as a fit companion for another "word of fear," bulbeggan: "As children be afraid of bearbugs and bulbeggans," Sir T. Smith, Append. to his Life, p. 34.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen; generally now used for a false terror to frighten babes.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,

As ghastly bug, does greatly them affear:

Yet both doth strive their fearfulness to feign.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. iii. 20.

Sir, spare your threats;

The bug which you would fright me with, I seek. Shakspeare.

Hast not slept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him.
Shakspeare.

Indeed! these are bug-words.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

We might guess them weary of the present discipline, as offensive to their state, which is the bug we fear.

Milton, Of Ref. in England, B. 2.

We have a horror for uncouth monsters; but, upon experience, all these bugs grow familiar, and easy to us.

L'Estrange.

Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again.

Locke.

To the world, no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate.

Pope.

BUGGINESS. n. s. [from buggy.] The state of being infected with bugs.

BUGGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

BUGLE.† } n. s. [from buzen, Sax. to bend, Bu'GLEHORN. } Junius; from bucula, Lat. a heifer, Skinner; from bugle, the bonasus, Lye. It is very natural that the term of the beast should be applied to the horn. See BUGLE.] A hunting horn.

Then took that squire an horny bugle small,
Which hung adown his side in twisted gold,
And tassels gay.

Spenser, F. Q.

I will have a recheate winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick.

Shakspeare.

He gave his buglehorn a blast,
That through the woodland echo'd far and wide.

Tickell.

BUGLE.† n. s. [old Fr. bugle, bos. Lacombe. A bull, in Hampshire, is called a bugle. See also BUGGLE.] A sort of wild ox.

The hart, and the roebucke, and the bugle, and the wilde goate.
Deuteron. xiv. 5. (Transl. of 1578.)

BUGLE. n. s. A shining bead of black glass.

Bugle bracelets, necklace amber,

Perfumed for a lady's chamber.

Shakspeare.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,

Your bugle eyeballs; nor your cheek of cream,

That can entame my spirits to your worship.

Shakspeare.

BUGLE. n. s. [from bugula, Lat.] A plant. Millr.

BU'GLOSS. n. s. [from buglossum. Lat.] The herb ox-tongue.

To BUILD. † v. a. preter. I built, I have built; and formerly builded. [bidden, Dutch; bylan, Sax. to confirm. The Su. Goth. bol, a city, is perhaps the original.]

1. To raise from the ground; to make a fabrick; or an edifice.

Thou shalt not build an house unto my name.

1 Chron. xxii. 8.

The high places — which Solomon, the king of Israel, had builded for Ashtoreth, the abomination of the Zidonians.

2 Kings, xxiii. 13.

When usurers tell their gold in the field,

And whores and bawds do churches build.

Shakspeare.

2. To raise in any laboured form.

When the head-dress was built up in a couple of cones and spires, which stood so excessively high on the side of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head dress, appeared like a colossus upon putting it on. Spectator, No. 98.

3. To raise any thing on a support or foundation.

To build, with level of my lofty style,

That which no hands can evermore compyle.

Spenser of Rome, st. 25.

He knew

Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.

Milton, Lycid. v. 11.

Love built on beauty, soon as beauty, dies;

Choose this face, chang'd by no deformities.

Donne.

I would endeavour to destroy those curious, but groundless structures, that men have built up of opinions alone.

Boyle.

To BUILD. v. n.

1. To play the architect.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,

To rear the column, or the arch to bend.

Pope.

2. To depend on; to rest on.

By a man's authority, we here understand the force which his word hath for the assurance of another's mind, that buildeth upon it

Hooker.

Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and putting tricks upon them, than upon soundness of their own proceedings.

Bacon, Essays.

Even those who had not tasted of your favours, yet built so much on the fame of your beneficence, that they bemoaned the loss of their expectations.

Dryden, Fab. Ded.

This is certainly a much surer way, than to build on the interpretations of an author, who does not consider how the ancients used to think.

Addison on Medals.

BUI'DER. n. s. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.

But fore-accounting oft makes builders miss;

They found, they felt, they had no lease of bliss.

Sidney.

When they, which had seen the beauty of the first temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the second, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavoured, with comforts, to wipe away.

Hooker.

Mark'd out for such an use, as if 'twere meant

To invite the builder, and his choice prevent.

Denham.

blow wings with lengthen'd honour let her spread,

A fiend's greatness, shew her builder's fame.

Prior.

A wolf, hay n. s. [from build.] A fabrick; an edifice.

As is the built, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.

Dryden, Ann. Mir. st. 60.

The built of our ships, and courage of our seamen, is more proper and able to maintain a close fight, than any other nation of the world.

Temple's Works, ii. 377.

2. Species of building.

There is hardly any country, which has so little shipping as Ireland; the reason must be, the scarcity of timber proper for this built.

Temple.

BUL.* n. s. In ichthyology, an English name for the common flounder.

Chambers.

BULB. n. s. [from bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.

Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs, if you will remove them.

Enelyn's Kalendar.

If we consider the bulb, or ball of the eye, the exterior membrane, or coat thereof, is made thick, tough, or strong, that it is a very hard matter to make a rupture in it.

Ray on the Creation.

To BULB out.* v. n. To project; to swell out.

A stone —

wherein are all

The mouldings of a round-turn'd pedestal,

Whence bulbing out in figure of a sphere,

The whole above is finish'd in a snail

Pellucid spire, crown'd with a crystal ball.

Colton, Wonders of the Peake, (1621), p. 11.

BULBACEOUS. adj. [balbaceus, Lat.] The same with bulbous.

Dict.

BULBED.* adj. [from bulb.] Round-headed, like an onion.

Cotgrave in V. Bulbeaux.

BULBOUS.† adj. [Fr. bulbeux, Cotgrave.] Containing bulbs; consisting of bulbs; having round or roundish knobs.

There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots, and hirsute roots. And I take it, in the bulbous, the sap hasteneth most to the air and sun.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Set up your traps for vermin, especially amongst your bulbous roots.

Enelyn's Kalendar.

Their leaves, after they are swelled out, like a bulbous root, to make the bottle, bend inward, or come again close to the stalk.

Ray on the Creation.

BULGE.* n. s. [Welsh, bwelch, a gap. But see also To BULGE.] The sea term for a leak, the breach which lets in water. See To BILGE.

To BULGE.† v. n. [It was originally written bilge; bilge was the lower part of the ship, where it swelled out; from bilg, Sax. a bladder, Dr. Johnson says. It may be rather from the Goth. bulgia, to swell, from bulgs.]

1. To take in water; to founder.

To save our shatter'd ships —

To weigh them out, that else had bulg'd themselves in sand.

Mir. for Magistrates, p. 133.

Then round the ship was tost,

Then bulg'd at once, and in the deep was lost.

Dryden.

2. To jut out.

The side, or part of the side of a wall, or any timber that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter, or hang over the foundation.

Moxon, Mechanical Exercises.

BULIMY.† n. s. [old Fr. boulimie, from Gr. βούλιμα, from βῆς, an ox, and λῖμας, hunger.] An enormous appetite, attended with fainting, and coldness of the extremities.

Dict.

BULK.† n. s. [bulcke, Dutch, the breast, or largest part of a man, Dr. Johnson — To this may be added the Goth. bulgs, and the bulce, the belly. Chaucer writes bouke for bulke. In Sussex, buck is the body or trunk of the body; whence the buck of a cart. But the Su. Goth. bolck, bulck, which I derive from bol, great, is probably the original of our word.

1. Magnitude; of material substance; mass.

Against these forces there were prepared near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion, and more serviceable. Bacon, War with Spain.

The Spaniards and Portuguese have ships of great bulk, but fitter for the merchant than the man of war; for burthen than for battle. Raleigh, Essays.

Though an animal arrives at its full growth, at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the last period of life. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Size; quantity.

Things, or objects, cannot enter into the mind, as they subsist in themselves, and by their own natural bulk, pass into the apprehension; but they are taken in by their ideas. South.

3. The gross; the majority; the main mass.

Those very points, in which these wise men disagreed from the bulk of the people, are points in which they agreed with the received doctrines of our nature. Addison, Frecholder.

Change in property, through the bulk of a nation, makes slow marches, and its due power always attends it. Swift.

The bulk of the debt must be lessened gradually. Swift.

4. Main fabric; the body itself.

He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And end his being. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Her heart
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

My liver leapt within my bulk.
Turberville, Songs and Sonets, (1570.)

Their bulks and souls are bound on fortune's wheel. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

5. The main part of a ship's cargo; as, to break bulk, is to open the cargo. [Goth. balke, portio mercium in navi. Serenius.]

BULK. † n. s. [from bicleke, Dan. a beam.] A part of a building jutting out.

Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come:
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home.

Shakspeare, Othello.

He found a country fellow dead-drunk, snorting on a bulke.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 274.

The keeper coming up, found Jack with no life in him; he took down the body, and laid it on a bulke, and brought out the rope to the company. Arbuthnot, History of J. Bull.

BULKHEAD. n. s. A partition made across a ship, with boards, whereby one part is divided from another. Harris.

BULKINESS. n. s. [from bulky.] Greatness of stature, or size.

Wheat, or any other grain, cannot serve instead of money, because of its bulkiness, and change of its quantity. Locke.

BULKY. adj. [from bulk.] Of great size or stature.

Latrons, the bulkiest of the double race,
Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Halcans grace. Dryden.

Huge Telephus, a formidable page,
Cries vengeance; and Orestes' bulky rage,
Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers. Dryden.

The manner of sea engagements, which was to bore and sink the enemy's ships with the rostra, gave bulky and high ships a great advantage. Arbuthnot on Coins.

BULL. † n. s. [bulle, Dutch.]

1. The male of black cattle; the male to a cow.

A gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.—
Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bulk. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Bulls are more crisp upon the forehead than cows. Bacon.

Best age to go to bulk, or calve, we hold,
Begins at five, and ends at ten years old. May's Virgil.

2. In the scriptural sense, an enemy powerful, fierce, and violent.

Many bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round. Psalms xxii. 12.

3. One of the twelve signs of the zodiac.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson, Spring.

4. A letter published by popes and emperors. [Fr. bulle; and written bulle by some of our own writers, to distinguish it, as by Lowth and T. Warton; βύλλα, (bulle, sigillum), vox Græco-barb. V. Meursii Gloss. in voce.]

A bull is letters called apostolick by the canonists, strengthened with a leaden seal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or bishop of Rome. Ayliffe.

There was another sort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bulles; round, or of the figure of a heart, hung about their necks like diamond crosses. Those bulles came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperors and popes, from whence they had the name of bulle. Arbuthnot.

It was not till after a fresh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was in the point of abuses. Atterbury.

5. A blunder; a contradiction.

Mr. Bagshaw thinks this phrase might take its rise among Protestants in allusion to the constant incongruity in the pope's bulls, where he styles himself servant to the servants of God, and yet dictates and decrees with despotick authority. The example, which I bring from Milton, seems to countenance this supposition; a bull being described as taking away the essence of that which it calls itself.

That such a poem should be toothless, I still affirm it to be a bull, taking away the essence of that which it calls itself. Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

Never did I see such a confused heap of false grammar, improper English, and downright bulls. Dryden, Pref. to Notes on Emp. of Morocco.

I confess it is what the English call a bull, in the expression, though the sense be manifest enough. Pope, Letters.

6. A stock-jobber. See BEAR.

BULL, in composition, generally notes the large size of any thing, as, bull-head, bull-rush, bull-trout; and is therefore only an augmentative syllable, without much reference to its original signification.

BULL-BAITING. n. s. [from bull and bait.] The sport of baiting bulls with dogs.

What am I the wiser for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribuneship, when he entertained the people with a horse-race or bull-baiting? Addison on Medals.

BULL-BEEF. n. s. [from bull and beef.] Coarse beef; the flesh of bulls.

They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves. Shakspeare.

BULL-BEGGAR. † n. s. [This word probably came from the insolence of those who begged, or raised money by the pope's bull; or it may be a corruption of bold-beggar.] Something terrible; something to fright children with.

As children be afraid of hearbuds and bulbeggars. Sir T. Smith, Append. to his Life, p. 34.

These diminutions from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and, as they were called bull-beggars, they were used as words of scorn and contempt. Ayliffe.

This is the greatest bulbegger they seem to object against such converts, as come from them.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 137.
This was certainly an ass, in a lion's skin; a harmless bulbegg, who delights to frighten innocent people, and set them a galloping. Tatler, No. 212.

BULL-CALF. n. s. [from bull and calf.] A he calf; used for a stupid fellow: a term of reproach.

And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard a bull-calf. Shakespeare.

BULL-DOG. n. s. [from bull and dog.] A dog of a particular form, remarkable for his courage. He is used in baiting the bull; and this species is so peculiar to Britain, that they are said to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.

All the harmless part of him is that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended. Addison, Spect.

BULL-FACED.* adj. [from bull and face.] Having the face, as it were, of a bull, a large face.

Not bull-fac'd Jonas, who could statutes draw To mean rebellion, and make treason law. Dryden, Abs. and Achitophel.

BULL-FINCH. n. s. [rubicilla.] A small bird, that has neither song nor whistle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, if taught by the mouth.

Phillips's World of Words.
The blackbird whistles from the thorny brake,
The mellow bull-finch answers from the groves. Thomson.

BULL-FLY. } n. s. An insect.

BULL-BEE. } Phillips's World of Words.

BULL-HEAD. n. s. [from bull and head.]

1. A stupid fellow; a blockhead.

2. The name of a fish.

The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; he is without teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of his tail is round. Nature hath painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which swells their vents in the form of a dug. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows.

Walton's Angler.

3. A little black water vermin.

Phillips's World of Words.

BULL-TROUT. n. s. A large kind of trout.

There is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in these southern parts. Walton's Angler.

BULL-WEED. n. s. The same with knapweed.

BULL-WORT, or BISHOPS-WEED. n. s. [ammi, Lat.] A plant.

BULLACE. n. s. A wild sour plum.

In October, and the beginning of November, come services, medlars, bullaces; roses cut or removed, to come late; holy-oaks, and such like. Bacon, Essays.

BULLARY.* n. s. [Lat. bullarium.] A collection of papistical bulls.

The whole bull is extant in the bullary of Lertius Cherubinus. South, Sermons, v. 224.

BULLET. n. s. [boulet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, usually shot out of guns.

As when the devilish iron engine wrought
In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And rammed with bullet round, ordain'd to kill. Spenser, F. Q.

Giaffer, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the foremost of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain. Knoles.

And as the built, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd:
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

BULLETIN.* n. s. Fr. "a bill, ticket, or cocket; a billet in a lottery," Cotgrave in V. BULLETIN. Our language, of late years, has adopted this word for an official account of publick news, usually of no great length.

BULLION. n. s. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined.

The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon, Advice to Valliers.

A second multitude,
With wondrous art, found out the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion dross.

Milton, P. L.
Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addison on the War.

To BULLIRAE.* v. a. [See To BALLARAG. This is the northern pronunciation and writing of ballarag; which Iye imagines to be derived from the Iceland. baul, a curse, and raccia, to reproach. Others consider it merely as a vulgarism, from bully, or from bawl.] To insult in a bullying manner.

BULLISH.* adj. [from bull.] Partaking of the nature of a bull or blunder.

A toothless satire is as improper as a toothed sleek-stone, and as bullish. Milton, Animadu. Rem. Defence.

BULLIST.* n. s. [Fr. bulliste, a writer or maker of papal bulls, Cotgrave.]

As for the ancients and elders, they are become penitentiaries, proctors in the court ecclesiastical, dataries, bullists, copyists. Harmer's Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 134.

BULLITION. n. s. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are, as the bullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

BULLOCK.† n. s. [Sax. bulluca.] A young bull.

Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullock. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock scorns
Th' appointed way, and runs with threatening horns. Conway.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks. Temple.

BULLY. n. s. [Skinner derives this word from burly, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-cyed; which are less probable.* May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the insolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine host of the garter! — What says my bully-rock? Speak scholarly and wisely. Shakespeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenches, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Estrange, Pub.

'Tis so ridie'lous, but so true withal,
A bully cannot sleep without a brawl. Dryden, Juvenal.

A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addison, Frecholder.

B U M

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows choleric, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison, Spect.

To BULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.

Prentices, parish clerks, and hectors meet,
He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat. King's Cookery.

To BULLY. † v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.

So Britain's monarch once uncover'd sat,
While Bradshaw bullied in a broad-brimm'd hat. Bramston.

BU'LRUSH. n. s. [from bull and rush.] A large rush, such as grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it, the epithet knotty, confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baskets of bulrushes, was my woe. Spenser.

All my praises are but as a bulrush cast upon a stream; they are born by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending oars crown'd;
The knotty bulrush next in order stood,
And all within of reeds a trembling wood. Dryden.

BU'LRUSHY. \ adj.* [from bulrush.] Made of bulrushes, or full of bulrushes. Hulot.

BU'LTIL. \ n. s.* [low Lat. bulltellus.]

1. The bran or refuse of meal after dressing. See To Bolt. Chambers.

2. The bag wherein meal is dressed; a bolter-cloth. V. Du Cange.

BU'LWARK. † n. s. [bolwerkke, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness; so Germ. bolwerk from the Iceland. bol, large.]

1. What is now called a bastion.

But him, the squire made quickly to retreat,
Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,
And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand. Spenser, F. Q.

They oft repair
Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax, Tasso.

We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addison, Cato.

2. A fortification.

Taking away needless bulwarks, divers were demolished upon the sea coasts. Hayward.

Our naval strength is a bulwark to the nation. Addison, Frecholder.

3. A security; a screen; a shelter.

Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakespeare.

To BU'LWARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast,
Preserves the beauteous youth from being seen. Addison, Orid.

BUM. † n. s. [homme, Dutch; bun, Gael. and Iceland. the bottom of any thing.] The buttocks; the part on which we sit.

The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for threefoot stool mistaketh me,
Then slip I from her bun, down topples she. Shakespeare.

This said, he gently rais'd the knight,
And set him on his bun upright. Hudibras.

From dusty shops neglected authors come,
Martyrs of pies, and reliicks of the bun. Dryden.

The learned Sydenham does not doubt,
But profound thought will bring the gout;
And that with bun on couch we lie,
Because our reason's seat's too high. W—n.

To BUM. \ v. n.* [Dutch bommen, to resound; from homme, a drum.] To make a noise or report.

Fox-furr'd Mécho
Hath rak'd together some four thousand pound,

B U M

To make his smug girl bear a bumming sound
In a young merchant's ear. Murston's Scourge of Vill. B. i. S. 4.

BUMBA'ILIFF. † n. s. [This is a corruption of bound bailiff, pronounced by gradual corruption, boun, bun, bum bailiff, Dr. Johnson says. Blackstone also says, that it was bound-bailiff. But this origin of the word bun is questionable. The term may have arisen from the person being pursued, and the bailiff or pursuer catching him by the hinder part of his garment; and the vulgar, who are no admirers of this sort of gentry, might affix the contemptuous name to such of bun-bailiff. A literary friend proposes bump, as the etymology; the bailiff giving the party to be arrested a bump on the shoulder. But my own remark is supported by a laughable writer of nearly two centuries ago.] A bailiff of the meanest kind; one that is employed in arrests.

Go, Sir Andrew, scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Constables, tithing-men, bailiffs, humme or shoulder-marshals, and the like dreadful appearances, which make stop of suspicious persons. Gayton's Notes on D. Quixote, B. ii. ch. 2.

BU'MBARD. n. s. [wrong written for bombard; which see.] A great gun; a black jack; a leathern pitcher.

Yond same black clotid, yond huge one looks,
Like a foul bumbard, that would shed his liquor. Shakespeare, Tempest.

BU'MBAST. † n. s. [falsely written for bombast; bombast and bombasine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from boom, a tree, and sein, silk; the silk or cotton of a tree. Mr. Steevens, with much more probability, deduces them all from bombycinus, Dr. Johnson says. But see BOMBAST.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.

The usual bumbast of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; stuffing; wadding.

We have received your letters full of love,
And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bumbast, and as lying to the time. Shakespeare.

BUMBLEBEE. \ n. s.* [from bumble and bee. Chaucer uses the verb bumble to describe the noise made by the bittorn. The bumble or bumble bee is a common word in the north of England; and is, no doubt, so called from the bumming, or humming, noise which it makes. See To BUM and To BUMP.] The wild bee, or, as we now call it, the humble bee; which makes a great noise.

BU'MBOAT. \ n. s.* [from bun and bout; or perhaps from bump. See BUMP.] A large clumsy boat, used in carrying vegetables and liquours to a ship lying at some distance from the shore.

BUMP. † n. s. [perhaps from bun, as being prominent, Dr. Johnson says. It is from the Goth. and Iceland. bomps, a stroke or blow.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise. Dryden

To BUMP. † v. n. [Dutch bommen; Tent: homme, Lat. bombus. See To BOMB. It is applied, perhaps, only to the bittern; which, in some places, is called the butter-bump. Chaucer employs bumble, in describing the noise made by this bird, C. T. ver. 6554.] To make a loud noise, or bomb.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head,
And as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she said. —

Dryden, Fables.

Bump. * n. s. [from the verb.] The mugient noise made by the bittern.

The bitter with his bump,
The crane with his trump,
The swan of Menander,
The goose and the gander.

Skelton's Poems, p. 227.

BUMPER. † n. s. [from bump, Dr. Johnson says, which he conceives to be from bun, as being prominent. But this is a far-fetched explanation of bumper. Others consider it as a corruption of bumbard or bombard, a drinking vessel. In Spence's Anecdotes, another corruption is proposed, viz. of au bon pere; the English, when they were good catholicks, being accustomed to drink the pope's health in a full glass, every day after dinner, "au bon pere!" A cup filled till the liquor swells over the brims.

Places his delight

All day in playing bumpers, and at night
Reels to the bawls.

Dryden, Juvenal.

I have no opinion of your bumper-patriots. Some eat, some drink, some quarrel for their country!

Bp. Berkeley on Patriotism, § 21.

BUMPKIN. † n. s. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henshaw derives it from pumpkin, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh; yet we use the word cabbage-head in the same sense. Bump is used amongst us for a knob, or lump; may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead. Such is the etymological explanation given by Dr. Johnson. The word is of no great age, in this sense, in our language. But bunkin, a naval word, is of higher antiquity. It is found in Sherwood's Dictionary of 1632, and is rendered into French chicambault, which Cotgrave defines "the luffe-block, a long and thick piece of wood, whereunto the foresayle and spritsayle are fastened, when a ship goes by the wind;" and this word bunkin, meaning a boom or bar of timber, is still in our sea-language. May not, then, this block of wood have given rise to the contemptuous application of bumpkin to a man? Kersey's Dictionary of 1707 gives bunkin, a country clown, without the p. The Dutch have boomken for a little tree.] An awkward heavy rustick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition.

L'Estrange.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care,
Can never dance three steps with a becoming air.

Dryden.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears,
The country bumpkin the same liv'ry wears.

Dryden.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumpkins and clowns, if they pleased.

Locke.

BUMPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the rustick wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells.

Clarissa.

BUNCH. † n. s. [buncker, Danish, the crags of the mountains, bunke, Goth. an heap.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.

They will carry their treasures upon the bunches of camels to a people that shall not profit them.

Isaiah, xxx. 6.

He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown hard with little round balls or bunches, like hard boiled eggs.

Boyle.

2. A cluster; many of the same kind growing together.

Vines, with clust'ring bunches growing.

Shakspeare.

Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the distribution of the lights and shadows, than his observation drawn from a bunch of grapes.

Dryden.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine,
And the last blessings of the year are thine.

Dryden.

3. A number of things tied together.

And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore.

Spenser, F. Q.

All? I know not what ye call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of ruddish.

Shakspeare.

Ancient Janus, with his double face,
And bunch of keys, the porter of the place.

Dryden.

The mother's bunch of keys, or any thing they cannot hurt themselves with, serves to divert little children.

Locke.

4. Any thing bound into a knot: as, a bunch of ribbon; a tuft.

Upon the top of all his lofty crest,

A bunch of hairs discover'd diversly,

With sprinkled pearl and gold full richly drest.

Spenser, F. Q.

To BUNCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out in a bunch; to grow out in protuberances.

It has the resemblance of a champignon before it is opened,
bunching out into a large round knob at one end.

Woodward, on Fossils.

BUNCHED. adj. [from bunch and back.] Having bunches on the back; crookbacked.

The day shall come, that thou shalt wish for me,

To help thee curse this pois'nous bunchback'd toad.

Shakspeare.

BUNCHINESS. † n. s. [from bunchy.] The quality of being bunchy, or growing in bunches.

Sherwood.

BUNCHY. adj. [from bunch.] Growing in bunches;
having tufts.

He is more especially distinguished from other birds, by his bunchy tail, and the shortness of his legs.

Grew's Museum.

BUNDLE. n. s. [byñble, Sax. from byñd.]

1. A number of things bound together.

As to the bundles of petitions in parliament, they were, for the most part, petitions of private persons.

Hale, Law of Eng.

Try, lads, can you this bundle break; —

Then bids the youngest of the six

Take up a well-bound heap of sticks.

Swift.

2. A roll; any thing rolled up.

She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm;
but finding herself overladen, she dropped the good man, and brought away the bundle.

Spectator, No. 499.

To BUNDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together: with up.

We ought to put things together, as well as we can, doctrinae causa; but, after all, several things will not be bundled up together, under our terms and ways of speaking.

Locke.

See how the double nation lies,

Like a rich coat with skirts of frize;

As if a man, in making posies,

Should bundle thistles up with roses.

Swift.

BUNG. n. s. [bwng, Welsh.] A stopple for a barrel.

After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung stick, or plug.

Mortimer.

To BUNG. † v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up.

Kersey.

BUNGHOLE. n. s. [from bung and hole.] The hole at which the barrel is filled, and which is afterwards stopped up.

Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander; till he find it stopping a bunghole.

Shakspeare.

To BUNGLE. v. n. [See Bungler.] To perform clumsily.

B U O

When men want light,
They make but bungling work. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Letters to me are not seldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands. Swift.

To BU'NGLE. v. a. To botch; to manage clumsily;
to conduct awkwardly: with up.

Other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with forms being fetcht
From glist'ring semblances of piety. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

They make lame mischief, though they mean it well:
Their int'rest is not finely drawn, and hid,
But seams are coarsely bungled up, and seen.

Dryden, Don. Sebast.

BU'NGLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardness; an inaccuracy; a clumsy performance.

Errors and bungles are committed, when the matter is in-apt or contumacious. Ray on the Creation.

BU'NGLER. n. s. [bwngler, Welsh; q. bôn y glêr, i. e.
the last or lowest of the profession. Davies.] A bad workman; a clumsy performer; a man without skill.

Painters at the first, were such bunglers, and so rude, that, when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it. Peacham on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;
To draw true beauty she's a master's hand. Dryden.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the pannel split. Swift.

BU'NGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumsily;
awkwardly.

To denominate them even monsters, they must have had some system of parts, compounded of solids and fluids, that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar motions and functions. Bentley, Serm. p. 182.

BUNN.† n. s. [hunelo, Span. hunna, Irish, a cake.]
A kind of sweet bread.

Thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,
Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear;
Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth,
Or buns and sugar to the damsel's tooth. Gay, Pastorals.

BUNT.† n. s. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from bent. Bowen, however, is swollen, in Norfolk.]

1. A swelling part; an increasing cavity.

The wear is a frith, reaching slopewise through the ooze, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod, with an eye-hook, where the fish entering, upon the coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ooze. Carew.

2. The middle part of a sail, purposely formed into a sort of bag, that it may receive the more wind. It is also called the bent.

The use of the brails is, when the sail is furl'd across, to hale up its bunt. Harris.

To BUNT. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out, as the sail bunts out.

BU'NTER.† n. s. A cant word for a woman who picks up rags about the street; and used, by way of contempt, for any low vulgar woman.

Her two marriageable daughters, like bunters, in stuff gowns, are now taking sixpennyworths of tea at the White-conduit House. Goldsmith's Essays, Ess. 15.

BU'NTING.† n. s. [emberiza alba.] The name of a bird.

I took this lark for a bunting. Shakespeare, All's Well.
A gosshawk beats not a bunting. Ray, Proverbs.

BU'NTING. n. s. The stuff of which a ship's colours are made.

BUOY. n. s. [bois, or boye, Fr. boya, Span.] A piece of cork or wood floating on the water, tied to a weight at the bottom.

B U R

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy,
Almost too small for sight. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Like buoys, that never sink into the flood,
On learning's surface we but lie and nod. Pope, Dunciad.
To BUOY.† v. a. [from the noun: the u is mute in both, Dr. Johnson says; but a correct speaker leaves not the u mute in either. It is pronounced buoy.] To keep afloat; to bear up.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant. K. Charles.

The water which rises out of the abyss, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To BUOY. v. n. To float; to rise by specifick lightness.

Rising merit will buoy up at last. Pope, Essay on Crit.

BUO'YANCY. n. s. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it.
Derham, Physico-Theology.

BUO'YANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light; that which will not sink. Dryden uses the word, perhaps improperly, for something that has density enough to hinder a floating body from sinking.

I swam with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant.
Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,
So full of buoyant spirit, now no more Inspire the course. Thomson, Autumn.

BUR, BOUR, BOR,† come from the Sax. bup, an inner-chamber, or place of shade and retirement.
See BOWER. Gibson's Camden.

BUR. n. s. [lappa; bourre, Fr. is down; the bur being filled with a soft tomentum, or down.] A rough head of a plant, called a burdock, which sticks to the hair or clothes.

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Hang off, thou cat, thou bur; vile thing, let loose;
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent. Shakespeare.
Dependents and suitors are always the burs, and sometimes the briars of favourites. Wotton.

Whither betake her
From the chill dew, amongst rude burs and thistles.
Milton, P. L.

And where the vales with violets once were crown'd,
Now knotty burs and thorns disgrace the ground. Dryden.
A fellow stuck like a bur, that there was no shaking him off.
Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

BU'RBOT.† n. s. A fish full of prickles, Dr. Johnson says. It is the English name of the mustela fluvialis; a fish common in the Trent, and many other of our rivers; and, called, in other places, the eel-pout.
Chambers.

BU'RDELAIS.† n. s. [perhaps Bourdelaïs, from Bowdeaur.] A sort of grape.

BURDEN.† n. s. [byrden, Sax. and therefore properly written burthen, Dr. Johnson says; which he might have supported by noticing that burthen is probably a contraction from bapian and burge, i. e.
to bear anything. But he only observes, that it is supposed to come from the Lat. burdo, a mule.
Byrden is another form also of the Sax. substantive.
See BURTHEN.]

BUR

1. A load: something to be carried.

Camels have their provender

Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

It is of use in lading of ships, and may help to shew what burden in the several kinds they will bear. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

2. Something grievous, or wearisome.

Couldst thou support

That burden, heavier than the earth to bear? Milton, P. L.

None of the things they are to learn, should ever be made a burden to them, or imposed on them as a task. Locke.

Deaf, giddy, helpless, left alone,

To all my friends a burden grown.

Swift.

3. A birth: now obsolete.

Thou hadst a wife once, call'd Æmilia.

That bore thee at a burden two fair sons.

Shakspeare.

4. The verse repeated in a song; the bob; the chorus; [low Lat. burdo, a humming noise; Fr. bourdon, the drone of a bagpipe. Cockeram renders "a deep base" by the Fr. burdon; and the Welsh byrdon is also used for the bass in musick. The commentators on Chaucer consider the sompner, "bearing a stiff burdown," as singing the bass part of a well-known song, which the pardoner was singing; but it might be the chorus. However, the latter is the present meaning.]

At every close she made, the attending throng

Reply'd, and bore the burden of the song. Dryden, Fables.

5. The quantity that a ship will carry; or the capacity of a ship: as, a ship of a hundred tons burden.

6. A club. [Fr. bourdon, a pilgrim's staff, Cotgrave; Ital. bordone. Chaucer describes the giant Danger with a great bourdown in his hand," Rom. R. 3401.]

The villain —

Let drive at him so dreadfully amaine,

That for his safety he did him constraine

To give him ground, and shift on every side,

Rather than once his burden to sustaine.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 46.

To BURDEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To load; to incumber.

Burden not thyself above thy power.

Eccles. xiii. 2.

I mean not that other men be eased and you burdened.

2 Corinthians, viii. 13.

With meats and drinks they had sufficed,

Not burden'd nature.

Milton, P. L.

BURDENER. n. s. [from burden.] A loader; an oppressor.

BURDENOUS. adj. [from burden.]

1. Grievous; oppressive; wearisome.

Make no jest of that which hath so earnestly pierced me through; nor let that be light to thee, which to me is so burdenous.

Sidney, b. i.

2. Useless; cumbersome.

To what can I be useful, wherein serve,

But to sit idle on the household hearth,

A burdenous drone; to visitants a gaze.

Milton, S. A.

BURDENSOME. adj. [from burden.] Grievous; troublesome to be born.

His leisure told him that his time was come,

And lack of load made his life burdensome.

Milton, Epit. on Hobson.

Could I but live till burdensome they prove,

My life would be immortal as my love.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Assistances always attending us, upon the easy condition of our prayers, and by which the most burdensome duty will become light, and easy.

Rogers.

BURDENOMENESS. n. s. [from burdensome.] Weight; heaviness; uneasiness to be born.

BURDOCK. n. s. [persolata.] A plant.

BURDEAU. † n. s. [bureau, Fr. a thick and coarse cloth of a brown, russet, or dark mingled colour;

BUR

also the table that is within a court of audience; be-like, because 'tis usually covered with a carpet of that cloth. Cotgrave in V. BUREAU. Hence, our table, with drawers.] A chest of drawers with a writing board. It is pronounced as if it were spelt
buro.

For not the desk with silver nails,

Nor bureau of expence,

Nor standish well jappan'd, avails,

To writing of good sense.

Swift.

BURG. † n. s. See BURGH, and BURROW.

Tamc, a burg or fort of some note.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 48.

BURGAGE. † n. s. [Fr. bourgage, from bourg; low Lat. burgagium. See BURGH.] A tenure proper to cities and towns, whereby men of cities or burrows hold their lands or tenements of the king, or other lord, for a certain yearly rent. Cowell.

The gross of the borough is surveyed together in the beginning of the county; but there are some other particular bur- gages thereof, mentioned under the titles of particular men's possessions. Hale, Orig. of Manland.

BURGAMOT. n. s. [bergamotte, Fr.]

1. A species of pear.

2. A kind of perfume.

BURGANET. † n. s. [from bourginote, Fr.] A kind
BURGONET. † of helmet.

Upon his head his glistening burganet,

The which was wrought by wonderous device,

And curiously engraven, he did fit.

Spenser, Muirpotmos.

This day I'll wear aloft my burgonet,

Even to affright thee with the view thereof.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

I was page to a footman, carrying after him his pike and burganet.

Hakewill on Providence.

BURGEOIS. n. s. [bourgeois, Fr.]

1. A citizen; a burges.

It is a republick itself, under the protection of the eight ancient cantons. There are in it an hundred bourgeois, and about a thousand souls. Addison on Italy.

2. A type of a particular sort, probably so called from him who first used it: such is the type, in which the examples to words are, in the present work, given.

To BURGEON. \ See To Bourgeon.* Often written
urgeon by our old authors.

BURGEON. \ n. s.* In gardening, a knot or button put forth by the branch of a tree in the spring. Chambers.

BURGESS. † n. s. [bourgeois, Fr. burgess, old Fr.
Roquefort, Gloss. de la Lang. Rom.]

1. A citizen; a freeman of a city or corporate town.

Twenty years have I lived

A burgess of the sea, and have been present

At many a desperate fight. Beaum. and Fl. Cont. of the Country.

Almost a constant burgess of the groves.

Sir R. Fanshew, Tr. of Pastor Fido, p. 18.

2. A representative of a town corporate.

The whole case was dispersed by the knights of shires, and burgesses of towns through all the veins of the land. Wotton.

BURGESS-SHIP. \ n. s.* The state and quality of a burgess.

One of our burgess-ships is vacant by the promotion of Sir Heneage Finch.

South, Lett. to Bathurst, Warton's Life of Bathurst, p. 174.

BURGH. † n. s. [Sax. burg, from the Goth. baurgs, a city; old Fr. bourg; Germ. bourg; low Lat. bur- gus; Gr. ὑργος; in the Macedonian dialect, ὑργος, a tower. V. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. et Gr.
Wachter derives the Germ. bourg, from bergen, to cover, to protect, or fortify. See BURG, and BOROUGH.] A corporate town or borough.

Many towns in Cornwall, when they were first allowed to send burgesses to the parliament, bore another proportion to London than now; for several of these burghs send two burgesses, whereas London itself sends but four. Grant.

BURGHIER. n. s. [from burgh.] One who has a right to certain privileges in this or that place. Locke.

It irks me, the poor dappled fools,
Being native Burghers of this desert city,
Should in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakspeare, As you like it.

After the multitude of the common people was dismissed, and the chief of the burghers sent for, the imperious letter was read before the better sort of citizens.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

BURGHERSHIP. n. s. [from burgher.] The privilege of a burgher.

BURGLAR. † n. s. [written also burglarer or burglerer, and burglayer.] The former agrees with its derivation from burglary; but the latter would suggest an etymology from burgh and lay, which is not intelligible.] One guilty of the crime of house-breaking.

Sir William Briau was sent to the tower, only for procuring the pope's bull against certain burglerers that robbed his own house.

Id. Northampton, Proc. against Garnet, G. g. 2.

If in this resistance the thief, or burglayer, miscarry, his blood will be upon his own head.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. it. 1.

BURGLARIOUS. * adj. [from burglar.] Relating to the crime of housebreaking. Ash.

BURGLARY. n. s. [from burg, a house, and larron, a thief.] In the natural signification, is nothing but the robbing of a house: but as it is a term of art, our common lawyers restrain it to robbing a house by night, or breaking in with an intent to rob, or do some other felony. The like offence committed by day, they call house-robbing, by a peculiar name.

Coxet.

What say you, father? Burglary is but a venial sin among soldiers.

Dryden, Spanish Fryar.

BURGMASER. See BURGOMASTER.

BURGMOTE. * n. s. [from burgh and mote. See MOTE.] A borough court.

The king sent a notification of these proceedings to each burgmote, where the people of that court also swore to the observance of them. Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

BURGOMASTER. n. s. [from burg and master.] One employed in the government of a city.

They chuse their councils and burgomasters out of the burgois, as in the other governments of Switzerland. Addison.

BURGRAVE. * n. s. [from bourg, and graf or grave, Germ. a count.] An hereditary governour of a castle, or fortified town.

Four marquesses, four landgraves, four burggraves, four carles, &c. Bale, Acts of Eng. Volaries. P. ii. sign. B. 8. b.

BURGUNDY. * n. s. Wine that is made in Burgundy.

The mellow-tasted burgundy. Thomson, Autumn, ver. 703.

BURH, is a tower; and from that, a defence or protection; so Cwenburh is a woman ready to assist; Cuthbur, eminent for assistance. Gibson's Camden.

BURIAL. n. s. [from To bury.]

1. The act of burying; sepulture; interment. Nor would we deem him burial of his men. Shakspeare.

See my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,

Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,

To kiss her burial. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

VOL. I.

Your body I sought, and had I found,
Design'd for burial in your native ground. Dryden, Æneid.

2. The act of placing any thing under earth or water.

We have great lakes, both salt and fresh; we use them for burials of some natural bodies: for we find a difference of things buried in earth, and things buried in water. Bacon.

3. The church service for funerals.

The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of interment, if not prohibited unto persons excommunicated, and laying violent hands on themselves, by a rubrick of the burial service. Ayliffe, Parergon.

BURIAL-PLACE. * n. s. [from burial and place.] A place set apart for burial.

These are the souls of wicked, not of virtuous men, which are thus forced to wander amidst burial-places, suffering the punishment of an impious life.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

BURIER. † n. s. [from bury.] He that buries; he that performs the act of interment.

And the passengers that pass through the land, when any seeth a man's bone, then shall he set up a sign by it, till the buriers have buried it. Ezek. xxxix. 15.

Let one spirit of the first-born Cain

Reign in all bosoms, that, each heart being set

On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,

And darkness be the burier of the dead. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

BURINE. n. s. [French.] A graving tool; a graver.

Wit is like the graver's burne upon copper, or the corroding of aquafortis, which engrave and indent the characters, that they can never be defaced. Government of the Tongue.

TO BURL. † v. a. To dress cloth as fullers do.

In the manufacturing of white cloths for dying, the process of clearing it of the knots, ends of thread, and the like, with little iron nippers called in our old lexicography urling-irons, is termed urling. Whence this word is derived, I know not; but it is curious to observe, that in a Scottish act of parliament (in 1451) "money urlit and clippit" occurs: which is analogous to our technical word.

BURLER. * n. s. [from the verb.] A dresser of cloth; he who clips off the ends and threads.

Soon the clothier's sheers,

And urler's thistle, skin the surface keen. Dyer's Fleece.

BURPLACE. n. s. [corruptly written for burdclais.] A sort of grape.

BURLESQUE. † adj. [Fr. burlesque, Ital. burlesco, from burles, to jest; which may be from the low Lat. burdare, that is, to boord, or joke. See BOURN.] Jocular; tending to raise laughter, by unnatural or unsuitable language or images.

Homer, in his character of Vulcan and Thersites, in his story of Mars and Venus, in his behaviour of Irus, and in other passages, has been observed to have lapsed into the burlesque character, and to have departed from that serious air, essential to the magnificence of an epic poem. Addison, Spect.

BURLESQUE. † n. s. Ludicrous language, or ideas; ridicule.

Who make but a jest of it at the best; if not a subject of burlesk and drollery. Wallis's Sermons, (1682.) p. 3.

When a man lays out a twelvemonth on the spots in the sun, however noble his speculations may be, they are very apt to fall into burlesque. Addison on Ancient Medals.

TO BURLESQUE. † v. a. [from the adjective.] To turn to ridicule.

'Tis foppish to speak of religion but in raillery; or to mention such a thing as Scripture, except it be to burlesque and deride it. Johnson's Sermon, iv. 194.

Would Homer apply the epithet divine to a modern swine-herd? if not, it is an evidence, that Eumæus was a man of consequence, otherwise Homer would burlesque his own poetry.

Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

BURLESQUE.* n. s. [from burlesque.] He who turns a circumstance into ridicule.

BURLETTA.* n. s. [Ital. from burlare, to jest.] A word of late introduction into our language, meaning generally a musical farce.

BURLINESS.† n. s. [from burly.] Bulk; bluster. Into a lesser room thy burliness to bring.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 8.

BURLY.† adj. [Junius has no etymology; Skinner imagines it to come from boorlike, clownish, Dr. Johnson says. Sir T. More, I may add, in his Life of King Richard III. writes boorely, for boorlike, which countenances Skinner's conjecture. Mr. Malone is also of this opinion.]

1. Great of stature; great of size; bulky; tumid. Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burly boned clown in chins of beef, ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove that thou mayest be turned into hobnails.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

It was the orator's own burley way of nonsense. Cowley.
Away with all your Carthaginian state,
Let vanquish'd Hannibal without doors wait,
Too burly and too big to pass my narrow gate. Dryden.
Her husband being a very burly man, she thought it would be less trouble for her to bring away little Cupid.

Addison, Spect.

2. Replete; full; without vacuity. 'Twixt their burly sacks, and full stuff'd barns, they stand.

Drayton, Polyolbion, S. 14.

3. Boisterous; loud. [Teut. borlen, to make a noise. This sense is unnoticed by our lexicographers. The example presents a very fine specimen of our old and forgotten poetry.]

So when a burly tempest rolls his pride
About the world; though mighty cedars bow,
Though seas give way unto his greater tide,
Though mountains lay their proudest heads full low
Before his feet; yet still he roars again,
And rusheth on in blustering disdain.

Beaumont, Psyche, v. st. 224.

To BURN.† v. a. preterite and participle, burned, or burnt. [beynan, bynnan, Sax.]

1. To consume with fire. They burnt Jericho with fire. Joshua, vi. 24.
The fire burneth the wood. Psalms lxxiii. 14.

Altar of Syrian mode, whereon to burn
His odious offerings. Milton, P. L.
That where she fed his amorous desires
With soft complaints, and felt his hottest fires,
There other flames might waste his carthy part,
And burn his limbs where love had burn'd his heart.

Dryden.

A fleshy excrescence, becoming exceeding hard, is supposed to demand extirpation, by burning away the induration, or amputating. Sharp's Surgery.

2. To wound or hurt with fire or heat. Hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe. Exodus, xxi. 25.

3. To exert the qualities of heat, as by drying or scorching; to communicate heat as to burn wine. See BURNT.

O that I could but weep, to vent my passion!
But this dry sorrow burns up all my tears. Dryden.

To BURN. v. n.

1. To be on fire; to be kindled. A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth; the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness. Isaiah, li. 2.

The mount burned with fire. Deut. ix. 15.

O coward conscience! how dost thou afflict me!

The light burns blue — Is it not dead midnight?

Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh. Shakespeare.

2. To shine; to sparkle.

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,

Burnt on the water.

Shakespeare.

Oh! prince, oh! wherefore burn your eyes? and why

Is your sweet temper turn'd to fury?

Rowe.

3. To be inflamed with passion, or desire.

When I burnt in desire to question them farther, they made themselves air, into which they vanished. Shakespeare.

Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,

If I achieve not this young modest girl!

Shakespeare.

In Raleigh mark their every glory mix'd;

Raleigh, the scourge of Spain! whose breast with all

The sage, the patriot, and the hero burn'd.

Thomson.

4. To act with destructive violence, used of the passions.

Shall thy wrath burn like fire?

Psalms lxxxix. 46.

5. To be in a state of destructive commotion.

The nations bleed where'er her steps she turns,

The groan still deepens and the combat burns.

Popc.

6. It is used particularly of love.

She burns, she raves, she dies, 'tis true,

But burns, and raves and dies for you.

Addison.

BURN.† n. s. [Sax. bynn.] A hurt caused by fire.

We see the phlegm of vitriol is a very effectual remedy against burns. Boyle.

BURNABLE.* adj. [from burn.] That which may be burnt up; adustible. Cotgrave in V. Adustible.

BURNER.† n. s. [from burn.] A person that burns any thing.

They [Pagans] were great burners and destroyers of Holy Scriptures. Brevint's Saul and Samuel at Endor, p. 376.

BURNET. n. s. [pimpinella, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The even mead that erst brought sweetly forth,

The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover.

Shakespeare.

BURNING.† n. s. [Sax. bæpning.]

1. Fire; flame; state of inflammation.

The mind, surely, of itself, can feel none of the burnings of a fever. South.

In liquid burnings, or on dry to dwell,

Is all the sad variety of hell.

Dryden.

2. The thing to be burned.

Thou shalt die in peace; and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so shall they burn odours for thee. Jerem. xxxiv. 5.

3. The act of burning.

The persecutions in the Thyatirian interval were usually burnings, and rackings, and wasting away their lives in miserable imprisonments. More's Seven Churches, ch. 6.

BURNING. adj. [from the participle.] Vehement; powerful.

These things sting him

So venomously, that burning shame detains him

From his Cordelia.

Shakespeare.

I had a glimpse of him; but he shot by me

Like a young hound upon a burning scent.

Dryden.

BURNING-GLASS. n. s. [from burning and glass.] A glass which collects the rays of the sun into a narrow compass, and so increases their force.

The appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass. Shakespeare.

Love is of the nature of a burning-glass, which, kept still in one place, fireth; changed often, it doth nothing. Suckling.

O diadem, thou centre of ambition,

Where all its different lines are reconciled,

As if thou wert the burning-glass of glory!

Dryden.

To BURNISH.† v. a. [burnir, Fr. Formerly, brunir; Ital. brunire; Span. brunir; probably from the low Lat. brunus, a coat of mail, which was in old times highly polished. "It was formerly written by the English born or burn. Chaucer's temple of Mars is "wrought all of burned steel," Knight's Tale; and Gower has "burned gold," Conf. Am. B. I. Coles, in his dictionary, notices the verb born for burnish.] To polish; to give a gloss to.

Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd delivery of the burnish'd sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred. Shakespeare.

Make a plate of thain, and burnish it as they do iron. Bacon.

The frame of burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden.

To BU'RNISH. v. n. To grow bright or glossy.

I've seen a snake in human form,

All stain'd with infamy and vice,

Leap from the dunghill in a trice,

Burnish, and make a gawdy show,

Become a general, peer, and beau. Swift.

To BU'RNISH. v. n. [of uncertain etymology.] To grow; to spread out.

This they could do, while Saturn fill'd the throne,

Ere Juno burnish'd, or young Jove was grown. Dryden.

To shoot, and spread, and burnish into man. Dryden.

Mrs. Primley's great belly she may lace down before, but it burnishes on her hips. Congreve, Play of the World.

BU'RNISH.* n. s. [from the verb.] A gloss.

Blushes, that bin

The burnish of no sin,

Nor flames of aught too hot within. Crashaw's Poems, p. 226.

BU'RNISHER. n. s. [from burnish.]

1. The person that burnishes or polishes.

2. The tool with which bookbinders give a gloss to the leaves of books: it is commonly a dog's tooth set in a stick.

BURNT. particip. pass. of burn: applied to liquours, it means made hot.

I find it very difficult to know,

Who, to refresh th' attendants to a grave,

Burnt claret first, or Naples biscuit gave. King's Cookery.

BURR.* n. s. Used, in many places, for the sweet-bread.

BURR. n. s. The lobe or lap of the ear. Dict.

BURR Pump. [In a ship.] A pump by the side of a ship, into which a staff seven or eight feet long is put; having a burr or knob of wood at the end, which is drawn up by a rope fastened to the middle of it, called also a bilge pump. Harris.

BU'RRAS Pipe. [With surgeons.] An instrument or vessel used to keep corroding powers in, as vitriol, precipitate. Harris.

BU'RREL Fly. [from bourreler, Fr. to execute, to torture.] An insect, called also oxfly, gadbec, or breeze. Dict.

BU'RREL Shot. [from bourreler, to execute, and shot.] In gunnery, small bullets, nails, stones, pieces of old iron, &c. put into cases, to be discharged out of the ordnance; a sort of caseshot. Harris.

BU'BROCK. n. s. A small wear or dam, where weels are laid in a river for catching fish. Phillips.

BURROW, BERG, BURG, BURGH.† n. s. [derived from the Saxon bunz, bynz, a city, tower, or castle. Gipson's Camden. See also BURGH.]

1. A corporate town, that is not a city, but such as sends burgesses to the parliament. All places that, in former days, were called boroughs, were such as were fenced or fortified. Cowel.

King of England shalt thou be proclaim'd

In every burrow, as we pass along. Shakespeare.

Possession of land was the original right of election among the commons; and burrows were entitled to it as they were possessed of certain tracts. Temple.

2. The holes made in the ground by conies. [Teut. bergen, to cover. See To BURY.]

When they shall see his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like conies after rain, and revel all with him. Shakespeare.

3. The improper word for barrow, a mount. See BARROW.

Upon a single view, and outward observation, they [tumuli, or artificial hills] may be the monuments of any of these three nations; although the greatest number, not improbably, of the Saxons; who fought many battles with the Britains and Danes, and also between their own nations; and left the proper name of burrows for these hills, still retained in many of them, as the seven burrows upon Salisbury plain, and in many other parts of England. Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 154.

To BU'RRROW. v. n. [from the noun.] To make holes in the ground; to mine, as conies or rabbits.

Some strew sand among their corn, which they say, prevents mice and rats burrowing in it; because of its falling into their ears. Mortimer.

Little sinuses would form, and burrow underneath. Sharp.

BU'RSAR.† n. s. [bursarius, Lat. boursier, Fr. from bourse, a purse. The purser of a ship is the bursar.]

1. The treasurer of a college.

λογιστής, or γραμματικός, was the bursar, who kept the accounts and registered all the receipts and expences of the ship. Potter, Antiq. of Greece, ii. 148.

To offices I'd bid adieu,
Of dean, vice-pres, of bursar too.

T. Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

2. Students sent as exhibitioners to the universities in Scotland by each presbytery, from whom they have a small yearly allowance for four years.

BU'RSARSHIP.* n. s. [from bursar.] The office of bursar.

Not the plotting for an headship, (for that is now become a court-business,) but the contriving of a bursarship of twenty nobles a year, is many times done with as great a portion of suing, siding, &c. Hales, Rem. p. 276.

BU'RSARY.* n. s. [from bursar.]

1. The treasury of a college.

2. In Scotland, an exhibition.

BURSE.† n. s. [bourse, Fr. bursa, Lat. a purse; or, from byrsa, Lat. the exchange of Carthage.] An exchange where merchants meet, and shops are kept; so called, because the sign of the purse was anciently set over such a place; the Exchange in the Strand was termed Britain's Bourse by James I. Phillips.

Fraternities and companies I approve of, such as merchants' burses, colleges of druggers, physicians, musicians, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

Tattellus, the new-come traveller,
With his disguised coat and ringed ear,
Trampling the bourse's marble twice a day,
Tells nothing but stark truths I dare well say!

Sp. Hall, Satires, vi. 1.

Whether the Britaine burse did fill apace,
And likely were to give the Exchange disgrace.

Donne's Poems, p. 94.

To BURST.† v. n. I burst; I have burst, or bursten. [burstan, Saxon.]

1. To break, or fly open; to suffer a violent disruption.

So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine. Prov. iii. 10.

It is ready to burst like new bottles. Job, xxxii. 19.

The egg that soon

Bursting with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd
The callow young. Milton, P. L.

2. To fly asunder.

Yet am I thankful; if my heart were great,
'Twould burst at this. Shakspeare.

3. To break away; to spring.

You burst, ah cruel! from my arms,
And swiftly shoot along the Mall,
Or softly glide by the Canal. Pope.

4. To come suddenly.

A resolved villain,
Whose bowels suddenly burst out; the king
Yet speaks, and, peradventure, may recover. Shakspeare.

If the worlds
In worlds inclos'd shou'd on his senses burst,
He wou'd abhorrent turn. Thomson, Summer

5. To come with violence.

Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice;
For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear, we should have seen decypher'd there
More rancorous spite. Shakspeare.

Where is the notable passage over the river Euphrates, bursting out by the vallies of the mountain Antitaurus; from whence the plains of Mesopotamia, then part of the Persian kingdom, begin to open themselves. Kneller.

[They] bursting forth •

Afresh with conscious terrors vex me round.
Milton, P. L. ii. 800.

Young spring protrudes the bursting gems. Thomson.

6. To begin an action violently or suddenly.

Thrice he assay'd, and thrice, in spite of scorn,
Tears, such as angels weep, burst forth. Milton, P. L. i. 620.

She burst into tears, and wrung her hands. Arbutnot.

To BURST. v. a. To break suddenly; to make a quick and violent disruption.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet. Shakspeare.

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,
As if he would burst heaven. Shakspeare.

I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds. Jer. xxx. 8.

Moses saith also, the fountains of the great abyss were burst asunder, to make the deluge; and what means this abyss, and the bursting of it, if restrained to Judea? what appearance is there of this disruption there? Burnet's Theory.

If the juices of an animal body were, so as by the mixture of the opposites, to cause an ebullition, they would burst the vessels.
Arbutnot.

BURST. n. s. [from the verb.] A sudden disruption;
a sudden and violent action of any kind.

Since I was man,
Such sheets of fire, such burst of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Down they came, and drew
The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder,
Upon the heads of all. Milton, S. A.

Imprison'd fires, in the close dungeons pent,
Roar to get loose, and struggle for a vent;
Eating their way, and undermining all,
Till with a mighty burst whole mountains fall. Addison.

BURST.† } particip. adj. [Sax. byrston.] Diseased
BURSTEN. } with a hernia, or rupture.

He was born bursten; and your worship knows, that is a pretty step to men's compassions.

Beaumont and Fl. Scornful Lady.

BURSTINESS.† n. s. [from burst.] A rupture, or hernia. Sherwood.

BURT. n. s. A flat fish of the turbot kind.

BURTHEN.† n. s. } See BURDEN. Burthen is the
To BURTHEN. v. a. } right spelling of the common acceptation of the word; though the example, which Dr. Johnson brings from Pope, belongs to the sense and orthography of burden, which require, on account of its French origin, the d instead of the th.

Drayton uses the burden of the song in the same manner.

Some roundelays do sing; the rest the burthen bear.

Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 14.

Sated to ridicule his whole life long,

And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope.

BURRON. n. s. [In a ship.] A small tackle to be fastened any where at pleasure, consisting of two single pulleys, for hoisting small things in or out.

Phillips.

BURY. n. s. [from byrg, Sax.] A dwelling-place;
a termination still added to the names of several places; as, Aldermanbury, St. Edmund's bury; sometimes written bery. Phillips.

BURY. n. s. [corrupted from borough.]

It is his nature to dig himself buries, as the coney doth; which he doth with very great celerity. Grew.

BURY PEAR.* [Fr. Beurée.] The name of a very tender and delicate pear. Cotgrave.

To BURY.† v. a. [Sax. byrgan, byrgan, byrian, from byrg or beop, a mound; derived from the
Got. berga, to cover; and Iceland. birgian.

"Among our Saxon ancestors, the dead bodies of such as were slain in the field were not laid in graves; but, lying upon the ground, were covered with turves or clods of earth; and the more in reputation the persons had been, the greater and higher were the turves raised over their bodies:
This some used to call biriging, some beorging of the dead; all being one thing, though differently pronounced, and from whence we yet retain our speech of burying the dead, that is, hiding the dead."
Verstegan.

1. To inter; to put into a grave.

When he lies along,

After your way his tale pronounc'd, shall bury
His reasons with his body. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

2. To inter, with the rites and ceremonies of sepulture.

Slave, thou hast slain me!

If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If you have kindness left, there see me laid;

To bury decently the injur'd maid,

Is all the favour. Waller.

3. To conceal; to hide.

This is the way to make the city flat,

And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,

In heaps and piles of ruin. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

4. To place one thing within another.

A tearing groan did break

The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips; she render'd life,

Thy name so bury'd in her. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

BURYING.* n. s. [from bury.] Burial; the solemnity of a funeral.

Against the day of my burying hath she kept this.

St. John, xii. 7.

Who finds her, give her burying;

She was the daughter of a king.

Shakspeare, Pericles.

BURYING-PLACE.† n. s. A place appointed for the sepulture of dead bodies.

They buried him, between Zorah and Eshtaol, in the burying-place of Manoah his father. Judges, xvi. 31.

The place was formerly a church-yard, and has still several marks in it of graves and burying-places. Spectator, No. 110.

BUSH. † n. s. [Teut. busch; Dan. busk; old Fr. bussuns, buissons, bushes, Kellham; now bois.]

1. A thick shrub.

Eff through the thick they heard one rudely rush,
With noise whereof, he from his lofty steed,
Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,
To hide his coward head from dying dread. Spenser, F. Q.

The poller, and exacter of fees, justifies the resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, wherein to while the sheep flies for defence from the weather, he is sure to lose part of the fleece. Bacon, Essays.

Her heart was that strange bush, whose sacred fire,
Religion did not consume, but inspire
Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,
That what we turn to feast, she turn'd to pray. Donne.

With such a care,
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still prefer them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

The sacred ground
Shall weeds and pois'nous plants refuse to bear;
Each common bush shall Syrian roses wear? Dryden, Virgil.

2. A bough of a tree fixed up at a door, to shew that liquours are sold there.

If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue. Shakspeare, As you Like it.

Twenty to one you find him at the bush;
There's the best ale. Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

3. The tail of a fox. Coles.

To BUSH. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow thick.

The roses bushing round
About her glow'd, half stooping to support
Each flow'r of tender stalk. Milton, P. L.

A gushing fountain broke
Around it, and above, for ever green,
The bushing alders form'd a shady scene. Pope, Odyssey.

BU'SHEL. † n. s. [old Fr. buschel; "bushel, measure appellée beiseau," Roquefort; low Lat. bussellus.]

1. A measure containing eight gallons; a strike.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff; you shall seek all day ere you find them; and when you have them, they are not worth the search. Shakspeare.

2. It is used, in common language, indefinitely for a large quantity.

The worthies of antiquity bought the rarest pictures with bushels of gold, without counting the weight or the number of pieces. Dryden, DuRoi's story.

3. Bushels of a cart-wheel. Irons within the hole of the nave, to preserve it from wearing. [from bouche, Fr. a mouth.] Dict.

BU'SHET. * n. s. See BUSKET.

BU'SHELAGE. * n. s. [from bushel.] Duty payable on every bushel of measurable commodities.

BU'SHINESS. n. s. [from bushy.] The quality of being bushy.

BU'SHMENT. n. s. [from bush.] A thicket; a cluster of bushes.

Princes thought how they might discharge the earth of woods, briars, bushments, and waters, to make it more habitable and fertile. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

BU'SHY. adj. [from bush.]

1. Thick; full of small branches, not high.

The gentle shepherd sat beside a spring,
All in the shadow of a bushy brier. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Dec.

Generally the cutting away of boughs and suckers at the root and body, doth make trees grow high; and, contrariwise, the polling and cutting of the top, make them spread and grow bushy. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Thick like a bush.

Statues of this god, with a thick bushy beard, are still many of them extant in Rome. Addison on Italy.

3. Full of bushes.

The kids with pleasure browse the bushy plain;
The show'rs are grateful to the swelling grain. Dryden.

BU'SILES. adj. [from busy.] At leisure; without business; unemployed.

The sweet thoughts do even refresh my labour,
Most business when I do it. Shakspeare.

BU'SILY. † adv. [from busy.]

1. With an air of importance; with an air of hurry.

2. Curiously; importunately.

Or if too bushy they will enquire
Into a victory, which we disdain,
Then let them know, the Belgians did retire,
Before the patron saint of injur'd Spain. Dryden.

3. Earnestly. Intentè, obnixè. Huloet.

BU'SINESS. † n. s. [old Fr. busoignes. But see BUSY.]

1. Employment; multiplicity of affairs.

Must business thee from hence remove?
Oh! that's the worst disease of love. Donne.

2. An affair. In this sense it has the plural.

Bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which crave the instant use. Shakspeare.

3. The subject of business; the affair or object that engages the care.

You are so much the business of our souls, that while you are in sight we can neither look nor think on any else; there are no eyes for other beauties. Dryden.

The great business of the senses, being to take notice of what hurts or advantages the body. Locke.

4. Serious engagement, in opposition to trivial transactions.

I never knew one, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself. Addison.

He had business enough upon his hands, and was only a poet by accident. Prior, Pref.

When diversion is made the business and study of life, though the actions chosen be in themselves innocent, the excess will render them criminal. Rogers.

5. Right of action.

What business has a tortoise among the clouds? L'Estrange.

6. A point; a matter of question; something to be examined or considered.

Fitness to govern, is a perplexed business; some men, some nations, excel in the one ability, some in the other. Bacon.

7. Something to be transacted.

They were far from the Zidonians, and had no business with any one. Judges, xviii. 7.

8. Something required to be done.

To those people that dwell under or near the equator, this spring would be most pestilent; as for those countries that are nearer the poles, in which number are our own, and the most considerable nations of the world, a perpetual spring will not do their business; they must have longer days, a nearer approach of the sun. Bentley.

9. To do one's business. To kill, destroy, or ruin him.

BUSK. n. s. [busque, Fr.] A piece of steel or whale-bone, worn by women to strengthen their stays.

Off with that happy busk which I envy,
That still can be, and still can stand so nigh. Donne.

BUSK. * n. s. [Dan. busk. See BUSH and BUSKET. Chaucer uses buske for bush repeatedly; and it is yet used in the north of England.] A bush.

And range amid the bushes thy selfe to feede. Davidson's Poetical Rapsodie, (1611,) p. 39.

To BUSK. * v. a. To make ready; a word still in use in the north of England. In Scotland it also signifies to dress, probably from the old Fr. bisque, part of the female attire. See BUSK. * A bonny bride is soon busket," Scotch Proverb. Our's is a secondary sense like that of dress, to prepare for any purpose, as well as to clothe.

The noble baron whet his courage hot,
And busket him boldly to the dreadful fight.

Fairfax, Tasso. (1600.)

BU'SKET. * n. s. [A diminutive of busk, the old commentator on Spenser says; a little bush of hawthorn. Old Fr. boschet, and in the ancient Provenc. boscat; Ital. boschetto, bosco; low Lat. boscus, wood.]

1. A sprig or small bush. It is busket in the English Glossography of 1707.

Youth folke now flocken in every where,
To gather May-busquets and smelling breere.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

2. A small compartment of gardens, formed of trees, shrubs, and tall flowering plants, set in quarters, and either placed regularly in rows, or disposed in a more regular manner. See Miller's Gard. Dict. But this meaning of the word disdains the anglicism of Spenser, and is written bosquet. Ray uses busket, like a true Englishman, for a little wood, Remains, p. 251.

BUSKIN. n. s. [brosken, Dutch.]

1. A kind of half boot; a shoe which comes to the midleg.

The foot was dressed in a short pair of velvet buskins; in some places open, to shew the fairness of the skin. Sidney.
Sometimes Diana he her takes to be,

But misseth bow, and shifts, and buskins to her knee.

Spenser, F. Q.

There is a kind of rusticity in all those pious verses, somewhat of a holiday shepherd strutting in his country buskins.

Dryden.

2. A kind of high shoe worn by the ancient actors of tragedy, to raise their stature.

Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,

No greater Jonson dares in socks appear.

Dryden.

In her best light the comick muse appears,

When she, with borrow'd pride, the buskin wears.

Smith.

BU'SKINED. † adj. [from buskin.]

1. Dressed in buskins.

Or what, though rare, of later age,

Ennobl'd hath the buskin'd stage?

Milton.

Here, arm'd with silver bows, in early dawn,

Her buskin'd virgins trac'd the dewy lawn.

Pope.

2. Relating to tragedy as represented on the stage.

Next, in a buskin'd strain,

Sang how himself he bore upon Damascus' plain.

Drayton's Polyolbion, S. 2.

In buskin'd measures move

Pale Grief, and pleasing Pain.

Gray, The Bard.

BU'SKY. adj. [written more properly by Milton, bosky. See BOSKY.] Woody; shaded with woods; overgrown with trees.

How bloodily the sun begins to peer

Above yon bosky hill!

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

BUSS. † n. s. [bus, the mouth, Irish; bouche, Fr. Dr. Johnson says. He might have added the Span.

bus. But, in fact, the etymology is the Lat. basium, from basiare, to kiss; and our oldest dictionaries give the English word bass for the kiss; as, "the mother alito basset her chylde," Vulg. Formanni, 1530, sign. Y. iii.; and even basser for the kisser. V. Huloet. Chancer and Skelton both use basse; and Cole, in his dictionary towards the close of the 17th century, gives bass for buss, and also to basiate.]

1. A kiss; a salute with the lips.

Thou dost give me flattering busses.—By my troth, I kiss thee with a most constant heart. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

Some squire perhaps you take delight to rack,

Who visits with a gun, presents with birds,

Then gives a smacking buss.

Pope.

2. A boat for fishing. [busse, German.]

If the king would enter towards building such a number of boats and busses, as each company could easily manage, it would be an encouragement both of honour and advantage.

Temple.

To BUSS. v. a. [from the noun.] To kiss; to salute with the lips.

Yonder walls, that partly front your town,
Yond towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,

Must kiss their feet. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,

Thy knee bussing the stones; for in such business,

Action is eloquence. Shakespeare, Coriol.

BUST. † n. s. [buste, old Fr. busto, Ital.] A statue representing a man to his breast. See BUSTO.

Agrippa, or Caligula, is a common coin, but a very extraordinary bust; and a Tiberius, a rare coin, but a common bust.
Addison on Italy.

Ambition sigh'd: she found it vain to trust
The faithless column, and the crumbling bust.

Pope.

BU'STARD. n. s. [bistarde, Fr.] A wild turkey.

His sacrifices were phenicopters, peacocks, bustards, turkeys, pheasants; and all these were daily offered.

Hakewill.

To BU'STLE. † v. n. [of uncertain etymology; perhaps from busy; or from brustle, by dropping the r; just as buskin is from brosken. See To BRUSTLE.] To be busy; to stir; to be active.

Come, bustle, bustle—caparison my horse.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

God take king Edward to his mercy,

And leave the world for me to bustle in.

Shakespeare, Ib.

Sir Henry Vane was a busy and bustling man, who had credit enough to do his business in all places.

Clarendon.

A poor abject worm,

That crawl'd awhile upon a bustling world,

And now am trampled to my dust again. Southerne, Oroonoko.

Ye sov'reign lords, who sit like gods in state,

Awing the world, and bustling to be great!

Granville.

BU'STLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A tumult; hurry; a combustion.

Wisdom's self

Oft seeks to sweet retired solitude;

Where, with her best nurse, Contemplation,

She plumes her feathers, and lets grow her wings,

That, in the various bustle of resort,

Were all-to ruffled.

Milton, Cornus.

This is the creature that pretends to knowledge, and that makes such a noise and bustle for opinions.

Granville, Scepstis.

Such a doctrine made a strange bustle and disturbance in the world, which then sate warm and easy in a free enjoyment of their lusts.

South.

If the count had given them a pot of ale after it, all would have been well, without any of this bustle.

Spectator, No. 481.

BU'STLER. † n. s. [from bustle.] An active stirring man.

Forgive him, then, that bustler in concerns

Of little worth.

Cowper's Task, b. 6.

BU'STO. * n. s. [Ital. busto.] A statue. See BUST.

The entrance to the royal apartment is through a vestibulo supported with pillars, with some antick bustoes in the niches.

Ashmole, Berk. iii. 115.

Worn on the edge of days, the brass consumes,

The busto moulders, and the deep-cut marble;

Unsteady to the steel, gives up its charge.

R. Blair, The Grave.

BUT

BU'SY.† adj. [Sax. byr, byrig, from byrgan, which may be perhaps from the Goth. anabusns, a command; Dutch, besigh; old Fr. busoin, or busoign; modern, besogne. See BUSINESS. It is pronounced bizzy.]

1. Employed with earnestness.

My mistress sends you word, that she is busy, and cannot come. Shakspeare, Tam. of Shrew.

2. Bustling; active; meddling.

The next thing which she waking looks upon,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,
She shall pursue it with the soul of love. Shakspeare.

Thus busy pow'r is working day and night;
For when the outward senses rest do take,
A thousand dreams, fantastical and light,
With fluttering wings, do keep her still awake. Davies.

The coming spring would first appear,
And all this place with roses strow,
If busy feet would let them grow. Waller.

All written since that time, seem to have little more than events we are glad to know, or the controversy of opinions, wherein the busy world has been so much employed. Temple.
Religious motives and instincts are so busy in the heart of every reasonable creature, that no man would hope to govern a society, without regard to those principles. Addison, Freeholder.

3. Troublesome; vexatiously importunate or intensive.

The christians, sometimes valiantly receiving the enemy, and sometimes charging them again, repulsed the proud enemy, still busy with them. Knutles, History of the Turks.

To BU'SY. v. a. [from the noun.] To employ; to engage; to make or keep busy.

He in great passion all this while did dwell,
More busying his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell. Spenser, F. Q.

The pleasure which I took at my friend's pleasure herein,
Idly busied me thus to express the same. Carew, Survey.

Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

While they were busied to lay the foundations, their buildings were overthrown by an earthquake, and many thousands of the Jews were overwhelmed. Raleigh.

The points which busied the devotion of the first ages, and the curiosity of the latter. Decay of Pety.

The ideas it is busied about, should be natural and congenial ones, which it had in itself. Locke.

The learning and disputes of the schools have been much busied about genus and species. Locke.

For the rest, it must be owned, he does not busy himself, by entering deep into any party, but rather spends his time in acts of hospitality. Swift.

BU'SYBODY. n. s. [from busy and body.] A vain, meddling, fantastical person.

Going from house to house, tatlers and busybodies, are the canker and rust of idleness, as idleness is the rust of time. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Busybodies and intermeddlers are a dangerous sort of people to have to do withal. L'Esrange.

She is well acquainted with all the favourite servants, busybodies, dependants, and poor relations of all persons of condition in the whole town. Spectator, No. 437.

BUT.† conjunct. [bute, butan, Saxon; formerly written bot, to distinguish it from the preposition but. Dr. Johnson considers but only as a conjunction; whereas it is, in fact, a conjunction, preposition, adverb, and interjection; as Dr. Adam Smith long since ingeniously proved. His examples, assigned to the conjunction, sometimes illustrate the word as a preposition and adverb; and are therefore now separated. Nor has he given every meaning of the conjunction. Mr. Tooke contends, that but is the imperative of the Sax. beon-utan, to be out; and bot, of the Sax. botan, to boot. But the Sax. verb is betan. However the word may be derived, it has hitherto, in our dictionaries, been very inaccurately explained. It is pronounced bout in our northern counties.]

BUT

1. Except.

An emission of immaterial virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it is so prodigious; but that it is so constantly avouched by many. Bacon.

2. Except then; had it not been that: in this sense we now write but that. See sense 8.

And but infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability; he had himself
The lands and waters measur'd. Shakspeare.

3. Yet; nevertheless. It sometimes only enforces yet.

Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without shall hear his voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and exile, like the voice of puppets: and yet the articulate sounds of the words will not be confounded. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Our wants are many, and grievous to be born, but quite of another kind. Swift.

4. The particle which introduces the minor of a syllogism; now.

If there be a liberty and possibility for a man to kill himself to-day, then it is not absolutely necessary that he shall live till to-morrow; but there is such a liberty, therefore no such necessity. Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world: therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made. Watts, Logic.

5. Than, or that; according as the particles of negation no or not are placed or understood in the sentence: when preceding but, implying than; when following it, that: as, the full moon was no sooner up, than he privately opened the gate of paradise; i. e. but he opened: There is no question, that the king of Spain will not reform most of the abuses, i. e. but he will reform.

The full moon was no sooner up and shining in all its brightness, but he privately opened the gate of Paradise. Guardian, No. 167.

There is no question but the king of Spain will reform most of the abuses. Addison on Italy.

6. But that; without this consequence that.

Frosts that constrain the ground,
Do seldom their usurping power withdraw,
But raging floods pursue their hasty hand. Dryden.

7. Otherwise than that.

It cannot be but nature hath some director, of infinite power, to guide her in all her ways. Hooker, i. § 3.

Who shall believe,
But you misuse the reverence of your place? Shakspeare.

8. If it were not for this; if it were not that. Obsolete.

Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse
Full of cruzades. And, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness,
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill-thinking. Freholder.

I here do give thee that with all my heart
Which but thou hast already, with all my.] A plant used in I would keep from thee.

9. However; howbeit; a word of great plenty by the nation.

I do not doubt but I have a yellow flower with which the But, to pursue the end of the month of May.
Unite your subjects from butterflies appear.
And pour their coral of daisies, hemlock bear Gay.

10. It is used. n. s. [butterplege, Saxon.] A beautiful word, and, so named because it first appears in the master of the of the season for butter.

I fancied to myself a kind of ease in the change of the paroxysm; never suspecting but that the humour would have wasted itself. Dryden.

11. That. This seems no proper sense in this place. It is not therefore impossible, but I may alter the complexion of my play, to restore myself into the good graces of my fair critics. Dryden, Aurengz. Pref.

12. A particle by which the meaning of the foregoing sentence is bounded or restrained; only; Dr. Johnson says. Dr. Adam Smith, in the same example, explains it only. But it is apparently except; formidable to all, except his friends.

Thus fights Ulysses, thus his fame extends,
A formidable man, but to his friends. Dryden.

13. A particle of objection; yet it may be objected: it has sometimes yet with it.

But yet, madam—

I do not like but yet; it does allay
The good precedent; fie upon but yet!

But yet is as a jailour, to bring forth

Some monstrous malfactor. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Must the heart, then have been formed and constituted, before the blood was in being? But here again, the substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley.

14. A particle of addition, or affirmation.

Courage is the greatest security; for it does most commonly safeguard the man, but always rescues the condition from an intolerable evil. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, iii. 2.

BUTTERY. adj. [from butter.] Having the appearance or quality of butter.

Nothing more convertible into hot choleric humours than its buttery parts.

Harvey on Consumptions.

The best oils, thickened by cold, have a white colour; and milk itself has its whiteness from the caseous fibres, and its buttery oil.

Floyer, on the Humours.

BUTTERY.† n. s. [from butter; or, according to Skinner, from bouter, Fr. to place or lay up.] The room where provisions are laid up.

Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery,
And give them friendly welcome every one.

Shakspeare.

All that need a cool and fresh temper, as cellars, pantries, and butteries, to the north.

Wotton.

I pray you bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

I know you were one could keep
The buttery-hatch still lock'd, and save the chippings.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

Every person, failing or neglecting then to perform the said exercise, shall thereon have his name struck out of the buttery-book of the college or hall whereof he is a member.

Life of Dr. Humph. Præmedus, p. 217.

My guts ne'er suffer'd from a college cook,
My name ne'er enter'd in a buttery-book.

Bramston, Man of Taste.

BUTROCK. n. s. [supposed by Skinner to come from aboutir, Fr. inserted by Junius without etymology.] The rump; the part near the tail.

BUT

It is like a barber's chair, that fits all buttocks. Shakspeare.
Such as were not able to stay themselves, should be holden up by others of more strength, riding behind them upon the buttocks of the horse.

Kaollen, Hist. of the Turks.

The tail of a fox was never made for the buttocks of an ape.

L'Estrange, Fables.

BUTTON. n. s. [button, Welsh; bouton, Fr.]

1. A catch, or small ball, by which the dress of man is fastened.

Pray you, undo this button.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I mention those ornaments, because of the simplicity of the shape, want of ornaments, buttons, loops, gold and silver lace, they must have been cheaper than ours.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Any knob or ball, fastened to a smaller body.

We fastened to the marble certain wires and a button.

Boyle.

Thir from its humble bed I rear'd this flower,
Suckled and cheer'd, with air, and sun, and shower;
Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread,
Bright with the gilded button tip its head.

Pope, Dunciad.

3. The bud of a plant.

The canker galls the infants of the spring,
Too oft before their buttons be disclos'd.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

BUTRON. n. s. [echinus marinus.] The sea urchin, which is a kind of crabfish that has prickles instead of feet.

Ainsworth.

TO BUTRON.† v. a. [from the noun. Fr. also boutonner, to bud or open out; also to button or clasp. Cotgrave.]

1. To dress; to clothe.

One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel.

Shakspeare.

He gave his legs, arm, and breast, to his ordinary servant, to button and dress him.

Wotton.

2. To fasten with buttons; as, he buttons his coat.

BUTTONHOLE. n. s. [from button and hole.] The loop in which the button of the clothes is caught.

Let me take you a buttonhole lower.

I'll please the maids of honour, if I can:

Without black velvet breeches, what is man?

I will my skill in buttonholes display,

And brag how oft I shift me every day.

Bramston, Man of Taste.

BUTTONMAKER.* n. s. [from button and maker.] He who makes or sells buttons.

It was tricked up with a great many long ropes of wooden beads hanging upon it, and somewhat resembling the furniture of a button-maker's shop.

Mandrell's Travels, p. 13.

BUTTRESS. n. s. [from aboutir, Fr.]

1. A prop; a wall built to support another wall, and standing out.

No jutting frieze,

Buttress, not coigne of vantage, but this bird

Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.

Fruit trees, set upon a wall against the sun, between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall.

Bacon.

But we inhabit a weak city here,

Which buttresses and props but scarcely bear.

Dryden, Juv.

2. A prop; a support.

It will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up against us, as the ground pillar and buttress of the good old cause of non-conformity.

South.

TO BUTTRESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To prop; to support.

BUTWINK. n. s. The name of a bird.

Dict.

BUTYRÆOUS. adj. [butyrum, Lat. butter.] Having the qualities of butter.

Chyle has the same principles as milk; a viscidty from the caseous parts, and an oiliness from the butyræous parts.

Floyer.

BUTYROUS. adj. [butyrum, Lat.] Having the properties of butter.

Its oily red part is from the bulyrons, parts of chyle.

Floyer, on the Humours.

BU'XOM. † adj. [bucrum, Sax. from buzan, to bend. It originally signified obedient, as John de Trevisa, a clergyman, tells his patron that he is "obedient and bucrom to all his commands." In an old form of marriage, used before the reformation, the bride promised to be "obedient and buxom, in bed and a-board;" from which expression, not well understood, its present meaning seems to be derived. Spenser connects it with its original bent, and thus exhibits the force of the expression as strongly as that in the form of marriage, or rather more strongly; for the words in the old form are "bonair and buxom," which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. See BOVAIR. Spenser describes many falling into mischief, all for they noulde be bucome and bent." Shep. Cal. Sept. ver. 149; where his contemporary commentator explains the words "mecke and obedient."]

1. Obedient; obsequious; yielding.

He did tread down and disgrace all the English, and set up and countenance the Irish; thinking thereby to make them more tractable and buxom to his government.

Spenser, on Ireland.

Then with quick fan

Winnows the buxom air.

Milton, P. I.

2. Gay; lively; brisk.

Pin born

Again a fresh child of the buxom morn,
Heir of the sun's first beams.

Zephyr, with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a maying,
Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire.

Milton, L'Allegro.

Sturdy swains,

In clean array, for rustick dance prepare,
Mixt with the buxom damselfs hand in hand.

Phillips.

3. Wanton; jolly.

Almighty Jove descends, and pours

Like his buxom bride his fruitful showers.

Dryden, Virg.

She feigned the rites of Bacchus! cry'd aloud,

And to the buxom god the virgin vow'd.

Dryden, Ib.

BU'XOMLY. † adv. [from buxom.]

1. Dutifully; obediently. Of this old meaning of the adverb Dr. Johnson has taken no notice.

I, without noise or crie,

My plaint make all buxomly,

To putten all wrath awaie.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

2. Wantonly; amorously.

BU'XOMNESS. † n. s. [Sax. bucrumneffe.] Written formerly bughsoneness, buhsoneness, and bowsomness; all referrible to buzan, to bend or bow. See Verstegan, Restit. of Antiq. p. 231. Dr. Johnson has defined this word by wantonness and amorousness; of which meaning, however, he produces no example. Our old language presents the word in the sense of meekness and obedience.

That thee is sent, receyve in bucrumness.

Chaucer, Good Counsel.

Pliableness or bawsoneness, to wit, humbly stooping or bowing down, in sign of obedience.

Verstegan.

Whom the divine bucrumness for his ineffable justice hath now late taken to his grace.

Arnold's Chronicle, Sign. L. iii. b.

TO BUY. † v. a. preter. I bought; I have bought. [Goth. bugian, to buy, bauht, participle. Sax. bigan.]

1. To purchase; to acquire by paying a price; to obtain for money, or something equivalent; to procure by sale, not gift or theft.

They must buy up no corn growing within twelve miles of Geneva, that so the filling of their magazines may not prejudice their market.

Addison on Italy.

2. To pay dearly for, in the sense of aby. See To AVE. Dr. Johnson thinks that Shakspeare, in the following passage, wrote the word 'by,' as a contraction of aby. But see To BY.

Nay, then thou mock'st me. Thou shalt buy this dear,
If ever I thy face by daylight see.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

3. To procure some advantage by something that deserves it, or at some price.

I have bought

Golden opinions from all sorts of people.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Pent to finger

But with a grain a day, I would not buy

Their mercy at the price of one fair word.

Pleasure with praise, and danger they would buy,

And with a foe that would not only fly.

Denham.

4. To regulate by money; in this sense it has particles annexed.

You, and all the Kings of Christendom,

Are led so grossly by this meddling priest,

Dreading the curse that money may buy out.

Shakspeare, K. John.

What pitiful things are power, rhetorick, or riches, when they would terrify, dissuade, or buy off conscience?

South.

TO BUY. v. n. To treat about a purchase.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

BU'YER. n. s. [from To buy.] He that buys; a purchaser.

When a piece of art is set before us, let the first caution be, not to ask who made it, lest the fame of the author do captivate the fancy of the buyer.

Hutton's Architecture.

BUZ. † interject. [The etymology and origin of this phrase is uncertain.] An exclamation, often used, in modern times, when a person begins to relate what was generally known before; and is by some of the commentators on Shakspeare supposed to be the meaning of Haunlet.

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord.

Han. Buz, buz!

Shakspeare.

TO BUZZ. v. n. [hizzen, Teut. to growl. Junius.]

1. To hum; to make a noise like bees, flies, or wasps.

And all the chamber filled was with flies,

Which buzzed all about, and made such sound,

That they enumber'd all men's ears and eyes,

Like many swarms of bees assembled round.

Spenser, F. Q.

There be more wasps, that buzz about his nose,

Will make this sting the sooner.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

For still the flowers ready stand,

One buzzes round about,

One lights, one tastes, gets in, gets out.

Suckling

What though no bees around your cradle flew,

Nor on your lips distill'd their golden dew;

Yet have we oft discover'd, in their stead,

A swarm of drones that buzz'd about your head.

Pope.

We join, like flies and wasps, in buzzing about wit

Swift.

2. To whisper; to prate to.

There is such confusion in my pow'rs,

As after some oration fairly spoke

By a beloved prince, there doth appear

Among the buzzing multitude.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

3. To sound heavy and low.

Herewith arose a buzzing noise among them, as if it had been the rustling sound of the sea afar off.

Hayward.

TO BUZZ. v. a. To whisper; to spread secretly.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,

That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears?

I will buzz abroad such prophecies,

That Edward shall be fearful of his life.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Did you not hear

A buzzing of a separation

Between the king and Catherine? Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, silently withdrawing from the presence of the apostles, they then lift up their voices, and noised it about the city.

Bentley, Scrm. p. 220.

Buzz. † n.s. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of a bee or fly.

BY AND BY. In a short time.

He overtook Amphialus, who had been staid here, and by and by called him to fight with him. Sidney.

The noble knight alighted by and by,
From lofty steed, and bad the lady stay,
To see what end of fight should him befall that day.

Spenser, F. Q.

In the temple, by and by with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

O how this spring of love resembleth

The uncertain glory of an April day;

Which now shews all the beauty of the sun,

And by and by a cloud takes all away.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

Now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast.

Shakspeare, Othello.

By. † n. s. [from the preposition.] Something not the direct and immediate object of regard. Now usually accompanied with the preposition by; formerly, with on or upon.

In this instance, there is upon the by, to be noted, the percolation of the verjuice through the wood. Baron, Nat. Hist.

They who have saluted her [Poetry] on the by, and now and then tendered their visits, she hath done much for.

B. Jonson's Discoveries.

This wolf was forced to make bold, ever and anon, with a sheep in private, by the by. L'Estrange.

Hence we may understand, to add that upon the by, that it is not necessary. Boyle.

So, while my lov'd revenge is full and high,

I'll give you back your kingdom by the by.

Dryden, Cong. of Granada.

To By. * n. n. The same as To ABY, which see. Not now in use.

Thou, Porrex, thou this damned deed hast wrought;

Thou, Porrex, thou shalt dearly bye the same.

Sackville's Gorboduc, iv. 1.

By, in composition, implies something out of the direct way; and, consequently, some obscurity, as a by-road; something irregular, as a by-end; or something collateral, as a by-concernment; or private, as a by-law. This composition is used at pleasure, and will be understood by the examples following.

BY-COFFEEHOUSE. n. s. A coffeehouse in an obscure place.

I afterwards entered a by-coffeehouse, that stood at the upper end of a narrow lane, where I met with a nonjuror.

Aldrich, Spect.

BY-CONCERNMENT. n. s. An affair which is not the main business.

Our plays, besides the main design, have under-plots, or by-concernments, or less considerable persons and intrigues, which are carried on with the motion of the main plot. Dryden.

BY-CORNER. * n. s. [from by and corner.] A private corner.

In by-corners of

This sacred room, silver, in bags heap'd up.

Massinger's City Madam.

Neglected heaps we in by-corners lay.

Sir W. Soume's and Dryden's Art of Poetry.

BY-DEPENDENCE. n. s. An appendage; something accidentally depending on another.

These,

And your three motives to the battle, with

I know not how much more, should be demanded;

And all the other by-dependencies,

From chance to chance.

Shakspeare.

BY-DESIGN. n. s. An incidental purpose.

And if she miss the mouse-trap lines,

They'll serve for other by-designs,

And make an artist understand,

B Y

She led me into a by-lane, and told me there I should dwell.

Barton, Anat. of Mel. p. 504.

BY-LAW. † n. s. [Sax. bilage.]

By-laws are orders made in court-leets, or court-barons, by common assent, for the good of those that make them, farther than the publick law bind.

Cowel.

There was also a law to restrain the by-laws and ordinances of corporations.

Baron.

In the beginning of this record is inserted the law or institution; to which are added two by-laws, as a comment upon the general law.

Addison.

BY-MATTER. n. s. Something incidental.

I knew one, that, when he wrote a letter, would put that which was most material into the postscript, as if it had been a by-matter.

Bacon, Ess. of Cronicle.

BY-NAME. † n. s. A nick-name; name of reproach, or accidental appellation.

Whether it was the proper surname of the family, or a personal by-name given him on account of his stature, — it is neither material nor possible to determine. Louth, Life of Wyclif.

To BY-NAME. * v. a. [from the noun.] To give a nick-name. The following example had been placed by Dr. Johnson under the substantive as an illustration of it.

Robert, eldest son to the Conquerour, used short hose, and thereupon was by-named Court-hose, and shewed first the use of them to the English.

Canalen.

BY-PAST. † adj. Past; a term of the Scotch dialect; Dr. Johnson says. Gilbert Burnet, in his Vindication of the authority, &c. of the church and state of Scotland, (Glasgow, 1673,) uses it, p. 234. But it is not uncommon English; at least, in Yorkshire it is the usual word for past or ago.

But ah! who ever shunn'd by precedent

The destin'd ill she must herself assay?

Or forc'd examples, 'gainst her own content,

To put the by-pass'd perils in her way.

Wars, pestilences, and diseases, have not been fewer for these three hundred years by-past, than ever they had been since we have had records.

Cheyne.

BY-PATH. † n. s. A private or obscure path.

Heaven knows, my son,

By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,

I got this crown.

Shakspeare.

Your petitioner is a general lover, for some months last past has made it his whole business to frequent the by-paths and roads near his dwelling, for no other purpose but to hand such of the fair sex as are obliged to pass through them.

Taller, No. 219.

B Y

BY-RESPECT. n. s. Private end or view.

It may be that some upon by-respects, find somewhat friendly usage in usance, at some of their hands. Carew.

The archbishops and bi-shops, next under the king, have the government of the church: he not you the mean to prefer any to those places, for any by-respects, but only for their learning, gravity, and worth. Bacon.

Augustus, who was not altogether so good as he was wise, had some by-respects in the enacting of this law; for to do any thing for nothing, was not his maxim. Dryden.

BY-ROAD. n. s. An obscure unfrequented path.

Through slipp'ry by-roads, dark and deep,
They often climb, and often creep. Swift.

BY-ROOM. n. s. A private room within another.

I pry'thee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave the sugar. Shakspeare.

BY-SPEECH. n. s. An incidental or casual speech, not directly relating to the point.

When they come to allege what word and what law they meant, their common ordinary practice is to quote by-speeches, in some historical narration or other, and to use them as if they were written in most exact form of law. Hooker.

BY-STANDER. n. s. A looker on; one unconcerned.

She broke her feathers, and, falling to the ground, was taken up by the by-standers. L'Estrange.

The by-standers asked him, why he ran away, his bread being weight? Locke.

BY-STREET. n. s. An obscure street.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares;
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks by-streets, and saves the expensive coach. Gay.

BY-TURNING.* n. s. [from by and turn.] An obscure road.

The many by-turnings that may divert you from your way.
Sadney, Defence of Poesy.

BY-VIEW. n. s. Private self-interested purpose.

No by-views of his own shall mislead him. Atterbury.

BY-WALK. n. s. A private walk; not the main road.

He moves afterwards in by-walks, or under plots, as diversions to the main design, lest it should grow tedious; though they are still naturally joined. Dryden.

The chief avenue ought to be the most ample and noble; but there should be by-walks, to retire into sometimes, for ease and refreshment. Broome.

BY-WAY. n. s. A private and obscure way.

Night stealths are commonly driven in by-ways, and by blind fords, unused of any but such like. Spenser, on Ireland.

Other by-ways he himself betook,
Where never foot of living wight did tread. Spenser.

Wholly abstain, or wed: thy bounteous Lord
Allows thee choice of paths; take no by-ways,
But gladly welcome what he doth afford;

Not grudging that thy lust hath bounds and stays. Herbert.

A servant, or a favourite, if he be in want, and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought, but a by-way to close corruption. Bacon.

B Y Z

This is wonderfully diverting to the understanding, thus to receive a precept, as it were, through a by-way, and to apprehend an idea that draws a whole train after it. Addison.

BY-WEST. n. s. Westward; to the west of.

Whereupon grew that by-word, used by the Irish, that they dwelt by-west the law, which dwelt beyond the river of the Barrow. Davies on Ireland.

BY-WIPE.* n. s. [from by and wipe.] A secret stroke or sarcasm.

Wherefore that conceit of Legion with a by-wipe?
Milton, Annado. Rem. Defence.

BY-WORD.† n. s. [Sax. byword.] A saying; a proverb.

Bashful Henry he deposed; whose cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies. Shakspeare.

I knew a wise man, that had it for a by-word, when he saw men hasten to a conclusion, Stay a little, that we may make an end the sooner. Bacon.

We are become a by-word among the nations for our ridiculous feuds and animosities. Addison.

It will be his lot often, to look singular, in loose and licentious times, and to become a by-word and a reproach, among the men of wit and pleasure. Atterbury.

BY-ASS. n. s. See BIAS.

Every inordinate lust is a false byass upon men's understandings, which naturally draws towards atheism. Tillotson.

BYE, or BEE, come immediately from the Saxon, by, bying, i. e. a dwelling. Gibson.

BYRE.* n. s. A common word in Cumberland for a cow-house, as biar is for the same in Ireland. The Irish buar means oxen or kine, and also what relates to cattle. The Welsh and Icelandick bu mean a cow; and the Welsh buarth is a cow-yard, from bu and garth.

BY-SPEL.* n. s. [Sax. bypell.] A proverb. Coles.

BYSSL.* n. s. [Gr. βύσσος, fine linen. Lat. and

BY'SSIN. } Goth. byssus, Fr. byss, "sorte d' étoffe

BY'SSUS. } de soie," Roquefort.] The word, in none of its forms, is now used; but was formerly common.

In Scotland bussin is still used for a linen hood or cap.

He was eke so delicate
Of his clothing, that every daie

Of purple and byss he made him gait. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

I was once, though now a featherde vaile

Case my wrong'd bodie, quene-like clad;

This downe about my neck was earst a raile

Of byss imbroder'd. The Ant and Nightingale, (1604).

And it is given to hir, that she cover him with whyte bussin shynynge; for why bussin is justifyinge, of seyntis. Wicliffe, Revelat. six.

Not silk, — nor common linen; but that which the ancients called byssus; a sort of linen very pure and soft, and very dear. Bp. Patrick on Gen. xli 42.

BY'SSINE.* adj. [from byss.] Made of silk. Coles.

BY-ZANTINE. See BIZANTINE. Byzantine is the true orthography.

C, The third letter of the alphabet, has two sounds; one like k, as, call, clock, craft, coal, companion, cuneiform; the other as s, as, Cæsar, cessation, cinder. It sounds like k before a, o, u, or a consonant; and like s, before e, i, and y.

C.* The numeral letter of the Romans, which we use, to denote an hundred.

C.* A note or key in musick.

CAB. n. s. [קב.] A Hebrew measure, containing about three pints English, or the eighteenth part of the ephah.

CABA'L.† n. s. [cabale, Fr. קבלה, tradition.]

1. The secret science of the Hebrew rabbins.

The childish fancies and fables of the Jewish rabbins in their talmud and cabal. Hakewill, Apology, p. 310.

2. A body of men united in some close design. A cabal differs from a party, as few from many.

This junto, together with the Duke of Buckingham, being called the cabal, it was observed, that cabal proved a technical word, every letter in it being the first letter of those five, Clifford, Ashly, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, 1672.

She often interposed her royal authority, to break the cabals which were forming against her first ministers. Addison.

3. Intrigue; something less than conspiracy.

When each, by curs'd cabals of women, strove,
To draw th' indulgent king to partial love. Dryden.

To CABA'L. v. n. [cabaler, Fr.] To form close intrigues; to intrigue; to unite in small parties.

His mournful friends, summon'd to take their leave

Are throng'd about his couch, and sit in council:

What those caballing captains may design,

I must prevent, by being first in action. Dryden.

CABALA.* n. s. See CABAL. The secret science of the Jewish doctors; any secret science.

They [the modern rabbins] started a grammatical cabbala to serve their ambition upon. Spencer on Prodiges, p. 322.

You merchants, — who know your cabala so well to make your profit rather by selling for time, than for ready money.

Harmer, Tr. of Beza's Sermons, p. 372.

Will wholly mistake not the cabbala of his sect.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 9.

The laughter gave out, that the guones and sylphs, disguised like rillians, had shot him, as a punishment for revealing the secrets of the cabala. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

CABALIST.† n. s. [from cabal.] One skilled in the traditions of the Hebrews.

C A B

In a multitude of verses they delivered what they taught, not suffering it to be committed to writing, so imitating both cabalists, Pythagoreans, and ancient christians.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 9.

Their talmudists and cabalists, their Scribes and Pharisees.

Hakewill, Apology, p. 233.

The profoundest of the Hebrew divines, whom they now call cabbalists.

Rp. Patrick on Eccles. Pref.

Persons, which begin their inquiries where all wise men make an end; cabbalists, pretenders to revelations, to an understanding of signs and mysterious prophecies.

Spencer on Prodiges, p. 403.

Which gave occasion to that renowned cabalist, Bumbastus, of placing the body of man in due position to the four cardinal points.

Swift, Tale of a Tub.

Then Jove thus spake: with care and pain

We form'd this name, renown'd in rhyme,

Not thine, immortal Neufgermain!

Cost studious cabalists more time.

Swift.

CABALISM.* n. s. [from cabal.] A part of the science of the cabal.

Vigorous impressions of spirit, extasies, pretty allegories, parables, cabbalisms.

Spencer on Prodiges, p. 287.

CABALISTICAL.† adj. [from cabalist.] Something

CABALISTICK. } that has an occult meaning.

Spells, cabalistical words, charms, characters, images, amulets.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 219.

That less calculation in cabalistick concordance of identities in different words.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 9.

The holy Apostle well understood that cabalistical theology of the Jews.

Rp. Bull's Works, ii. 402.

The letters are caballistical, and carry more in them than it is proper for the world to be acquainted with.

Addison.

He taught him to repeat two cabalistick words, in pronouncing of which the whole secret consisted.

Spectator.

CABALISTICALLY.* adv. [from cabalistick.] In a cabalistick manner.

Rabbi Elias — from the first verse of the first chapter of Genesis, where the letter aleph is six times found, cabalistically concludes that the world shall endure just six thousand years; aleph in coputation standing for a thousand.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 123.

CABALLER.† n. s. [from cabal.] He that engages with others in close designs; an intriguer.

Factions and rich, bold at the council board,

But cautious in the field, he shunn'd the sword;

A close caballer, and tongue-valiant lord.

Dryden.

I looked on that sermon [Dr. Price's] as the publick declaration of a man much connected with literary caballers and intriguing philosophers.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

CABALLINE.† adj. [Fr. cabalin, from caballinus, Lat.]

Belonging to a horse; as, caballine aloe, or horse aloe.

Cotgrave.

ABANET. † n. s. [French.] A tavern.
Suppose this servant passing by some cabaret, or tennis-court, where his comrades were drinking or playing, should stay with them, and drink or play away his money.

They durst not so much as enter into a cabaret,
Where the Greeks were allowed to sell wine.

Smith, Mann. of the Turks, p. 65.

ABBAGE. † n. s. [cabus, Fr. probably from cab, old Fr. the head, top, or extremity. Ital. cabiuccio; Dutch cabuys; all from caput, the head. The Fr. cabuche also is the head. Nevertheless, Mr. Horne Tooke strangely thinks that cabbage may be from the Gr. καβη, food. But the form of the cabbage, resembling a head, shews caput to be the original.] A plant.

The leaves are large, fleshy, and of a glaucous colour; the flowers consist of four leaves, which are succeeded by long taper pods, containing several round acrid seeds. The species are, cabbage. Savoy cabbage. Broccoli. The cauliflower. The musk cabbage. Branching tree cabbage, from the sea-coast. Colewort. Perennial Alpine colewort. Perfoliated wild cabbage, &c. Miller.

Good worts! good cabbage.

Shakespeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

Cole, cabbage, and coleworts, are soft and demulcent, without any acidity; the jelly, or juice, of red cabbage, baked in an oven, and mixed with honey, is an excellent pectoral.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ABBAGE. * n. s. [Mr. Brand thinks that this cant word is adopted from cablish, wind-fallen or brush wood. Pop. Antiq. See Cowel in V. Cablish. A learned friend observes, that he has read of a family in Savoy, who bore for their arms a savoy cabbage proper, with the motto, "tout n'est qu'abus."] A cant word for the shreds and patches made by tailors in cutting out clothes.

For as tailors reserve their cabbage,
So squires take care of bag and baggage.

Second part of Hudibras, (spurious), 1663. p. 56.

TO CABBAGE. † v. n. [old Fr. cabusser, to grow headed as a cabbage. Cotgrave and Sherwood.] To form a head; as, the plants begin to cabbage.

TO CABBAGE. † v. a. [A cant word among tailors, Dr. Johnson says. But Mr. Bagshaw considers it also as a general word for stealing; and that it might arise from the frequent encroachments of cottagers on commons by taking in part of them for a garden to raise cabbages in.] To steal in cutting clothes.

For a tailor, instead of shreds, cabbages whole yards of cloth.

Arbuthnot.

CABBAGE TREE. n. s. A species of palm-tree.

It is very common in the Caribbee islands, where it grows to a prodigious height. The leaves of this tree envelope each other, so that those which are inclosed, being deprived of the air, are blanched; which is the part the inhabitants cut for plait for hats, and the young shoots are pickled; but whenever this part is cut out, the trees are destroyed; nor do they rise again from the old roots; so that there are very few trees left remaining near plantations.

Miller.

CABBAGE-WORM. n. s. An insect.

CABAN. † n. s. [cabane, Fr. caban, Welsh, a cottage, or booth; Span. cabanna; Ital. capanna; low Lat.

capanna; from the Gr. καπν, a stable, according to some; from the Lat. cavea, a hole or den, according to others. Our elder authors write it caban; and Huloet denominates "cabane, a dark lodging." Cowel, "She laie in a caban close," Conf. Am. b. 8.]

1. A small room.

So long in secret cabin there he held
Her captive to his sensual desire,
Till that with timely fruit her belly swell'd,
And bore a boy unto that savage sire.

Spenser, F. Q.

When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins, [in the margin, cells.] Jerem. xxxvii. 16.

2. A small chamber in a ship.

Give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready, in your cabin, for the mischance of the hour, if it so happen.

Shakespeare.

Men may not expect the use of many cabins, and safety at once, in the sea service.

Raleigh.

The chessboard, we say, is in the same place it was if it remain in the same part of the cabin, though the ship has all the while.

Locke.

3. A cottage, or small house.

Come from marble bowers, many times the gay harbour of anguish,

Unto a silly cabin, though weak, yet stronger against woes.

Sidney.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed, of flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches.

Swift.

4. A tent, or temporary habitation.

Some of green boughs their slender cabins frame,
Some lodged were Tortosa's streets about.

Fairfax.

Contenting ourselves with our smallness, let us oppose unto all this statelie masquerada, with which the world feedeth itself, the lodgings and cabins of the ancient true pastors.

Harmar, Tr. of Bezar's Sermons, p. 155.

TO CABIN. † v. n. [from the noun.] To live in a cabin.

I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave.

Shakespeare.

They two have cabin'd

In many as dangerous as poor a corner.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen

TO CABIN. † v. a. To confine in a cabin.

Fleance is 'scap'd, I had else been perfect;
As broad and gen'ral as the casing air;
But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,
To saucy doubts and fear.

Shakespeare.

They feel themselves in a state of thralldom, they imagine that their souls are coop'd and cabin'd in, unless they have some man or some body of men dependent on their mercy.

Burke, Speech at Bristol in 1780.

CABIN-BOY. * n. s. The boy who waits in the cabin on board a ship. The Welsh have the similar term, cabin-was.

CABIN-MATE. * n. s. He who occupies the same cabin with another.

His cabin-mate, I'll assure ye. Beaum. and Fl. Sea-Voyage.

CABINED. adj. [from cabin.] Belonging to a cabin.

The nice morn, on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep.

Milton, Comus.

CABINET. † n. s. [cabinet, Fr.]

1. A closet; a small room.

At both corners of the farther side, let there be two delicate, or rich cabinets, daintily paved, richly hanged, glazed with crystalline glass, and a rich cupola in the midst, and all other elegance that may be thought on.

Beau.

2. A hut or small house; a cot or tent.

Hearken awhile, from thy green cabinet,

The rural song of careful Colinet. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Dec

C A B

Their groves he sell'd; their gardens did deface;
Their arbours spoyle; their cabinets suppressè.

Spenser, F. Q. xii. 73.
Cool cabinets of fresh greene laurell boughs should shadow
Barnecliffe, Affect. Shepherd, (1594.) sign. B. 1.

3. A private room in which consultations are held.
You began in the cabinet what you afterwards practis'd in the camp. Dryden.

4. A set of boxes or drawers for curiosities; a private box.

Who sees a soul in such a body set,
Might love the treasure for the cabinet.
In vain the workman shew'd his wit,
With rings and hinges counterfeit,
To make it seem, in this disguise,
A cabinet to vulgar eyes. B. Jonson.

5. Any place in which things of value are hidden.
Thy breast hath ever been the cabinet,
Where I have lock'd my secrets. Denham.
We cannot discourse of the secret, but by describing our duty; but so much duty must needs open a cabinet of mysteries.
Taylor.

CABINET-COUNCIL. n. s.

1. A council held in a private manner, with unusual privacy and confidence.

The doctrine of Italy, and practice of France, in some kings times, hath introduced cabinet-councils. Bacon, Ess. xx.

2. A select number of privy counsellors supposed to be particularly trusted.

From the highest to the lowest it is universally read; from the cabinet-council to the nursery. Gay to Swift.

CABINET-MAKER. n. s. [from cabinet and make.]

"One that makes small nice drawers or boxes.

The root of an old whitethorn will make very fine boxes and combs; so that they would be of great use for the cabinet-makers, as well as the turners, and others. Mortimer.

To CABINET. * v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose.

This is the frame of most men's spirits in the world; to adore the casket, and condemn the jewel that is cabinetted in it.

Howyt, Serm. p. 87.

CABLE.† n. s. [cabl, Welsh; cabel, Dutch; low
Lat. caplum; Barb. Græc. Καπλόν; a rope.
V. Meursii Gloss.] The great rope of a ship to which the anchor is fastened.

What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot still? Shakspeare.

The length of the cable is the life of the ship in all extremities; and the reason is, because it makes so many bendings and waves, as the ship, riding at that length, is not able to stretch it; and nothing breaks that is not stretched. Raleigh.

The cables crack, the sailors fearful cries
Ascend; and sable night involves the skies. Dryden.

CABLED. * adj. [from cable.] Fastened with a cable.

While they, her flattering creeks and opening bowers
Cautious approaching, in Myrina's port
Cast out the cabled stone upon the strand. Dyer.

CABLET. * n. s. [Fr. cablot.] A tow-rope.

To CABOB. * v. a. [in the Persian language, robbob is roast ment. See Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 316.]
In cookery, often applied to a loin of mutton, prepared with seasoning, and roasted at a quick fire.

CABOSHED, OR CABOCHED. * adj. [from the old Fr.
caboché, the head; cabosso, i. e. caboché, Languedoc.
Dial. In our old language, written cabaged. "The bukkes heade must be cabaged [in the margin, ca-bossed] with the whole face and ears." Coucher-Book of the Hon. of Tutburye, in Blount's Anc.
Tenures, p. 169.] A term in heraldry, when the

CACHE'CTICAL.† adj. [from cachery, and Fr. ca- CACHE'CTICK. } ckeetique, Cotgrave.] Having an ill habit of body; shewing an ill habit.

Young and florid blood, rather than vapid and cachectical.

The crude chyle swims in the blood, and appears as milk in the blood, of some persons who are cachectick. Arbuthnot on Air.
Floyer.

CACHEXY.† n. s. [Fr. cachexie, from the Gr.
καχεξία, and formerly written by us cachexia, as by Burton in his Anat. of Mel.] A general word to express a great variety of symptoms; most commonly it denotes such a distemperature of the humours, as hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions, proceeding from weakness of the fibres, and an abuse of the non-naturals, and often from severe acute distempers.

The defects of digestion are the principal cause of scurvy and cachexy. Arbuthnot on Diet.
Rp. Berkeley, Siris, § 96.

CACHINNA'TION.† n. s. [cachinnatio, Lat.] A loud laughter. This substantive is in our lexicography of James the First's time.

Haste what they could, this long-legged spectre was still before them, moving her body with a vehement cachinnation, a great unmeasurable laughter.

Saturn's Invisible World discovered, (1685,) ¶ 4.

CA'CKEREL.† n. s. [Fr. caquerel.] A fish, said to make those who eat it laxative.

Fish, whose ordinary abode is in salt waters, namely porpoise, — cackrel, skate, soles, &c.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 187.

To CA'CKLE.† v. n. [kaeckelen, Dutch; from the
Lat. graculus, a jackdaw.]

1. To make a noise as a goose.
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakspeare.

Or rob the Roman geese of all their glories,
And save the state, by cackling to the tories. Pope.

2. Sometimes it is used for the noise of a hen.
The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,
This woful cackling cry with horror heard,
Of those distracted damsels in the yard. Dryden.

3. To laugh; to giggle.
Nic. grinned, cackled, and laughed, till he was like to kill himself, and fell a frisking and dancing about the room.

Arbuthnot.

CA'CKLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a goose or fowl.
The silver goose before the shining gate
There flew, and, by her cackle, sav'd the state. Dryden.

2. Idle talk; prattle.

CA'CKLER. n. s. [from cackle.]

1. A fowl that cackles.
2. A telltale; a tattler.

CACOCY'MICAL.† adj. [from cacochymy.] Having CACOCY'MICK. } the humours corrupted.

It will prove very advantageous, if only cacochymick, to clarify his blood with a laxative. Harvey on Consumptions.

If the body be cacochymical, the tumours are apt to degenerate into very venomous and malignant abscesses. Wise man.
The ancient writers distinguished putrid fevers, by putrefaction of blood, cholera, melancholy, and yellow; and this is to be explained by an effervescence happening in a particular cacochymical blood. Flayer on the Humours.

CACOCYMY. † n. s. [Fr. cacochymie, from the Gr. κακοχυμία.] A depravation of the Humours from a sound state, to what the physicians call by general name of a cacochymy. Spots, and discolorations of the skin, are signs of weak fibres; for the lateral vessels, which lie out of the road of circulation, let gross humours pass, which could not, if the vessels had their due degree of stricture.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Strong beer, a liquor that attributes the half of its ill qualities to the hops, consisting of an acrimonious fiery nature, sets the blood, upon the least cacochymy, into an orgasmus.

Harvey.

CACODEMON. * n. s. [Gr. κακός, and δαίμων.] An old substantive in our language, which Bullokar notices. Skelton uses cacodemonial, Poems, p. 164.] An evil spirit; a devil.

If the vultur pick out his right eye first, then they conclude that he is in paradise; if the left, then a cacodeamon vexes him.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 168.

Hee thee to hell for shame, and leave this world,
Thou cacodemon. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

The prince of darkness himself, and all the cacodemons, by an historical faith, believe there is a God. Howell's Lett. ii. 10.

Nor was the dog a cacodeamon,
But a true dog, that would shew tricks
For the emperor, and leap o'er sticks. Hudibras, ii. 3.

CACOTIES. * n. s. [Fr. cacothie, Cotgrave; from the Gr. κακοθήσια, which is from κακός & θήσις.] In medicine, an incurable ulcer; generally, a bad custom; a bad habit.

CACOGRAPHY. * n. s. [Gr. κακός and γραφία.] Bad spelling.

The orthography or cacography, style and manner, of the English language in the reigns of Henry V. and VI. are very remote from the mock Saxon of Rowley. Walpoliana, i. xxv.

CACOPHONY. † n. s. [Fr. cacophonie, Cotgrave; from the Gr. κακοφωνία.] A bad sound of words.

These things shall lie by, till you come to carp at them, and alter rhimes, grammar, triplets, and cacophonies of all kinds.

Pope to Swift.

To CACUMINATE. v. a. [cacumino, Lat.] To make sharp or pyramidal. Dict.

CADAVER. * n. s. [Lat.] A corpse.

Who ever came

From death to life? Who can cadavers raise?—
Thus their blasphemous tongues deride the truth.

Davies, Wit's Pilgrimage, v. 2. b.

CADAVEROUS. † adj. [Fr. cadavereux, Cotgrave; from cadaver, Lat.] Having the appearance of a dead carcase; having the qualities of a dead carcase.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, for fear of any outward pollution whose temper pollutes themselves. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The urine, long detained in the bladder, as well as glass, will grow red, fetid, cadaverous, and alkaline. The case is the same with the stagnant waters of hydropical persons.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CADDIS. † n. s. [This word is used in Erse for the variegated cloaths of the Highlanders. The Gael. cadas is cotton. Caddis properly means worsted galloon.]

1. A kind of tape or ribbon.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, caddies, cambricks, lawns; why, he sings them over, as if they were gods and goddesses. Shakspeare.

2. A kind of worm or grub found in a case of straw, He loves the may, which is bred of the codworm, or caddis; and they make the trout bold and lusty.

Walton's Angler.

CADDOW. * n. s. A chough, or jackdaw. Hulot.
A caddow, a jackdaw; Norw. In Cornwall they call the guilliam a kiddare. Ray.

CADE. † adj. [It is deduced, by Skinner, from cadeler, Fr. an old word, which signifies to breed up tenderly.] Tame; soft; delicate; as, a cade lamb, a lamb bred at home, Dr. Johnson says. Some have thought it, with less reason, adopted from the Lat. cado, to fall; meaning a dropped or fallen lamb, the dam of which dying, the lamb is brought up by hand, in the house. The cade lamb is a tame lamb in Norfolk and Suffolk; in Cumberland, a pet lamb, i. e. a lamb that is made much of.

He brought his cade lamb with him to mass.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 224.

To CADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To breed up in softness.

CADE. n. s. [cadus, Lat.] A barrel.
We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father.—Or rather of stealing a cade of herrings. Shakspeare.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells
Of close press'd husks is freed, thou must refrain
Thy thirsty soul; let none persuade to broach
Thy thick, unwholesome, undigested caedes.

Philips.

CADE-WORM. n. s. The same with caddis.

CADENCE. † } n. s. [cadence, Fr.]

CADENCY. }
1. Fall; state of sinking; decline.

Now was the sun in western cadence low
From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hours,
To fan the earth, now wak'd.

Milton.

2. The full of the voice; sometimes the general modulation of the voice.

The sliding, in the close or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetoric, which they call præter expectatum; for there is a pleasure even in being deceived.

Bacon.

There be words not made with lungs,
Sententious showers! O! let them fall,
Their cadence is rhetorical.

Crashaw.

I never heard a better [song] why, there's a cadence able to ravish the dullest Stoick.

Brewer's Lingua, (1657) iii. 7.

3. The flow of verses, or periods.

The words, the versification, and all the other elegancies of sound, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, perform exactly the same office both in dramatick and epic poetry.

Dryden.

The cadency of one line must be a rule to that of the next; as the sound of the former must slide gently into that which follows.

D.

4. The tone or sound.

Hollow rocks retain

The sound of blustering winds, which all night long
Had rom'd the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull
Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd.

Milton.

He hath a confused remembrance of words since he left the university; he hath lost half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence.

Swift.

5. In horsemanship.

Cadence is an equal measure or proportion, which a horse observes in all his motions, when he is thoroughly manag'd.

Farrier's Dict.

6. In heraldry, cadency means distinction of houses or families.

C A D

To CADENCE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To regulate by musical measure or proportion.

A certain measured, cadenced step, commonly called a dancing step, which keeps time with, and as it were beats the measure of, the musick which accompanies and directs it, is the essential characteristic which distinguishes a dance from every other sort of motion. A. Smith on the Imitative Arts.

CADENT.† adj. cadens, Lat.] Falling down.

Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks;
Turn all her mother's pains, and benefits,
To laughter and contempt. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

CADENZA.* n. s. [Ital.] The fall or modulation of the voice in singing. See CADENCE, in the second sense.

CADET.† n. s. [cadet, Fr. It was anciently capdet: "capdet, cadet, puiné, par opposition à cap-d'ostul [or capdal] l'ainé, le chef de la maison," Roquefort. The eldest of the family was also called capmas, i. e. chef de maison, chief or head of the family; and the younger capdet, from capitetum, a little head or chief. Dict. Trev.]

1. The younger brother.

Water Buck was a cadet of the house of Flanders.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 68.

These rambling letters of mine—are nought else than a legend of the cumbersome life and various fortunes of a cadet.

Howell's Lett. ii. 61.

2. The youngest brother.

Joseph was the youngest of the twelve, and David the eleventh son, and the cadet of Jesse. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. A volunteer in the army, who serves in expectation of a commission.

The royal apartments are now occupied by a college of young gentlemen cadets, educated at the king's expence in all the sciences requisite for forming an engineer.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 44.

CADREW. n. s. A straw worm. See CADDIS. Dict.

To CADGE.* v. a. [perhaps from the Teut. katsen, kelsen, to run about; and certainly the parent of cadger, which Dr. Johnson has given, and which he derives from cadge, or cage, a panier; but I know of no instance in which cadge is used directly for cage, though it has been indeed the term for a round frame of wood, on which falconers carry their hawks, when they exposed them to sale. Cadge is a common verb for carry in the north of England.]

To carry a burthen; to carry on the back. Ray.

Cadging the belly; to stuff the belly; also to bind or tie a thing. Lancashire. Grose.

CADGER.† n. s. [from cadge.] A huckster; one who brings butter, eggs, and poultry, from the country to market; a cadger to a mill, a loader. Northumb. Grose.

CADI.† n. s. A magistrate among the Turks and Persians, whose office seems nearly to answer to that of a justice of peace.

In Persia, the cadi passes sentence for a round sum of money. Ld. Lyttellon.

CADILLACK. n. s. A sort of pear.

CADUCITY.* n. s. [old Fr. caducité, frailty, weakness; from the Lat. caducus.] Frailty; tendency to fall.

but heterogeneous jumble of youth and caducity.

Boswell. Ld. Chesterfield.

Book.* adj. [old Fr. caduc, "qui a perdu ses Tenures," Roquefort; from the Lat. caducus. This is an old English adjective, which Cotgrave and Sherwood use: "caduque, frail, caduke, feeble, &c." In later times, Dr. Scot and Dr. Ash have given the word with the definition of crazy. But swetting or frail is the proper definition; and the word is so used in Scotland also.]

C A I

All their happiness was but caduke and unlasting.

CÆCIAS. n. s. [Lat.] A wind from the north east. Hickes's Lucian.

Now, from the north,

Boreas and Cæcias and Argestes loud

And Thracias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton, P. L.

CÆSAREAN. See CESARIAN.

CÆSURA.† n. s. [Lat.]

1. A figure in poetry, by which a short syllable after a complete foot is made long.

2. The natural pause or rest of the voice, which, falling upon some part of a verse, divides it into two unequal parts.

CÆSURAL.* adj. [from cæsura.] Relating to the poetical figure, or to the pause of the voice.

CÆRULE.* V. CERULE, and CERULEAN.

CAFTAN. n. s. [Persick.] A Persian or Turkish vest or garment.

CAG. n. s. A barrel or wooden vessel, containing four or five gallons. Sometimes keg.

CAGE. n. s. [cage, Fr. from cavea, Lat.]

1. An inclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.

See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure, you are not a prisoner. Shakspeare.

Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,

They lost their genius, and poetick rage;

Homers again and Pindars may be found,

And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Waller.

And parrots, imitating human tongue,

And singing birds in silver cages hung;

And ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,

Were sorted well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment, a beast, bird, or fish, by the cage, or court-yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept. Watts on the Mind.

The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.

2. A place for wild beasts, inclosed with palisadoes.

3. A prison for petty malefactors.

To CAGE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cage.

He swoln, and pamper'd with high fare,
Sits down and snorts, cag'd in his basket-chair. Donne.
And now she would the caged cloister fly.

Though yon close anchorite's contracted shrowl

Made his innarrow'd carcass seem a crowd,

Yet the cag'd votary did wider dwell

Than thou in thy large roof, and spreading cell.

Verses prefixed to Gregory's Posthuma, 1650.

The Scots—treacherously sold him [King Charles I.] to the goodly members sitting at Westminster, who after they had caged him awhile, at last set up a mock court of justice, in which they formally arraigned and condemned him.

Dr. Matt. Griffith, Sermon. 1660, p. 25.

CAIC, CAIQUE, CAICA.* n. s. [Fr. caic, caique, a galley boat.] A skiff or sloop belonging to a galley. Chambers says, that the Cossacks give the same name, caic, to a small kind of bark used in the navigation of the Black Sea.

CAIL.* n. s. See KAIL.

CAIMAN.* n. s. The American name of crocodile.

To CAJOYLE.* v. a. [cageoller, Fr. Cajeoler signifies to prate like a bird in a cage; to babble to little purpose; and is not perhaps from graculus, as Mr. Whiter in his Etymologicon Magnum affirms, but from the old Fr. gaiole, whence géolle, jaiole, and jéole, a cage or prison; Lat. cavea, cavola; low Lat. gabia, gajola. V. Roquefort, Gloss. The word now means, as Dr. Johnson says, to flatter, or coax; but this is far removed from the original sense. In the Pref. to the King's Cabinet opened, 4to. 1645, it appears that this word was introduced about that time; but it is mentioned by Heylin, eleven years after that time, as an unusual word.] To flatter; to sooth; to coax: a low word.

Thought he, 'tis no mean part of civil State-prudence, to cajole the devil.

Hudibras.

The one affronts him, while the other cajoles and pities him; takes up his quarrel, shakes his head at it, clasps his hand upon his breast, and then protests and protests.

L'Estrange.

My tongue, that wanted to cajole I try'd, but not a word would trol.

Rymer.

CAJO'LER.* n. s. [cageoleur, Fr. a great and idle prater; one that (like a jay in a cage) jangles much to no purpose. Cotgrave.] A flatterer; a wheedler.

CAJO'LERY.* n. s. [cajolerie, Fr.] Flattery.

Even if the lord-mayor and speaker mean to insinuate, that this influence is to be obtained and held by flattering the people, &c. such cajoleries perhaps would be more prudently practised than professed.

Burke, Letter to R. Burke.

CAISSON. n. s. [French.]

1. A chest of bombs or powder, laid in the enemy's way, to be fired at their approach.
2. A wooden case, in which the piers of bridges are built within the water.

CAITIFF.* n. s. [cattivo, Ital. a slave; whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; as knave in English, and fur in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue. A slave and a scoundrel are signified by the same words in many languages. So far Dr. Johnson; who also, in support of his moral assertion, ingeniously introduces a Greek line formed from two in Homer, Odys. xvii. 322. But the word is not directly from cattivo, as he asserts. It is from the old Fr. chetiff, chaitiff, wretched; caitiû, Langued. Dial. Chaitif, caitif, caiptif; Lat. captivus. Our caitif is used by Wickliffe, Isaiah, lxi. Chaucer has the substantive cattifness, Test. of L. And Wicliffe: "He that ledeeth into cattiftee, schal go into cattiftee." Apoc. xxiv.] A mean villain; a despicable knave: it often implies a mixture of wickedness and misery.

Vile cattif, vessel of dread and despair,
Unworthy of the common breathed air;
Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And dost not unto death thyself prepare?

Spens.

'Tis not impossible,

But one, the wicked'st cattif on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo.

Shakespeare.

The wretched cattif, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his story to himself.

Hudibras.

I see him, who was once the object of my contempt and scorn, a despised beggar, an ulcerous cattif, a loathsome spectacle of mortality, now, basking himself in Abraham's bosom. (The rich man's Soliloq. of Lazarus.) Killingbeck, Sermon, p. 178.

CAITIFF, or CAITIVE.* adj. [from the Fr. chetif] Base; servile.

Would raise one's mind above the starrie sky,
And cause a cattive courage to aspire.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. October.

Huge numbers lay

Of cattive wretched thralls, that wailed night and day.

Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 45.

Start not, Dervise,

Tinge not thy cattif cheek with reddening honour. Thomson.

CAIRN.* n. s. [Gael. Ir. Welsh, carn; a heap of stones.] A heap of stones, from the ancient custom of throwing stones on the dead.

A cairne is a heap of stones thrown upon the grave of one eminent for dignity of birth, or splendour of achievements.

Johnson, Journ. to the Western Islands.

CAKE.* n. s. [cuch, Teutonic; Welsh caccen, Arab. caac.]

1. A kind of delicate bread.

You must be seeing christenings! do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?

Shakespeare.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest,
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast.

Shakespeare.

The dismal day was come, the priests prepare
Their heaven'd cakes, and fillets for my hair.

Dryden.

2. Any thing of a form rather flat than high; b which it is sometimes distinguished from a loaf.

There is a cake that groweth upon the side of a dead tree, that hath gotten no name, but it is large and of a chestnut colour, and hard and pithy.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Concreted matter; coagulated matter.

Yet when I meet again those sorcerers eyes,
Their beams my hardest resolutions thaw,
As if that cakes of ice and July met.

Baum, and Fl. Martial Maid.

Then when the fleecy skies new cloath the wood,
And cakes of rustling ice come rolling down the flood. Dryden.

To CAKE. v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely, had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it. Addison on Italy.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elflocks in foul sluttish hairs.

Shakespeare.

He rins'd the wound,
And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood,
That cak'd within.

Addison.

To CAKE.* v. n. [from ] To cackle as geese. In the north of England, geese are said to cake, hens to cackle.

Ray and Grose.

CALABA'SH Tree.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided at the brim into several parts; from whose cup rises the pointal in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise, to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West Indies, where they grow naturally. The shells are used by the negroes for cups, as also for making instruments of musick, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle.

Miller.

CALAMA'NCO. n. s. [a word derived probably by some accident from calamancus, Lat. which, in the middle ages, signified a hat.] A kind of woollen stuff.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary, had a red coat, flung open to shew a calamanco waistcoat.

Tatler.

CALAMIFEROUS. * adj. [from calamus and fero, Lat.] A term applied by some to those plants, otherwise called culmiferous; also bearing a smooth stalk knotted, and generally hollow. Chambers and Ash.

CALAMINE. or Lapis Calaminaris. n. s. A kind of fossile bituminous earth, which, being mixed with copper, changes it into brass.

We must not omit those, which, though not of so much beauty, yet are of greater use, viz. loudstones, whetstones of all kinds, limestones, calamine, or lapis calaminaris. Tucker.

CALAMINT. † n. s. [Fr. calament, from the Gr. καλαμίνθη.] The name of a plant.

To CALAMISTRATE. * v. a. [old Fr. calamistrer, “kalamistrayer, friser, crispere comam,” Lacombe: low Lat. calamistrare, from calamus; probably from twisting the hair into various shapes by pipes or similar means of art. The hair-torturers of modern times may be glad of the word; especially when I add that a “calamist,” in James the First’s time, was “one having his hair turned upwards.” (See Cockeram’s Dict.) a definition that will suit those who have recently studied how, in this respect, to set their hair on end!] To curl or frizzle the hair.

Cotgrave.

Which belike makes our Venetian ladies, at this day, to counterfeit yellow hair so much; great women to calamistrate and curl it up, to adorn their heads with spangles, pearls, and made-flowers; and all courtiers to affect a pleasing grace in this kind. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 469.

CALAMISTRA’TION. * n. s. [from the verb.] The act of curling the hair. Obsolete.

Those curious needle-works, variety of colours, jewels, — embroideries, calamistrations, ointments, &c. will make, the veriest dowdy otherwise, a goddess.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 475.

CALAMITOUS. adj. [calamitosus, Lat.]

1. Miserable; involved in distress; oppressed with infelicity; unhappy; wretched; applied to men.

This is a gracious provision God Almighty hath made in favour of the necessitous and calamitous; the state of some in this life, being so extremely wretched and deplorable, if compared with others. Calamy.

2. Full of misery; distressful; applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague.

Harvey on Consumptions. 6

Strict necessity

Subdues me, and calamitous constraint!
Lest on my head both sin and punishment,
However insupportable, be all Devolv’d.

Milton.

Much rather I shall chuse
To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,
And be in that calamitous prison left.

Milton.

In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppressor would have even revived them. South.

CALAMITOUSNESS. n. s. [from calamitous.] Misery; distress.

CALAMITY. † n. s. [calamité, Fr. Cotgrave, from calamitas, Lat.]

1. Misfortune; cause of misery; distress.

Another ill accident is drought, and the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inasmuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.

2. Misery; distress.

This infinite calamity shall cause
To human life, and household peace confound.
From adverse shores in safety let her hear
Foreign calamity and distant war;
Of which, great heaven, let her no portion bear.

Milton.

Prior.

CALAMUS. n. s. [Lat.] A sort of reed, or sweet-scented wood, mentioned in Scripture with the other ingredients of the sacred perfumes. It is a knotty reed, reddish without and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies. The prophets speak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. These sweet reeds have no smell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their smell is perceived upon entering the marshes. Cabnet.

Take thou also unto thee principal spices of pure myrrh, of sweet cinnamon, and of sweet calamus. Exodus, xxx. 23.

CALA’SH. † n. s. [caleche, Fr. Dryden and Butler wrote it caleche.]

1. A small carriage of pleasure.

Sir Matthew is gone abroad, I suspect a wooing; and his caleche is gone with him. Dryden’s Lett. edit. Malone, p. 29.
Ladies hurried in caleches. Hudibras, iii. ii.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us’d to slash
The vigorous steeds that drew his lord’s calash. King.

The ancients used calashes, the figures of several of them being to be seen on ancient monuments. They are very simple, light, and drove by the traveller himself. Arabian Notes on Coins.

2. A covering to protect the head of a lady full dressed; generally made of silk, and projecting considerably over the face; being supported with hoops of cane.

CALCA’REOUS. * adj. [from the Lat. calx.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of calx or lime.

On the east side is a stratum of bones of all sizes, belonging to various animals and fowls, enched in an incrustation of a reddish calcareous rock.

Swimburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 29.

Soils consist of different combinations of two or more of the four primitive earths; namely, the calcareous, which some times call mild calx; magnesia; argil; and the silicious.

Kirwan on Manures, i. § 1.

CALCAVALLA. * n. s. A superiour kind of Lisbon wine.

CAL’CEATED. adj. [calceatus, Lat.] Shod; fitted with shoes.

CALCEDONIUS. n. s. [Lat.] A kind of precious stone. Calcedonius is of the agate kind, and of a misty grey, clouded with blue, or with purple.

Woodward on Fossils.

CAL’CEDONY. * n. s. The calcedonius.

The first foundation was a jasper; the second, a sapphire; the third, a calcedony. Rev. xxi. 19.

CAL’CINABLE. * adj. [from calcine.] That which may be calcined.

Not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. Hill on Fossils, Of Granite.

To CAL’CINATE. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath these degrees; first, it indurath, then maketh fragile, and, lastly, it doth calcinate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CALCINA’TION. n. s. [from calcine; calcination, Fr.]

Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chemical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtle particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers residences of bodies are thrown away, as soon as the distillation or calcination of the body that yielded them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by it into a subtile powder. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CALCINATORY.† n. s. [Fr. calcinaoire, Cotgrave.] A vessel used in calcination.

To CALCINE.† v. a. [calcinere, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance.

See CALCINATION.

He put up the ashes into several glasses, sealed hermetically, and written upon with the several names of the calcined herbs. Gregory, Posthuma, p. 70.

The solids seem to be earth, bound together with some oil; for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being emersed in oil, it will grow firm again. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To burn up.

It [a fever] doth not only melt him, but calcine him, reduce him to ashes and to atoms. Donne, Devotions, p. 23.

Fiery disputes that union have calin'd,
Almost as many minds as men we find. Denham.

To CALCINE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This crystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and, in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion. Newton's Opticks.

To CALCITRATE.* v. n. [Fr. calcitrer.] To kick; to spurn; to fling. Cotgrave and Cockram.

CALCOGRAPHY.* n. s. [Fr. calcographie, from χαλκός and γράφω.] The art of engraving on brass. See CHALCOGRAPHY.

The histories of refining; of making copperas; of making alum; — of caligraphy; of enamelling. Sprat, Hist. of R. Soc. p. 288.

CALCULABLE.* adj. [from calculus.] That which may be estimated or computed.

To CALCULATE. v. a. [calculus, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little stone or bead, used in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon: as, he calculates his expences.

2. To compute the situation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me, that by water I should die. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprang out of ditches? Bentley.

3. To adjust; to project for any certain end.

The reasonableness of religion clearly appears, as it tends so directly to the happiness of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotson.

To CALCULATE.† v. n. To make a computation.

Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,

Why old men, fools, and children calculate?

Why all those things change from their ordinance?

Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

CALCULATION. n. s. [from calculus.]

1. A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering.

Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation, into easy computation. Holder on Time.

2. A reckoning; the result of arithmetical operation.

If then their calculation be true; for so they reckon.

Being different from calculations of the ancients, their observations confirm not ours. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CALCULATIVE.* adj. [from calculus.] Belonging to calculation.

Persons bred in trade have in general a much better idea, by long habits of calculative dealings, of the propriety of expending in order to acquire. Burke, on the Popery Laws.

CALCULATOR.† n. s. [from calculus.] A computer; a reckoner.

Let him make an ephemerides, read Sisnet the calculator's works, Scaliger, and Petavii's his adversary.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 281.

The calculators of after chances seldom hit right.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 154.

Fortune-tellers, or pretending calculators of nativities.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 224.

Ambition is no exact calculator.

Burke, on the Duration of Parliaments.

CALCULATORY.† adj. [Fr. calculatoire.] Belonging to calculation. Sherwood.

CALCUL. n. s. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning; computation: obsolete.

The general calculus, which was made in the last perambulation, exceeded eight millions. Hovel, Local Forest.

To CALCULE.* v. a. The old English verb for calculus. Obsolete.

Full subtilly he calculated all this. Chaucer, Frodo's Tale.

CALCULOSE. } adj. [from calculus, Lat.] Stony;

CALCULOUS. } gritty.

The volatile salt of urine will coagulate spirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the stones, or calculose concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown, Vulg. Err.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculus person, that the stone is formed earlier than I have suggested. Sharp.

CALCULUS. n. s. [Latin.] The stone in the bladder.

CALDRON. n. s. [chauldron, Fr. from calidus, Lat.] A pot; a boiler; a kettle.

In the midst of all

There placed was a caldron wide and tall,

Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot.

Spenser, F. Q.

Some strip the skin, some portion out the spoil;

The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldrons boil;

Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil.

Dryden, Æn.

In the late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vast caldron, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain.

Addison.

CALECHE. The same with CALASH.

CALEDONIAN.* adj. [from Caledonia, an ancient name of Scotland.] Relating to Scotland.

Milton supposes that the naked bosoms of these three nymphs were tinged with Caledonian or Pictish wood.

Warton, Note on Milton's Silv. Sil.

CALEFACTION.† n. s. [from calefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of heating any thing.

2. The state of being heated.

Every flatuous calefaction of the brain, whence soever it arise, is apt to make a man ecstatical.

Spenser, Vanity of Vulg. Proph. p. 105.

As [if] the remembrance of calefaction can warm a man in a cold frosty night.

Moore, Philos. Poems, Pref. C. 2.

CALEFACTIVE.† adj. [calefactif, Fr. Cotgrave; from calefacio, Lat.] That which makes any thing hot; heating.

CALEFACTORY. adj. [from calefacio, Lat.] That which heats.

To CALEFY. v. n. [calefy, Lat.] To grow hot; to be heated.

Crystal will calefy unto electricity; that is, a power to attract straws, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely placed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To CALEFY.† v. a. To make warm. Bullock.

CALENDAR. n. s. [calendarium, Lat.] A register of

C A L

* the year, in which the months, and stated time, are marked, as festivals and holidays.

What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done,

That it in golden letter should be set

Among the high tides, in the calendar? Shakspeare, King Lear.

We compute from calendars differing from one another; the compute of the one anticipating that of the other. Brown.

Curs'd be the day when first I did appear;

Let it be blotted from the calendar,

Lest it pollute the month!

Dryden, Fables.

To CALENDAR. * n. s. [from the noun.] To enter in a calendar.

Often martyred names, as well as men, are calendar'd.

Whitlock, Mann of the Eng. p. 21.

To CALENDER. † v. a. [calendrer, Fr. Skinner

Some derive this word from the Lat. cylindrus, or

Gr. κύλινδρος; or rather from the low Lat. celendra, whence celendre; the whole effect of the machine lay the nap of cloth smooth.

CALENDER. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A hot press; a press in which clothiers smooth their cloth.

2. The workman who manages the machine.

I am a linen-draughts boy,

As all the world does know,

And my good friend, the calender,

Will lend his horse to go.

CALENDER, or KALENDER. * n. s. The name of a sort of dervises, spread through Turkey and Persia.

They derive the appellation from Calenderi, their founder. They are not in much esteem; and their names are said to be not correct. In Languedoc,

"calandres" mean "droles, bon companions,

goinfres."

Thirty nobles in the habit of pilgrim-calenders.

Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 70.

CALENDER. n. s. [from calender.] The person who calenders.

CALEND. n. s. [calenda, Lat. It has no singular.]

The first day of every month among the Romans.

CALESTURE. n. s. [from caleo, Lat.] A distemper peculiar to sailors, in hot climates; wherein they imagine the sea to be green fields, and will throw themselves into it.

Quincy.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,

But to be cast into a calesture.

Denham.

So, by a calesture misled,

The mariner with rapture sees,

On the smooth ocean's azure bed,

Enamell'd fields, and verdant trees;

With eager haste, he longs to rove

In that fantastick scene, and thinks

It must be some enchanted grove;

And then leaps, and down he sinks.

Swift.

CALF. † n. s. calves in the plural. [calf, n. s.; Saxon; kalf, Dutch.]

The young of a cow.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Acosta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condore, which will kill and eat up a whole calf at a time. Wilkins.

Ah! Mouselind, I love thee more by half,

Thou dost their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay.

Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple. Calmet.

Turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips.

Hosea, xiv. 2.

3. By way of contempt and reproach, applied to a stupid being; a calf; a stupid wretch.

When such a calf has got,

Thou'rt er proved a calf,

Who talk perceive it driveth not,

So silly doating brainless calf,

That understands things by the half,

Says, that the fairy left the oaf,

And took away the other.

Drayton, Nym.

4. The thick, plump, bulbous part of the leg. [calf,

Dutch; Goth. calf, kalve, the calf of the leg.

Serenius.]

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,

And all her calf into a gouty small.

Suckling.

The calf of that leg flustered.

CA'LELIKE. * adj. Resembling a calf.

So I charn'd their ears,

That, calflike, they my lowing followed. Shakspeare, Tempest.

CA'LIBER. † n. s. [calibre, Fr.] The bore; the di-meter of the barrel of a gun; the diameter of a bullet.

It is easy for an ingenious philosopher to fit the these empty tubes to the diameter of the particles of as they shall require no grosser kind of matter. Reid's Inquiry.

CA'LIBRE. * n. s. [Fr. calibre, a quality, state, or degree; as qualibre. Cotgrave.] A sort or kind.

Coming from men of their calibre, they were highly mischievous.

Burke.

CA'LICE. n. s. [calix, Lat.] A cup; a chalice. See

CHALICE.

There is a natural analogy between the ablution of the body and the purification of the soul; between eating the holy bread and drinking the sacred calice, and a participation of the body and blood of Christ.

Taylor.

CA'LICO. † n. s. [from Calecut in India.] A stuff made of cotton; sometimes stained with and beautiful colours. This was the original application of the word. The manufacture own country, of making impressions upon linen, with beauty equal to that of the Indian, has completely anglicised the word.

I wear the hoop petticoat, and am all in calicoes, when the finest are in silks.

Addison, Spectator.

CA'LICO-PRINTER. * n. s. The manufacturer of printed linens.

Suppose an ingenious gentleman should write a poem of advice to a calico-printer; do you think there is a girl in England, that would wear any thing but the taking of Lisle, or the battle of Oudenarde?

Taylor, No. 3.

CA'LID, adj. [calidus, Lat.] Hot; burning; fervent.

CA'LIDITY. † n. s. [Fr. calidité.] Heat.

Ice will dissolve in any way of heat; for it will dissolve with fire; it will colligate in water, or warm oil; nor doth it only submit into an actual heat, but not endure the potential calidity of many waters.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CA'LIDUCT. * n. s. [from calidus and ductus, Lat.]

That which conveys heat; a stove.

Coles.

Since the subterranean caliducts have been introduced,

CA'LIF. † n. s. khalifa, Arab. an heir or successor.

CA'LIPH. } A title assumed by the successors of Mahomet among the Saracens, who were vested with absolute power in affairs, both religious and civil.

Ally, son-in-law to Mahomet, for pretending to the caliphship, was by this restless caliph every where pursued.

Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 266.

CALIGATION. n. s. [from caligo, Lat. to be dark.]

Darkness; cloudiness.

Instead of a diminution, or imperfect vision, in the mole,

we affirm an abolition, or total privation; instead of caligatio, or dimness, we conclude a cecity, or blindness.

Brown.

CALIGINOUS.† adj. [Fr. caligineux, from caliginosus, Lat.] Obscure; dim; full of darkness. Their punishment [that of the rebellious angels] was their dejection and detraction into the caliginous regions of the air.

It is filled with such a thick and caliginous air, that the ground cannot be seen. Hallywell, Melampus, p. 14.
Ricaut's Greek Church, p. 65.

CALIGINOUSNESS. n. s. [from caliginous.] Darkness; obscurity.

CALIGRAPHY. n. s. [καλλιγραφία.] Beautiful writing. This language is incapable of caligraphy. Prideaux.

CALIPASH.* } n. s. Terms of cookery in dressing a
CALIPHE. } turtle; meaning as well the shell of the animal, as the flesh; and written also callapash and callapce. Modern luxury, which introduced the words, may settle the orthography.

Instead of rich sirloins we see
Green calipash and yellow calipce. Prologue to the Dramatist.

CALIPERS. See CALLIPERS.

CALIPHATE.* n. s. The government of the caliph. The former part of this period may be called the era of the grandeur and magnificence of the caliphate.

Harris, Philolog. Inq.

CALIPHSHIP.* n. s. The state and office of the caliph. See the word in the example to CALIPH. The more modern word is CALIPHATE, which see.

CALIVER.† n. s. [corrupted from caliber.] A hand-gun; a harquebuse; a musket of a particular size or bore.

Come, manage me your caliver. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
He is so hung with pikes, halberds, petronels, calivers, and muskets, that he looks like a justice of peace's hall.

B. Jonson, Epicoene.

CALIX. n. s. [Latin.] A cup; a word used in botany; as, the calix of a flower.

To CALK. v. a. [from calage, Fr. hemp, with which leaks are stopped; or from cale, Sax. the keel. Skinner.] To stop the leaks of a ship.

There is a great error committed in the manner of calking his majesty's ships; which being done with rotten oakum, is the cause they are leaky. Raleigh, Essays.

CALKER. n. s. [from calk.] The workman that stops the leaks of a ship.

The ancients of Gebal, and the wise men thereof, were in thee thy calkers; all the ships of the sea, with their mariners, were in thee to occupy thy merchandize. Ezek. xxvii. 9.

CALKIN.* n. s. A part prominent from a horse-shoe, turned up and pointed to secure the horse from falling. Ash.

CALKING. n. s. A term in painting, used where the backside is covered with black lead, or red chalk, and the lines traced through on a waxed plate, wall, or other matter, by passing lightly over each stroke of the design with a point, which leaves an impression of the colour on the plate or wall.

Chambers.

CALKING-IRON.* n. s. A kind of chissel used in calking a ship.

So here some pick out bullets from the side;
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift;
Their left-hand does the calking-iron guide,
The rattling mallet with the right they lift.

Dryden.

To CALL.† v. a. [calo, Lat. kalder, Danish; Dr. Johnson says. It is rather from the Sw. kalla; though the Gr. καλεω may be also mentioned; and the Heb. col, the voice. Lye's A-Sax. Dict. gives calb, as the participle called, ed. Manning.]

1. To name; to denominate.

And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night. Gen. i. 5.

2. To summon, or invite, to or from any place, thing, or person. It is often used with local particles; as, up, down, in, out, off.

Be not amazed, call all your senses to you, defend my reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakspeare.
Why came not the slave back to me, when I called him?

Are you call'd forth from out a world of men,
To slay the innocent? Shakspeare, Richard III.

Lodronius, that famous captain, was called up, and told by his servants, that the general was fled. Kneller, History.

Or call up him, that left half told
The story of Cambuscan bold. Milton.

Drunkness calls off the watchmen from their towers; and then evils proceed from a loose heart, and an untied tongue.

Taylor, Holy Living.

The soul makes use of her memory, to call to mind what she is to treat of. Duppa, Rules to Devotion.

Such fine employments our whole days divide,
The salutations of the morning tide
Call up the sun; those ended, to the hall
We wait the patton, hear the lawyers bawl. Dryden.

Then, by consent, abstain from further toils,
Call off the dogs, and gather up the spoils. Addison.

By the pleasures of the imagination or fancy, I mean such as arise from visible objects, when we call up their ideas into our minds by paintings, statues, or descriptions. Addison, Spect.

Why dost thou call my sorrows up afresh!
My father's name brings tears into my eyes. Addison, Cato.

I am called off from publick dissertations, by a domestick affair of great importance. Tatler.

Æschylus has a tragedy, entitled Persæ, in which the shade of Darius is called up. Broome on the Odyssey.

The passions call away the thoughts, with incessant importunity, toward the object that excited them. Watts.

3. To convoke; to summon together.

Now call we our high court of parliament. Shakspeare.
The king being informed of much that had passed that night, sent to the lord mayor to call a common council immediately. Clarendon.

4. To summon judicially.

The king had sent for the earl to return home, where he should be called to account for all his miscarriages. Clarendon.

Once a day, especially in the early years of life and study, call yourselves to an account, what new ideas, what new proposition or truth, you have gained. Watts.

5. To summon by command.

In that day did the Lord God of Hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth. Isaiah, xxii. 12.

6. In the theological sense, to inspire with ardours of piety; or to summon into the church.

Paul a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God. Rom. i. 1.

7. To invoke; to appeal to.

I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth. 2 Cor. i. 23.

8. To appeal to.

When that lord perplexed their counsels and designs, with inconvenient objections in law, the authority of the lord Manchester, who had trod the same paths, was still called upon. Clarendon.

9. To proclaim; to publish. Thus, in the north of England, it means to give notice by the publick cryer; as, I had it called, i. e. cried.

Nor ballad-singer, plac'd above the croud,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet, and loud.

Nor parish-clerk, who calls the psalm so clear. Gay.

10. To excite; to put in action; to bring into view.

He swells with angry pride,
And calls forth all his spots on every side. Cowley.

See Dionysius Homer's thoughts call up,
And call new beauties forth from ev'ry line. Pope.

11. To stigmatize with some opprobrious denomination.

Deafness unqualifies men for all company, except friends; whom I can call names, if they do not speak loud enough.

Swift to Pope.

12. To call back. To revoke; to retract.

He also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words; but will rise against the house of the evil doers, and against the help of them that work iniquity.

Isaiah, xxxi. 2.

13. To call for. To demand; to require; to claim.

Madam, his majesty doth call for you, And for your grace, and you, my noble lord.

Shakspeare.

You see, how men of merit are sought after; the under-server may sleep, when the man of action is called for.

Shakspeare.

Among them he a spirit of phrensy sent,
Who hurt their minds,

And urg'd you on, with mad desire,

To call in haste for their destroyer.

Milton, S. A.

For master, or for servant, here to call,

Was all alike, where only two were all.

Dryden, Fab.

He commits every sin that his appetite calls for, or perhaps his constitution or fortune can bear.

Rogers.

14. To call in. To resume money at interest.

Horace describes an old usurer, as so charmed with the pleasures of a country life, that, in order to make a purchase, he called in all his money; but what was the event of it? why in a very few days after, he put it out again.

Addison, Spectator.

15. To call in. To resume any thing that is in other hands.

If clipped money be called in all at once, and stopped from passing by weight, I fear it will stop trade.

Locke.

Neither is any thing more cruel and oppressive in the French government, than their practice of calling in their money, after they have sunk it very low, and then coining it anew, at a higher value.

Swift.

16. To call in. To summon together; to invite.

The heat is past, follow no farther now;

Call in the powers, good cousin, Westmoreland.

Shakspeare.

He fears my subjects loyalty,

And now must call in strangers.

Denham, Sophy.

17. To call over. To read aloud a list or muster-roll.

18. To call out. To challenge; to summon to fight.

When their sov'reign's quarrel calls 'em out,

His foes to mortal combat they defy.

Dryden, Virgil.

To CALL. v. n.

1. To stop without intention of staying. This meaning probably rose from the custom of denoting one's presence at the door by a call; but it is now used with great latitude. This sense is well enough preserved by the particles on or at; but is forgotten, and the expression made barbarous by in.

2. To make a short visit.

And, as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him, with the tribunes, to come to me.

B. Jonson.

He ordered her to call at his house once a-week, which she did for some time after, when he heard no more of her.

Temple.

That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I first of all called in at St. James's.

Addison, Spectator.

We called in at Morge, where there is an artificial port.

Addison on Italy.

3. To call on. To solicit for a favour, or a debt.

I would be loth to pay him before his day; what need I be so forward with him, that calls not on me?

Shakspeare, Henry IV.

4. To call on. To repeat solemnly.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,

And hail me thrice to everlasting rest.

Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the shores, and, calling thrice on their names, raised a cenotaph or empty monument, to their memories.

Broome on the Odyssey.

5. To call upon. To implore; to pray to.

Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.

Psalms i. 15.

CALL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address of summons, or invitation.

But death comes not at call; justice divine

Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'rs or cries.

Milton.

But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain,

The wond'ring forests soon should dance again:

The moving mountains hear the pow'ful call,

And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall.

Pope.

2. Requisition authoritative and publick.

It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence of a number of mean persons.

Hooker's Preface.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion.

Yet he at length, time to himself best known,

Rememb'ring Abraham, by some wond'rous call,

May bring them back repentant and sincere.

Milton.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse.

How justly then will impious mortals fall,

Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call?

Roscommon.

Those who to empire by dark paths aspire,

Still plead a call to what they most desire.

Dryden.

St. Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong: but yet it was he, and not they, who were mistaken.

Locke.

5. Authority; command.

Oh! Sir, I wish he were within my call, or yours.

Denham

6. A demand; a claim.

Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity, and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity, than any other motive whatsoever.

Addison, Spectator.

7. An instrument to call birds.

For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are represented.

Wilkins, Mathemat. Magick.

8. In naval language, a sort of pipe or whistle used by the boatswain and his mates to summon the sailors to their several employments.

9. Calling; vocation; employment.

Now, through the land, his cure of souls he stretch'd,

And, like a primitive apostle, preach'd:

Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;

By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all.

Dryden.

10. A nomination.

Upon the sixteenth was held the serjeants' feast at Ely place, there being nine serjeants of that call.

Bacon.

11. Call of the House. In parliamentary language; to discover what members are absent without leave of the house or just cause; and to ensure their attendance, at the discussion of some eminently important question.

CALLER.* n. s. [from call, Fr. appelleur.] He who calls.

Sherwood.

CALLET.† n. s. [It is said by Urry, Dr. Grey, and others to be derived from the Fr. calotte, a sort of cap or head-dress worn by country girls. But the calotte is not a cap confined to those maidens; and if it were, why derive so opprobrious a word from that circumstance? It is probably one of the cant words of elder days. It appears from an entry in the Stationers' Books in 1563, that there was "an order of drabs or callets. Our old poet Skelton treats them as scolds, in which sense the verb callet is used in the north of England."] A trull, or a scold.

Then Elinour sayd, ye callettes,
I shall breake your palettes,
Without ye now cease;
And so was made the drunken peace. Shelton's Poems, p. 133.
He call'd her whore: a beggar, in his drink.
Could not have had such terms upon his callet. Shakespeare.

To CALLET.* n. [from the noun. A calletting housewife, in the north of England, is a scold.
Ray.] To rail; to scold.
To hear her in her spleen
Callet like a butter-quean.

Brathwait, Care's Cure in Panedone, (1621.)

CA'LLING.† n. s. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profession; trade.

If God has interwoven such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superiour must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life? Surely, as much as christianity is nobler than a trade. South.

We find ourselves obliged to go on in honest industry in our callings. Rogers.

I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your sermon; because many of your calling have made themselves ridiculous by attempting it. Swift.

I left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd. Pope.

2. Proper station or employment.

The Gauls found the Roman senators ready to die with honour in their callings. Swift.

3. Class of persons united by the same employment or profession.

It may be a caution to all christian churches and magistrates, not to impose celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposable to have the gift of continence. Hammond.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion.

Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure.

2 Peter, i. 10.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles.

Hakewill on Providence.

5. Appellation. Not now in use.

I am more proud to be Sir Rowland's son,
His youngest son; and would not change that calling,
To be adopted heir of Frederick. Shakespeare, As you Like it.

CA'LLICO.* See CALICO.

CALL'DITY.* n. s. [Lat. calliditas.] Craftiness.

Cockeram.

CA'LLIGRAPHY.* n. s. See CALIGRAPHY.

My calligraphy, a fair hand,
Fit for a secretary.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

CALLIGRAP'PHICK.* adj. [from calligraphy.] Relating to beautiful writing.

At the end is an inscription importing the writer's name, and his excellence in the calligraphick art.

Warton, Hist. of F. P.

CA'LLIPERS.† n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, inclosed or embraced, Dr. Johnson says; but it is surely from caliber, (Fr. qualibre, the bore of a gun or any cylinder,) and indeed they are called caliber-compasses.] Compasses with bowed shanks.

Callipers measure the distance of any round, cylindrick, conical body, so that, when workmen use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CALLO'SITY. n. s. [callosité, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin, by hard labour;
and therefore, when wounds, or the edges of ulcers,
grow so, they are said to be callous. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities; in the first case, wine and spirituous liquours are useful, in the last hurtful.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

CA'LLOT.* See CALOTTE.

CALLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up.

In progress of time, the ulcers became sinuous and callous, with induration of the glands. Wigwam.

2. Hardened in mind; insensible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the conscience is grown callous.
L'Estrange.

The wretch is drench'd too deep,

His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep:

Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross,

He sins, and sees not, senseless of his loss.

Dryden.

CA'LLOUSLY.* adv. In a callous or hardened manner.

CA'LLOUSNESS. n. s. [from callous.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.

The oftner we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callousness grows upon it. Cheyne.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteemed destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness and numbness of soul. Bentley.

CA'LLOW.† adj. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology.

It is the Sax. culo, calu, bald, without hair; Lat.
calvus.] Unfledged; naked; without feathers.

Bursting with kindly rapture, forth disclos'd

Their callow young.

Milton, P. L.

Then as an eagle, who, with pious care,

Was beating widely on the wing for prey,

To her now silent airy does repair,

And finds her callow infants forc'd away.

Dryden.

How in small flights they know to try their young,

And teach the callow child her parent's song.

Prior.

CALLUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. An induration of the fibres.

2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM.† adj. [calme, Fr.; kalm, Dutch; Dr. Johnson says. Calme is derived, according to Covarruyas, from καύμα, heat, the heat being greatest when there is no wind stirring. Huet deduces it from μαλακός, soft; whence the Latins formed
malacia in the sense of calm, which is in Caesar's Commentaries. From malacia they made malacus, and by transposition of letters came calamus, then calmus, and so calme, Fr. V. Morin. Etym. Dict.
Fr. et Gr.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous; applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and, through the trembling air,

Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play

A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay

Hot Titan's beams, which then did glisten fair.

So shall the sea be calm unto us.

*Spenser,
Jonah.*

2. Undisturbed; unruffled: applied to the passions.

We are calm as peace.

Beaum. and Fl. Island Princess.

It is so ways congruous, that God should be frightening men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,
Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears.

Pope.

CALM. n. s.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion: used of the elements.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Raleigh.

Every pilot
Can steer the ship in calms; but he performs
The skillful part, can manage it in storms. Denham.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose: applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms; and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards: since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

To CALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus. Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as much exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms within our breasts. Decay of Piety.

Those passions which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,
The sacred rites and hecatombs to pay,
And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope.

CALMER. n. s. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Walton.

CALMLY. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenely.

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. Bacon.

His curled brows
Frown on the gentle stream, which calmly flows. Denham.

2. Without passions; quietly.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair;
Soft fell her words, as flew the air. Prior.

CALMNESS. n. s. [from calm.]

1. Tranquillity; serenity; not storminess.

While the steep horrid roughness of the wood
Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood. Denham.

2. Mildness; freedom from passion.

Sir, 'tis fit
You have strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence: all's in anger. Shakspeare.

I beg the grace,
You would lay by those terrors of your face;
Till calmness to your eyes you first restore,
I am afraid, and I can beg no more. Dryden.

CALMY. † adj. [from calm.] Calm; peaceful. Not used; Dr. Johnson says. It is admirably used by other poets, as well as Spenser, from whom alone Dr. Johnson has given an example; and is worthy of general use.

Will peace her halcyon nest venture to build Upon a shore with shipwrecks fill'd?
And trust that sea, where, she can hardly say,
She's has known these twenty years, one calmy day?
Cowley, Ode Restor of K. Ch. II. st. 3.

Her calmy sight
Thou think'st thy heaven, and in her smiling eyes
Read'st all the sweets of thy fool's paradise.
Baumont's Psyche, xvi. 15.

And now they nigh approached to the sted,
Where as those mermaids dwellt: it was a still
And calmy bay, on the one side sheltered
With the broad shadow of an hoary hill. Spenser, F. Q.

CALOMEL. † n. s. [calomelas, a chymical word; from καλός good and μελας black, in allusion to its colour and properties.] Mercury six times sublimed.

He repeated lenient purgatives with calomel, once in three or four days. Wiseman, Surgery.

CALORIFICK. adj. [calorificus, Lat.] That which has the quality of producing heat; heating.

A calorific principle is either excited within the heated body, or transferred to it, through any medium, from some other. Silver will grow hotter than the liquor it contains. Grew.

CALOTTE. † n. s. [French.]

1. A cap or coil, worn as an ecclesiastical ornament in France.

But we,
That tread the path of publick businesses,
Know what a tacit shrug is, or a shrink;
The wearing the callo, the politick hood,
And twenty other parerga, o' the bye,
You seculars understand not. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

2. [In architecture.] A round cavity or depresso, in form of a cap or cup, lathed and plastered, used to diminish the rise or elevation of a chapel, cabinet, alcove, &c. Harris.

CALOYERS. n. s. [καλόι.] Monks of the Greek church.

Temp'rate as caloyers in their secret cells.

CALTROP, or CALTHROP. † n. s. [Sax. coltæppe. It is called in Fr. chausse-trape, and cheval-atrappé. See Cotgrave, and Etym. Dict. 1691.]

1. An instrument made with three spikes, so that which way soever it falls to the ground, one of them points upright, to wound horses feet.

A calthrop, anciently used in war. Blount's Tenures, p. 30.
The ground about was thick sown with calthrops, which very much incommoded the sheeless Moors.

2. A plant common in France, Spain, and Italy, where it grows among corn, and is very troublesome; for the fruit being armed with strong prickles, run into the feet of the cattle. This is certainly the plant mentioned in Virgil's Georgick, under the name of tribulus. Miller.

To CALVE. † v. n. [Sax. calpian.]

1. To bring a calf: spoken of a cow.
When she has calv'd, then set the dam aside,
And for the tender progeny provide. Dryden.

2. It is used metaphorically for any act of bringing forth; and sometimes of men, by way of reproach.

I would they were barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd; not Romans: as they are not;
Though calv'd in the porch o' th' capitol. Shakspeare.

The grassy clods now calv'd, now half appear'd
The tawny lion, pawing to get free
His hinder parts. Milton, P. L.

To CALVER. \ v. a.* [In the Prompt. Parv. "to calver, as salmon or other fishes."] To cut in slices; applied to salmon, which bears the knife without breaking, which is fresh, callar, as the word still is used in the north of England; formerly, perhaps, to collar or pickle.

My foot-boy shall eat pheasants, calver'd salmons, knots, godwits, lampreys. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

Provide me then chines fried, and the salmon calver'd.
Killigrew, Parson's Wedding, 1664.

To CALVER. \ v. n.* To shrink by cutting, and not fall to pieces.

C A L

His flesh, [the grayling's,] even in his worst season, is so firm, and will so easily calver, that in plain truth he is very good meat at all times.

Cotton, Complete Angler.

CALVES-SNOOT. [antirrhinum.] A plant. Snap-dragon.

CALVILLÉ. n. s. [French.] A sort of apple.

CALVINISM. * n. s. The doctrine of Calvin; the general doctrine, says Dr. Ash, laid down in the Articles of the Church of England. Let those who may have been misled by this partial definition, or those who may still choose to avow it, read a masterly and successful. "Attempt to illustrate those Articles of the Church of England, which the Calvinists improperly consider, as Calvinistical," in a Series of Sermons preached before the University of Oxford by the Rev. Richard Lawrence, 8vo. Ox. 1805.

Most unhappy for the church of England, that so great a party in the English court should be still addicted to Calvinism.

Dean Martin's Letters, (dated 1660,) p. 68.

The delights arising from these objects were to be sacrificed to the cold and philosophical spirit of Calvinism, which furnished no pleasures to the imagination.

Warton, Note on Milton's Il Penseroso.

CALVINIST. * n. s. He who holds the doctrine of Calvin.

The Calvinist is tempted to a false security, and sloth; and the Arminian may be tempted to trust too much to himself, and too little to God.

Burnet on the Articles, Art. 17.

CALVINISTICAL. * } adj. [from Calvinist.] • Relating to Calvinism.

CALVINISTICK. }
These divines brought back with them into England those narrow principles concerning church-government and ceremonies, which they had imbibed in the petty states and republics abroad, where the Calvinistick discipline was adopted.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 458.

CALVISH. * adj. [from calf.] Like a calf.

You seem like to Waltham's calf, that went nine miles to suck a cow; and when he came thither, the cow proved a bull: perhaps in your calvish meditation you thought, for your pains in advertising the picture-mother, to have sucked her dug, as your Fulbert is reported by your Baronius to have done; but you are mistaken, for you have lighted upon a bull, which with his horns will shake in pieces the mount of your holy father's supremacy.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 141.

CALVITY. * n. s. [Fr. calvitie, from the Lat. calvities.] Baldness.

Cockeram.

To CALUMNIATE. † v. n. [calumnior, Lat. old Fr. calumpnier.] Calumniate is among the words in the Rhemish translation of the N. Test. which Fulke in his remarks on it in 1617 considers as not familiar to the vulgar reader, and therefore says: "By this word is signified violent oppression by word or deed." To accuse falsely; to charge without just ground.

Beauty, wit, high birth, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subject all
To envious and calumniating time.

Shakespeare.

He mixes truth with falsehood, and has not forgotten the rule of calumniating strongly, that something may remain.

Dryden, Fables, Preface.

Do I calumniate! thou ungrateful Vanoc! —

Perfidious prince! — Is it a calumny

To say, that Gwendolen betroth'd to Yver,

Was by her father first assur'd to Valens?

A. Phillips.

To CALUMNIATE. † v. a. To slander.

He falls again to his old trade of downright calumniating our doctrine. Bp. Patrick, Answer to the Touchstone, &c. p. 199.

One trade or art, even those that should be the most liberal, make it their business to disdain and calumniate another.

Spott.

CALUMNIATION. † n. s. [from calumniate.] That which we call calumination, is a malicious and false representation of an enemy's words or actions, to an offensive purpose.

C A M

Ayliffe.

Some faulte you must fynde, where none is, partly to keepe in use your olde custome of calumniacion.

Abp. Crammer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 388.

Inveighing sharply against these close, back-biting calumniations.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, ii. 8.

These descriptions — are here delivered dispassionately, and not thrown out in the heat of controversy and calumination.

Warton, Note on Milton's Silo. Lib.

CALUMNIATOR. † n. s. [from calumniate, and Fr. calomniateur.] A forger of accusation; a slanderer.

The foul enemy and calumniator — whose name is the slanderous accuser of his brethren.

Sir F. Sandys, State of Religion.

The devil, the father of all calumniators and liars.

Abp. Usher, Answer to a Jesuit, &c. p. 98.

When all these calumniators shall have spit their venom, it will be found that an unspotted life will be to them both a confutation and revenge.

South, Sermon, vii. 74.

He that would live clear of the envy and hatred of potent calumniators, must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink pot.

L'Estrange.

At the same time that Virgil was celebrated by Gallus, we know that Bavius and Mævius were his declared foes and calumniators.

Addison.

CALUMNIATORY. * adj. [from calumniator.] False; slanderous.

Upon admission of this passage, as you yourselves have related it in your calumniatory information.

Mountagu, Appeal to Caesar, p. 17.

CALUMNIOUS. † adj. [from calumny, and Fr. calomnieux, Cotgrave.] Slanderous; falsely reproachful.

Virtue itself escapes not calumnious strokes.

Shakespeare.

With calumnious art

Of counterfeited truth, thus held their ears.

Milton, P. L.

Other calumnious and false taxations have been discovered in my answer.

Bp. Morton, Discharge of Imputations, &c. p. 159.

Whose overspreading barbarism — hath rendered the pure and solid law of God unbeneficial to us by their calumnious dunceries.

Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, ii. 22.

CALUMNIOUSLY. * adv. [from calumnious.] In a slanderous manner.

Dealing in the case so insincerely, and calumniously, in their informations.

Mountagu, Appeal to Caesar, p. 26.

Like a flood, you calumniously overflow, in the petty preface to your six reasons.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 45.

CALUMNIOUSNESS. * n. s. [from calumnious.] Slandorous accusation.

The bitterness of my stile was plainness, not calumniousness.

Bp. Morton, Discharge of Imputations, &c. p. 227.

CALUMNY. † n. s. [old Fr. calompnie, calomnie; from calumnia, Lat.] Slander; false charge; groundless accusation: with against, or sometimes upon, before the person accused.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow,

Thou shalt not escape calumny.

Shakespeare.

It is a very hard calumny upon our soil or climate, to affirm, that so excellent a fruit will not grow here.

Tenple.

CALX. n. s. [Latin.] Any thing that is rendered reducible to powder by burning.

Gold, that is more dense than lead, resists peremptorily all the dividing power of fire; and will not be reduced into a calx, or lime, by such operation as reduces lead into it.

Digby.

CALYCLE. n. s. [calyculus, Lat.] A small bud of a plant.

Dict.

CALZOONS. * n. s. [Span. calzones; Fr. calçons, close linen breeches, Cotgrave. Dr. Ash has given, for this word, calounds.] Drawers.

The better sort of that sex here wear linnen drawers or calzoons.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 115.

CAMAIEU. † n. s. [from cāmachuia, which name is given by the orientals to the onyx, when, in preparing it, they find another colour. Fr. camaieu;

low Lat. camahutus; Ital. cammeo; and we now so pronounce the word, and write it cameo.]

1. A stone with various figures and representations of landscapes, formed by nature.

Each nicer mould a softer feature drinks,
The bold cameo speaks, the soft intaglio thinks.

Darwin, Botan. Garden, P. i.

2. [In painting.] A term used where there is only one colour, and where the lights and shadows are of gold, wrought on a golden or azure ground. This kind of work is chiefly used to represent basso-relievos.

Chambers.

CAMBER. n. s. [See CAMBERING.] A term among workmen.

Camber, a piece of timber cut arching, so as a weight considerable being set upon it, it may, in length of time, be induced to a straight.

CAMBERING. n. s. A word mentioned by Skinner, as peculiar to shipbuilders, who say, that a place is cambering, when they mean arched. [from chambrière, French.]

CAMBIST.* n. s. [Lat. cambio, to exchange: old Fr. cambi, change, cambia, to change. Jacombe.] A name, which has been given in France to those who trade in notes and bills of exchange. The word camdist, though a term of antiquity, is even now a technical word of some use among merchants, traders, and bankers.

Chambers.

CAMBLET.* See CAMELOT. It is often written camblet. So the Italians write it ciambelotto.

CAMBRICK. n. s. [from Cambray, a city in Flanders, where it was principally made.] A kind of fine linen, used for ruffles, women's sleeves and caps.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; iukles, caddises, cambricks, and lwns.

Shakspeare.

Rebecca had, by the use of a looking-glass, and by the further use of certain attire, made of cambrick, upon her head, attained to an evil art.

Tatler.

Confedrate in the cheat, they draw the throng,
And cambrick handkerchiefs reward the song.

Gay.

CAME. The preterite of To come.

Till all the pack came up, and ev'ry hound
Tore the sad huntsman, grov'ling on the ground.

Addison.

CAMEL. n. s. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries. One sort is large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pounds weight, having one bunch upon its back. Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind is leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness; which are generally used for riding by men of quality.

Camels have large solid feet, but not hard. Camels will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment.

Calmet.

Patient of thirst and toil,

Son of the desert! even the camel feels,
Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast!

Thomson.

CAMEL-BACKED.* adj. Having a back like a camel; a hunch-back.

Not that he was crook-shouldered, or camel-backed.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 215.

CAMELOPARD. n. s. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. The Italians call him giaraffa.

Trevour.

CAMELOT.* } n. s. [Fr. camelot, Ital. camelotto from CAMLET. } the Gr. καμηλωτή, the skin of the camel.

1. A kind of stuff originally made by a mixture of silk and camels hair; it is now made with wool and silk.

This habit was not of camels skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camlot, grograin, or the like; in as much as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The best camlets are made at Brussels.

Ld. Chesterfield.

2. Hair cloth.

Meantime the pastor shears their hoary beards,
And eases, of their hair, the loaden herds:
Their camelots warm in tents the soldier hold,
And shield the shiv'ring mariner from cold.

Dryden.

CAMLETTED.* adj. [from camlet.]

A piece of cloth of gold, fastened with a silken string, with a stamp of Arabick letters curiously gilded upon paper, and camletted with red and blue, agreeable to the mode of Persia.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 214.

The paper becomes sleek and camletted or veined in such sort, as it resembles agat or porphyry.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 294.

CAMERA OBSCURA.* [Latin.] An optical machine used in a darkened chamber, so that the light coming only through a double convex glass, objects exposed to daylight, and opposite to the glass, are represented inverted upon any white matter placed in the focus of the glass.

Martin.

He there saw the moral scenes of life passing in review before his mind, as exactly as the beautiful objects on his river Thames from his camera obscura.

Tygers, Hist. Rhapsody on Pope, p. 16.

That the objects of sight are all painted in the bottom of the eye, upon a membrane called the retina, pretty much in the same manner as the like objects are painted in a camera obscura, is well known to whoever has the slightest tincture of the science of optics.

A. Smith on the External Senses.

CAMERADE.* n. s. [Fr. camarade, from the Gr. καμάρα; and camera, a chamber, Lat.] One that lodges in the same chamber; a bosom companion. By corruption we now use comrade.

Camorades with him, and confederates in his design.

Rymer.

TO CAMERATE.* v. a. [Lat. camero.] To ciel or vault.

Cockram.

CAMERATED.* adj. [cameratus, Lat.] Arched; roofed slopewise.

Coles.

CAMERA'TION. n. s. [cameratio, Lat.]. A vaulting or arching.

CAMIS.* n. s. [Ital. camise; Fr. chemise; Lat. camisia; Græco-Barb. καμίσιον. V. Meursii Gloss. This is the true word, which Spenser also writes, without reason, camus. See CAMUS.] A thin transparent dress.

All in a camis light of purple silke.

Spenser, F. Q. v. v. 2.

CAMISA'DO.* n. s. [camisa, a shirt, Ital. camistum, low Lat.] An attack made by soldiers in the dark; on which occasion they put their shirts outward, to be seen by each other; also, the dress itself.

They had appointed the same night, whose darkness would have increased the fear, to have given a camisado upon the English.

Hayward.

Their armours and camisadoes: I mean the shirts that covered their armours.

Sir R. Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, (1618,) p. 83.

After midnight, we dislodged from our quarter some two thousand of our best men, all in camisadoes with scaling ladders.

Sir R. Williams, &c. p. 82.

C A M

The towne and cloyster, having intelligence, sallied out from both quarters some eight hundred footmen, with all their horsemen, to give a camisado under the conduct of Monsieur de Roveres. Sir R. Williams, &c. p. 41.

CAMISATED. adj. [from camisa, a shirt.] Dressed with the shirt outward.

CAMLET. See CAMELOT.

He had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water camlet, of an excellent azure colour. Bacon.

CAMMOCK. n. s. [camnioc, Saxon; ononis.] An herb; the same with petty whin, or restharrow.

CAMOMILE. † n. s. [Fr. camomille; Gr. χαμαίμηλον, from χαμαί “à terre, et μήλα, pommier, quasi pommier nain, parce qu’ elle s’ élève peu, et qu’ elle a une forte odeur de pomme.” V. Morin, Etym. Dict. Fr. and Gr.] A flower. It is now more usually written chamomile.

The scent-full camomile, the verdurous costmary.

Drayton, Polyth. S. 15.

CAMOUS, or CAMOYS. † adj. [camus, Fr. written camous or canus by most of our elder writers. Camm in Welsh is crooked, and cammui, to bend or crooken; and in Lancashire cam is awry. Cam, Gael. crooked.] Flat; level; depressed. It is only used of the nose.

Many Spaniards, of the race of Barbary Moors, though after frequent commixture, have not worn out the camous nose unto this day. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The most or all of these dogs were white little hounds, with crooked noses, called camuses.

Sir R. Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, (1618.) p. 49.

CAMOUSED. \ part. adj.* [from camous.] Crooked. Hulot.

And though my nose be camus'd, my lips thick,
And my chin bristled, Pan, great Pan, was such.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

CAMOUSLY. \ adv.* [from camous.] Awry.

Her nose some dele hoked,

And camously croked.

Skelton, Poems, p. 124.

CAMP. n. s. [camp, Fr. camp, Sax. from campus, Lat.] The order of tents, placed by armies when they keep the field. We use the phrase to pitch a camp, to encamp.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,

The hum of either army stilly sounds. Shakspeare.

Next, to secure our camp, and naval pow'rs,

Raise an embattel'd wall, with lofty towers. Pope.

To CAMP. † v. a. [Sax. campian, Fr. camper, to pitch a camp. Cotgrave.]

1. To encamp; to lodge in tents, for hostile purposes.

Had our great palace the capacity

To camp this host, we would all sup together. Shakspeare.

2. To camp; to pitch a camp; to fix tents.

To CAMP. \ v. n.* To camp; to pitch a camp; to fix tents.

And there Israel camped before the mount. Exod. xix. 2.

I will camp against thee round about. Isaiah, xxix. 3.

The great grasshoppers, which camp in the hedges in the cold day. Nahum, iii. 17.

I hope a philosophical dinner may be furnished with wine; otherwise, I will tell you plainly, I had rather be at a camping dinner than at your's.

Bryskett, Discourse of Civil Life, p. 94.

Ravished, like some young Cephalus or Hylas, by a troop of camping housewives in Viraginea. Milton, Apol. for Smeectym.

CAMP-FIGHT. n. s. An old word for combat.

For their trial by camp-fight, the accuser was, with the peril of his own body, to prove the accused guilty; and, by offering him his glove or gauntlet, to challenge him to this trial.

Hakewill.

C A M

CAMPA'NA. \ n. s.* [Lat.] The pasque-flower.

Campana here he crops, accounted wondrous good.

Drayton, Polyth. S. 13.

CAMPA'NULA. \ n. s.* [Lat.] The bell-flower; the flower is of one leaf, shaped like a bell, spreading at the base.

CAMPAIGN. † } n. s. [campaigne, French; campagna, Ital.] The word campaign was not used probably till after the restoration; for in the Life of Fuller in 1661 we find “during the campagnia, and while the army continued in the field, he performed the duty of his holy function.”

1. A large, open, level tract of ground, without hills.

In countries thinly inhabited, and especially in vast campains, there are few cities, besides what grow by the residence of kings. Temple.

Those grateful groves, that shade the plain,

Where Tiber rolls majestic to the main,

And fattens, as he runs, the fair campaign.

Garth.

2. The time for which any army keeps the field, without entering into quarters.

This might have hastened his march, which would have made a fair conclusion of the campaign.

Clarendon.

An Iliad rising out of one campaign.

Addison.

To CAMPAIGN. \ v. n.* [from the noun.] To serve in a campaign.

I have received the most flattering assurances from the officers, who campaigned in the late rebellion, that the military transactions have been accurately described.

Sir R. Musgrave, Hist. of the Ir. Rebellion, p. vi.

CAMPAIGNER. \ n. s.* [from campaign.] He who serves throughout a campaign; thus we say of a soldier, “he is an old campaigner.”

CAMPANOLOGY. \ n. s.* [Lat. campana, and Gr. λογος.] The art or science of ringing bells.

CAMPA'NIFORM. adj. [of campana, a bell, and forma, Lat.] A term used of flowers, which are in the shape of a bell. Harris.

CAMPA'NULATE. adj. The same with campaniform.

CAMPESTRAL. adj. [campestris, Lat.] Growing in fields.

The mountain beech is the whitest; but the campestral, or wild beech, is blacker and more durable. Mortimer.

CAMPESTRIAN. \ adj.* [old Fr. campestre, from the Lat. campestris.] Relating to the field; campestral.

CAMPHIRE-TREE. n. s. [camphora, Lat.]

There are two sorts of this tree; one is a native of the isle of Borneo, from which the best camphire is taken, which is supposed to be a natural exsudation from the tree, produced in such places where the bark of the tree has been wounded or cut. The other sort is a native of Japan, which Dr. Kempter describes to be a kind of bay, bearing black or purple berries, and from whence the inhabitants prepare their camphire, by making a simple decoction of the root and wood of this tree, cut into small pieces; but this sort of camphir is, in value, eighty or an hundred times less than the true Bornean camphire. Miller.

It is oftener used for the gum of this tree.

To CAMPHIRE. \ v. a.* [old Fr. camphrer.] To impregnate or wash with camphire.

Does every proud and self-affecting dame

Camphure her face for this?

Wash-balls perfumed, camphired, and plain, shall restore complexions to that degree, that a country foxhunter, who uses them, shall, in a week's time, look with a courtly and affable paleness! Taller, No. 101.

CAMPHORATE, or CAMPHORATED. † adj. [from camphora, Lat.] Impregnated with camphire; as, spirits of wine camphorated.

By shaking the saline and camphorate liquours together, we easily confounded them into one high-coloured liquor. Boyle.

CAMPING.* n. s. The act of playing at foot-ball in Norfolk and Suffolk, and perhaps in other counties. The Welsh camp is a game; and also the prize, given to the winner in any game of wrestling, running, and the like.

In our island, the exhibition of those manly sports in vogue among country people is called camping; and the enclosures for that purpose, where they wrestle and contend, are called camping closes. Bryant's Anc. Mythology.

CAMPION. n. s. [lychnis, Lat.] A plant.

CAMUS. n. s. [probably from camisa, Lat.] A thin dress, mentioned by Spenser.

And was yclad, for heat of scorching air,

All in a silken camus, lilly white,

Purled upon with many a folded plight. Spenser, F. Q.

CAN.* Often used for gan, or began, in our old poetry.

CAN.† n. s. [canne, Sax. the Dutch kan, is a quart.] A cup; generally a cup made of metal, or some other matter than earth.

I hate it as an unfill'd can.

Shakspeare.

For his discourse, 'twas ever

About his business, war, or mirth, to make us Relish a can of wine well. Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

One tree, the coco, affordeth stuff for housing, clothing, shipping, meat, drink, and can. Greuv.

His empty can, with ears half worn away,

Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day. Dryden.

To CAN.† v. n. [konnen, Dutch; Sax. cunnan; Iceland. kunna; Goth. kunnan; to know, and to be able. It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood; as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.]

1. To be able; to have power.

In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse; for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the second not to can. Bacon, Ess. xi.

O, there's the wonder!

Mecænas and Agrippa, who can most

With Cæsar, are his foes. Dryden.

He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond wine claret and dissoluteness inspires. Locke.

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.

If she can make me blest! She only can:

Empire and wealth, and all she brings beside,

Are but the train and trappings of her love. Dryden.

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it; it is in my power: I may do it; it is allowed me: but, in poetry, they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used; of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it; it may or can be done.

To CAN.* v. a. To know; to understand. Frequent in Chaucer.

Seemeth thy flocke thy counsell can.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb. v. 77.

CAN

And can you these tongues perfectly?

Beaum. and Fl. The Coxcombe.

CANAÏLLE.† n. s. [French.] The lowest people; the dregs; the lees; the offscouring of the people: a French term of reproach, Dr. Johnson says. The Italians have the same expression, "canaglia, gente vile e abbietta." Dict. della Crusca.

To keep the sovereign canaïlle from intruding on the retirement of the poor king of the French. Burke.

CANAKIN.* n. s. [diminutive of can.] A small cup. And let me the canakin clink. Shakspeare, Othello.

CANAÏL.† n. s. [canalis, Lat. Kanaïn, Græco-barb. an aqueduct. V. Critop. Emend. in Meursii Gloss. p. 42. old Fr. and Languedoc Dial. canal.]

1. A bason of water in a garden.

The walks and long canals reply. Pope.

2. Any tract or course of water made by art; as the canals in Holland, and the celebrated canals in this country.

The flood-compelling arch; the long canal, Through mountains piercing, and uniting seas.

Thomson, Liberty, P. v

3. [In anatomy.] A conduit or passage through which any of the juices of the body flow.

CANAL-COAL.† n. s. A fine kind of coal, dug up in England, Dr. Johnson says. The best is found near Wigan in Lancashire. As it soon lights, and emits a clear bright flame, it may be deduced perhaps from the Lat. candela, or the Welsh canteyll, a candle; or from the Sax. cene, quick, and ælan, to kindle. It is also written cannel-coal.

Even our canal-coal nearly equals the foreign jet.

Woodward.

CANALICULATED. adj. [from canaliculatus, Lat.] Channelled; made like a pipe or gutter. Dict.

CANARY.† n. s. [from the Canary islands.]

1. Wine brought from the Canaries; now called sack.

I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him. — I think I shall drink in pipe wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

2. An old dance. It is known in the Canary Isles by the name of canario.

They [the inhabitants of the Canary Islands] were and are at this day delighted with a kind of dance which they use also in Spain, and in other places; and because it took originally from thence, it is called the Canaries.

Transl. of Leo's Description of Africa, 1600.

I have seen a medicine,

That's able to breathe life into a stone;

Quicken a rock, and make you dance canary

With spritely fire and motion. Shakspeare, All's Well, &c.

To CANARY.† v. a. A cant word, Dr. Johnson says, which seems to signify to dance; to frolick. It is hardly a cant word, but adopted from the name of the dance, which Dr. Johnson dismisses with no other notice than that of "an old dance," and therefore probably guarded his definition of the verb with cant and seems.

Master, will you win your love with a French brawl? — How mean'st thou, bawling in French? — No, my com-pleat master; but to jig off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids.

CANARY-BIRD. An excellent singing bird, formerly bred in the Canaries and nowhere else, but now bred in several parts of Europe, particularly Germany.

CAN

Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, canary birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers other.

To CANCEL.† v. a. [cancellar, Fr. from cancellis notare, to mark with cross lines, somewhat resembling cancelli, or lattice-work.]

1. To cross a writing.

A chancellor is he, whose office is to look into, and peruse, the writings and answers of the emperour; to cancel what is written amisse, and to signe that which is well.

Jus Sigilli, (1673.) p. 8.

2. To efface; to obliterate in general.

Now welcome night, thou night so long expected,
That long day's labour doth at last defray,
And all my cares which cruel love collected,
Has summ'd in one, and cancelled for aye. Spenser, Epithal.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge; repeal thee home again.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

Thou whom avenging pow'rs obey,

Cancel my debt, too great to pay,

Before the sad accounting day.

Roscommon.

I pass the bills, my lords,

For cancelling your debts.

Southerne, Spartan Dame.

To CANCEL.* v. n.

In spite of our worst enemies, our kindred,

And a rash oath that cancel'd in the making,

We will pursue our loves to the last point.

Cowley.

CANCELLED.† particip. adj. [from cancel.] Cross-barred; marked with lines crossing each other.

The tail of the castor is almost bald, though the beast is very hairy; and cancelled, with some resemblance to the scales of fishes.

Grew's Museum.

CANCELLATION.† n. s. [old Fr. cancellation, "l'action de biffer les écritures ou les clauses d'un acte." Lacombe.] According to Bartolus, is an expunging or wiping out of the contents of an instrument, by two lines drawn in the manner of a cross.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

CANCER.† n. s. [cancer, Lat. cancrepe, Sax.]

1. A crabfish.

2. The sign of the summer solstice.

When now no more th' alternate Twins are fir'd,

And Cancer reddens with the solar blaze,

Short is the doubtful empire of the night.

Thomson.

3. A virulent swelling, or sore, not to be cured.

Any of these three may degenerate into a schirrus, and that schirrus into a cancer.

Wiseman.

As when a cancer on the body feeds,

And gradual death from limb to limb proceeds;

So does the chillness to each vital part,

Spread by degrees, and creeps into the heart.

Addison, Ovid.

To CANCERATE. v. n. [from cancer.] To grow cancerous; to become a cancer.

But striking his fist upon the point of a nail in the wall, his hand cancerated, he fell into a fever, and soon after died on't.

L'Estrange, Fab.

CANCERATION. n. s. [from cancerate.] A growing cancerous.

CANCEROUS. adj. [from cancer.] Having the virulence and qualities of a cancer.

How they are to be treated when they are strumous, schirrhous, or cancerous, you may see in their proper places.

Wiseman.

CANCEROUSNESS. n. s. [from cancerous.] The state of being cancerous.

CANCERIFORM.* adj. [Lat. cancriformis.] The same as cancerous; as, a canceriform tumour.

CANCERINE. adj. [from cancer.] Having the qualities of a crab.

CANDENT. adj. [candens, Lat.] Hot; in the highest degree of heat, next to fusion.

If a wire be heated only at one end, according as that end is cooled upward or downward, it respectively acquires a verticity, as we have declared in wires totally candent.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CANDICANT. adj. [candicans, Lat.] Growing white; whitish.

Dict.

CANDID.† adj. [candidus, Lat.]

1. White. This sense is certainly not common, as Dr. Johnson has observed, citing only Dryden.

The box receives all black; but, pour'd from thence,

The stones came candid forth, the hue of innocence. Dryden.

Ah! mild and gull-less dove,

Which dost the pure and candid dwellings love,

Canst thou in Albion still delight?

Still canst thou think it white?

Cowley, Ode Restor. K. Ch. II. st. 3.

2. Free from malice; not desirous to find faults; fair; open; ingenuous.

The import of the discourse will, for the most part, if there be no designed fallacy, sufficiently lead candid and intelligent readers into the true meaning of it.

Locke.

A candid judge will read each piece of wit,

With the same spirit that its author writ.

Pope.

CANDIDATE.† n. s. [candidatus, Lat. candidat, Fr. which Cotgrave nearly two hundred years since has rendered, in terms very suitable to a certain sort of

candidatus in modern times, "a flatterer, a soother, a smoother; one that ever makes it fair weather!"

The Romans denominated the suitor or competitor candidatus, from the white gown which he was obliged to wear.]

1. A competitor; one that solicits, or proposes himself for something of advancement.

So many candidates there stand for wit,

A place at court is scarce so hard to get.

Anonymous.

One would be surprised to see so many candidates for glory.

Addison, Spect. No. 256.

2. It has generally for before the thing sought.

What could thus high thy rash ambition raise?

Art thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise?

Pope.

3. Sometimes of.

Thy firstfruits of poesy were giv'n,

To make thyself a welcome inmate there,

While yet a young probationer,

And candidate of heav'n.

Dryden.

To CANDIDATE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To make a candidate; to render fit as a candidate.

The soldier is not expert, without passing through several perils.—The workman boils his silver, before it can be ready for burnishing. Without quarrelling with Rome, we can allow this purgatory, to purify and cleanse us, that we may be the better candidated for the court of Heaven and glory.

Fellham, Resolves, ii. 57.

CANDIDLY. adv. [from candid.] Fairly; without trick; without malice; ingenuously.

We have often desired, they would deal candidly with us; for if the matter stuck only there, we would propose, that every man should swear, that he is a member of the church of Ireland.

Swift.

CANDIDNESS.† n. s. [from candid.] Ingenuity; openness of temper; purity of mind.

It [conscience] presently sees the guilt of a sinful action; and, on the other side, observes the candidness of a man's very principles, and the sincerity of his intentions.

South, Sermon, ff. 454.

No man, drenched in hate, can promise to himself the candidness of an upright judge.

Fellham, Resolves, ii. 62.

To CANDIFY. v. a. [candifico, Lat.] To make white; to whiten.

Dict.

CANDLE.† n. s. [candela, Lat. candel, Sax. candwyl, Welsh, which is supposed to be derived from cann, white, and groyll, darkness, because it occasions darkness to be white. This, however, as well as the Lat. candela, refers us to the Lat. verb candeo, as the origin.]

1. A light made of wax or tallow, surrounding a wick of flax or cotton.

Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light. Shakespeare.

We see that wax candles last longer than tallow candles, because wax is more firm and hard. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

'Take a child, and, setting a candle before him, you shall find his pupil to contract very much, to exclude the light, with the brightness whereof it would otherwise be dazzled. Ray.

2. Light, or luminary.

By these bless'd candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think you would have begg'd
The ring of me, to give the worthy doctor. Shakespeare.

CA'NDLEBERRY TREE. See SWEET-WILLOW; of which it is a species.

CA'NDLEHOLDER. † n. s. [from candle and hold.] He that holds the candle, Dr. Johnson says. It may be further observed, that candles were formerly borne by servants, and not placed on the table. Not attending to this circumstance, Dr. Johnson has also distinguished the candleholder, as "him who remotely assists;" when, in fact, the word in the passage which he has cited, means literally the holder of a torch or candle, as was common at the entertainments of our ancestors; which was a fashion borrowed from the French. Some think that the proverbial scoff, You are not fit to hold a candle to him, hence took its rise.

A torch for me: let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the senseless rushes with her heels;
For I am proverb'd with a grandsire phrase,
To be a candleholder, and look on.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Juliet.

CA'NDLELIGHT. † n. s. [candellelicht, Sax.]

1. The light of a candle.

In darkness, candlelight may serve to guide men's steps, which, to use in the day, were madness. Hooker, ii. § 4.

Before the day was done, her work she sped,
And never went by candlelight to bed. Dryden, Fables.

The boding owl
Steals from her private cell by night,
And flies about the candlelight. Swift.

Such as are adapted to meals, will indifferently serve for dinners or suppers, only distinguishing between daylight and candlelight. Swift.

2. The necessary candles for use.

I shall find him coals and candlelight. Molineux to Locke.

CA'NDLEMAS. † n. s. [candelmasse, Sax.] The feast of the purification of the Blessed Virgin, which was formerly celebrated with many lights in churches.

The harvest dinners are held by every wealthy man, or, as we term it, by every good liver, between Michaelmas and Candlemas. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

There is a general tradition in most parts of Europe, that inferreth the coldness of the succeeding winter, upon shining of the sun upon Candlemas day. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Come Candlemas nine years ago she dy'd,
And now lies bury'd by the yew-tree side. Gay.

CA'NDLESTICK. † n. s. [candelsticca, Sax.]. The instrument that holds candles.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hands; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads. Shakespeare.

These countries were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlesticks did stand. Bacon.

I know a friend, who has converted the essays of a man of quality, into a kind of fringe for his candlesticks. Addison.

CA'NDLESTUFF. n. s. [from candle and stuff.] Any thing of which candles may be made; kitchen stuff; grease; tallow.

By the help of oil, and wax, and other candlestuff, the flame may continue, and the wick not burn. Bacon.

CA'NDLEWASTER. † n. s. [from candle and waste.]

One that consumes candles; a spendthrift, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Malone thinks it may mean a drunkard, onewho passes the night in drinking, and thus wastes candles; and drunk is connected with the word in the example. The word appears to have been also a contemptuous term for scholars.

Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk
With candlewasters. Shakespeare.

A whoreson book-worm, a candle-waster.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

CA'NDLES-ENDS. * n. s. [from candle and end.] A contemptuous term for scraps or fragments.

Our lives are but our marches to our graves,

How dost thou now, Lieutenant? —

Faith 'tis true, Sir,

We are but spans, and candles ends.

Beaumont and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

CA'NDOCK. n. s. A weed that grows in rivers.

Let the pond lie dry six or twelve months, both to kill the water weeds, as water-lilies, candocks, reeds, and bulrushes, and also, that as these die for want of water, so grass may grow on the pond's bottom. Walton.

CA'NDOUR. n. s. [candor, Lat.] Sweetness of temper; purity of mind; openness; ingenuousness; kindness.

He should have so much of a natural candour and sweetness, mixed with all the improvement of learning, as might convey knowledge with a sort of gentle insinuation. Watts.

To CA'NDY. v. a. [probably from candare, a word used in later times, for to whiten.]

1. To conserve with sugar, in such a manner as that the sugar lies in flakes, or breaks into spangles.

Should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candy'd tongue lick absurd pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Shakespeare.

They have in Turkey confections like to candied conserves, made of sugar and lemons, or sugar and citrons, or sugar and violets, and some other flowers, and mixture of amber. Bacon.

With candy'd plantanes, and the juicy pine,
On choicest melons and sweet grapes they diue. Waller.

2. To form into congelations.

Will the cold brook,
Candied with ice, cawdle thy morning toast,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? Shakespeare.

3. To incrust with congelations.

Since when those frosts that winter brings,
Which candy every green,
Renew us like the teeming springs,
And we thus fresh are seen. Drayton

To CA'NDY. v. n. To grow congealed.

CA'NDY Lion's foot. [catanance, Lat.] A plant.

Miller.

CA'NDY Tuft-tree. * [iberis, Lat.] A plant.

Chambers.

CANE. † n. s. [canna, Lat.; canne, Fr.; καννα and καννη, Gr.; kaneh, Heb. the river Kanah, the brook of reeds, Josh. xvii. 9.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walking staffs are made; a walking staff.

Shall I to please another wine sprung mind
Lose all mine own? God hath given me a measure
Short of his cane and body; must I find
A pain in that wherein he finds a pleasure? Herbert.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane; whereupon he took his leave, and went home. Harvey.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft, and the spongy matter or pith it contains very juicy. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth a number of long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed. There are likewise leaves springing out from each knot; but these usually fall as the cane rises. They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower, and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, though sometimes not till fifteen; at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. When ripe, they are cut, and carried in bundles to the mills, which consist of three wooden rollers, covered with steel plates. Chambers.

Thou hast bought me no sweet cane with money.

To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba?
and the sweet cane from a far country? Isaiah, xliii. 24.
And the sweet liquor on the cane bestow,
From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow. Jerem. vi. 20.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane; whence the Spanish inego de cannas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,
Of which thy age is now spectator grown;
Judge-like thou sitt'st, to praise or to arraign,
The flying skirmish of the darted cane. Blackmore.

4. A reed.

Food may be afforded to bees, by small canes or troughs conveyed into their hives. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To CANE. † v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a walking staff, or cane.

The great prince, who some years ago caned a general officer at the head of his army, disgraced him irrecoverably.

A. Smith, Theor. of Mor. Sent. i. 3.

CANICULAR. adj. [canicularis, Lat.] Belonging to the dog-star; as, canicular or dog-days.

In regard to different latitudes, unto some the canicular days are in the winter; as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for, unto them, the dog-star riseth, when the sun is about the tropick of Cancer, which season unto them is winter.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CANICULE. * n. s. Lat. canicula, the dog-star; and figuratively, the dog-days.

We are here quite burnt up. — But among all these inconveniences, the greatest I suffer is from your departure, which is more afflicting to me than the canicule.

Addison, Letter in the Student, ii. 89.

CANI'NE. † adj. [old Fr. canin, from caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.

A kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are scolds, who irritate the animals out of which they were taken, always busy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way.

Addison, Spect. No. 209.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an appetite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs, from whence it is called canine.

Arbutnot.

CANISTER. † n. s. [canister or canistrum, Lat.]

1. A small basket.

White lilies in full canisters they bring,
With all the glories of the purple spring. Dryden, Virgil.

2. A small vessel in which any thing, such as tea or coffee, is laid up. So in has Bret. canastell, a little vessel; low-Lat. canastellus.

CANKER. † n. s. [cancer, Lat. It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or, canker might come from chancre, Fr. and cancer from the Latin. The Sax. cancepe or cancpe is both the animal and the disease.]

1. A worm that preys upon, and destroys fruits.

And loathful idleness he doth detest,
The canker worm of every gentle breast. Spenser, F. Q.
That which the locust hath left, hath the canker worm eaten. Joel, i. 4.

Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bed
The eating canker dwells; so eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Shakespeare.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him. Otway.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.

There be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and bear flies.
Walton's Angler.

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes. In the north of England, canker is the word for rust.

It is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, which, in process of time, breeds a publick poverty. Bacon
Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth, in the estate that we leave them. Atterbury.

No longer live the cankers of my court;
All to your several states with speed resort;
Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast, and late carouse. Pope.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose; the dogrose.

To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.
Draw a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple, a single or canker rose. Peacham.

5. An eating or corroding humour.

I am not glad, that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaister by a contemn'd revolt,
And heal th' inveterate canker of one wound,
By making many. Shakespeare.

6. Corrosion; virulence.

As with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind with cankers. Shakespeare.

7. A disease in trees.

The calf, the wind-shock, and the knot,
The canker, scab, scurf, sap and rot. Evelyn.

8. A poisonous fungus, resembling a mushroom. Gloucestershire.

Grose.

To CANKER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow corrupt; implying something venomous and malignant.

That cunning architect of canker'd guile,
Whom princes late displeasure left in bands,
For falsed letters, and suborned wile. Spenser, F. Q.

I will lift the down from Mortimer
As high i' th' air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.

Or what the cross dire looking planet bites,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bites. Milton, Arcades.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh! friendless and forsaken virtue, fly:
The Indian air is deadly to thee grown;
Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne. Dryden, Aurengz.

Let envious jealousy, and canker'd spite
Produce my actions to severest light,
And tax my open day, or secret night. Prior.

2. To decay by some corrosive or destructive principle.
Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding; which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

To CA'NKER.† v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.

Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. St. James, v. 3.

Restore to God his due in tithe and time:

A tithe purloin'd, cankers the whole estate. Herbert.

2. To infect; to pollute.

An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, that is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and exaction. Addison, Spect. No. 469.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh, of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another; and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows. Davies, on Ireland.

It was my hint to speak,

Of the cannibals that each other eat;

The anthropophagi.

Shakespeare.

The captive cannibal, oppress with chains,

Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;

Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud;

He bids defiance to the gaping croud;

And spent at last, and speechless as he lies,

With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies. Granville.

If an eleventh commandment had been given, Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have esteemed it more difficult than all the rest? Bentley.

CA'NNIBALISM.* n. s. [from cannibal.] The character or conduct of a cannibal.

Unless a warm opposition to the spirit of levelling, to the spirit of impiety, to the spirit of proscription, plunder, murder, and cannibalism, be adverse to the true principles of freedom. Burke.

CA'NNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Randolph, State of the Morea, (1686.) p. 15.

In a war against Semiramis, they had four thousand monoxyla, or cannows, of one piece of timber. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CANON.† n. s. [Gr. νόμος; Lat. canon; Sax. canon.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all men's hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or no.

Hooker, iii. § 4.

His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by.

Hooker, Ecc. Pol. Pref.

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel,

Then what should war be?

Shakespeare.

Canons in logic are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined. Watts.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law is that law, which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod of the church.

Ayliffe.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, by the canons of Ancyra.

Stillingfleet.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture.

Ayliffe.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches. [Sax. canoniap, canons.] Canons [were] so called from their having their shares out of a common stock, canon among the Romans signifying a certain payment. Stillingfleet, Ecc. Cases, vol. ii. p. 561.

For deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government in causes ecclesiastical.

Bacon.

Swift much admires the place and air,

And longs to be a canon there.

A canon! that's a place too mean;

No, doctor, you shall be a dean,

Two dozen canons round your stall,

And you the tyrant o'er them all.

Swift.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries.

Ayliffe.

6. Canons Secular. Such as were placed in collegiate churches. Priests were called secular; and such as led a monastick life, regular. And so canons were both regular and secular.

They became the apt scholars of this canonistick exposition.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

CANONIZATION.† n. s. [canonisation, Fr.] The act of declaring any man a saint; the state of being sainted.

He that could call Heaven casamia, and whose canonization the cardinals thought fit to be talked of in his sickness.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 278.

Since the examination of Epicurus his late saintship, or canonization, tending to the undermining of all piety and godliness; our chief business hath been, by sundry instances rationally discussed, to rectify the incredulity of many.

M. Casaubon, Of Credulity, &c. p. 294.

The persuasion of Romanists is, that all such souls as deserve their canonization at Rome, go up directly to heaven, &c.

Brevint, Saul and Sammel at Endor, p. 71.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in canonizations.

Addison on Italy.

To CA'NONIZE.† v. a. [Fr. canonizer, from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster celestial honour, became suitor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry VI. for a saint.

Bacon, K. Hen. VII.

By those hymns all shall approve

Us canoniz'd for love. Donne's Poems, p. 10.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints.

Stillingfleet.

CA'NONRY. } n. s. [from canon.] An ecclesiastical
CA'NONSHIP. } benefice in some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or a stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it.

Ayliffe.

CA'NOPIED.† adj. [from canopy.] Covered with a canopy.

Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheath'd their light,
And canopied in darkness, sweetly lay,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank,
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle.

Milton, Comus.

CA'NOPY.† n. s. [Lat. canopeum, or conopeum; Gr. κωνοπιον, a net "that hangeth about beds to keep away gnats;" as Barret, in his old dictionary rightly defines this word; "sometimes," he adds, "a tent or pavilion; and sometimes for a testern to hang over a bed." It is from κωνοψ, a gnat or fly. Varro uses conopeum for a bed or couch, De Re Rust. Our translators of the Apocrypha employ the word in its original sense.] A covering of state over or round a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought unto a paled green,
And plac'd under a stately canopy,
The warlike feats of both those knights to see. Spenser, F. Q.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy,
And summon'd every restless eye to sleep. Fairfax.
She smote twice upon his neck with all her might, and she took away his head from him; and tumbled his body down from the bed, and pulled down the canopy from the pillars.

Judith, xiii. 9.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate,
With golden canopies, and beds of state. Dryden.

To CA'NOPY.† v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy. Dr. Johnson cites only Dryden, who has literally copied an elder poet.

When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
As from heat did canopy the herd.

Shakspeare, Sonnet.

And there large branches did display,
To canopy the place. Drayton, Quest of Cynthia.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,

Like friends did all embrace;

And their large branches did display,

To canopy the place.

Dryden.

CANO'ROUS. adj. [canorus, Lat.] Musical; tuneful.

Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throats, and short. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CANO'ROUSNESS.* n. s. [from canorous.] Musicalness. Scot.

CANT.† n. s. [probably from cantus, Lat. implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quaint. Or it may be from the Gael. caint, discourse; canteach, full of talk. But the old Fr. cant is "chant, action de chanter." V. Roquefort, Gloss.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds.
2. A particular form of speaking peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the cant of any profession. Dryden.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which had taken possession of the people's minds in the times of the great rebellion.

Addison, Freeholder, No. 37.

Astrologers, with an old paltry cant, and a few pot-hooks for planets, to amuse the vulgar, have too long been suffered to abuse the world.

Swift, Predictions for the Year 1701.

A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer, for a most judicious and formidable critick.

Addison, Spectator, No. 291.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, in formal and affected terms.

Of promise prodigal, while power you want,

And preaching in the self-denying cant. Dryden, Aurengz.

He who should be present at all their long cant, would shew a greater ability in watching, than ever they could pretend to in praying, if he could forbear sleeping, having so strong a provocation to it, and so fair an excuse for it. South, Sermon, ii. 160.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of some late authors, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the most ruinous corruption in any language. Swift.

5. Auction. [It might be supposed to be from the old Fr. cant, combien; Lat. quantum, V. Roquefort, Gloss. But the Italian incanto is literally an auktion; "vendere al' incanto," being as common as our phrase to be sold by auction; though it means that the sale is proclaimed by sound of trumpet. See Vocab. Della Crusca, in V. Incantare.]

Numbers of these tenants, or their descendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives. Swift.

CANT.* n. s. [kant, Dutch. See CANTLE.] An angle; a corner; a niche. In Kent, the corner of a field is termed a cant: in Pembrokeshire, a piece of cheese is so called.

The first and principal person in the temple was Peace; she was placed aloft in a cant. B. Jonson, Coron. Entertainment.

To CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions, or in any kind of formal, affected language, or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant about materia and forma; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or sound, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry. Glanville, Scorp. Scient.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristical note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party.

Bp. Sanderson.

The busy, subtle serpents of the law,
Did first my mind from true obedience draw;
While I did limits to the king prescribe,
And took for oracles that canting tribe.

Roscommon.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,
Like canting rascals, how the wars will go.

Dryden, Jun.

To CANT.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sell by auction.

Is it not the general method of landlords to wait the expiration of a lease, and then cant their land to the highest bidder?

Swift, against the Power of Bishops.

2. To bid a price at an auction.

When two monks were outvying each other in canting the price of an abbey, he [William Rufus] observed a third at some distance, who said never a word: the king demanded why he would not offer; the monk said, he was poor; and besides, would give nothing if he were ever so rich: the king replied, then you are the fittest person to have it, and immediately gave it him.

Swift, Hist. of Eng. Reign of W. II.

CANTATA.* n. s. [Ital.] A song, intermixed with recitatives and airs.

CANTE'EN.* n. s. In military language, a vessel of tin, [and sometimes of wood,] in the form of square bottles, used for carrying liquours to supply soldiers in camp.

Cockeram.

CA'NTER.* n. s. [from cant.] A term of reproach for hypocrites, who talk formally of religion, without obeying it; from the vagrants who cant.

A rogue,

A very canter, sir, one that maunds

Upon the pail.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

Oh 'twill be

An excellent age of crotchets, and of canters.

Braun, and Fl. The Coronation.

CA'NTER.* n. s. An abbreviation of Canterbury. See CANTERBURY GALLOP; in the definition of which, Dr. Johnson uses this substantive; and he is confirmed in the derivation by a passage in Sampson's Fair Maid of Clifton, (1633) where he, who personates the hobby horse, speaks of his smooth ambles and Canterbury paces.

To CA'NTER.* v. n. [from the noun.] To gallop easily or gently. Now, a common expression; as, the horse canters in a fine style.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELFLOWER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP. [In horsemanship.] The hand gallop of an ambling horse, commonly called a canter; said to be derived from the pilgrims riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses.

CANTERBURY TALE.* n. s. An expression denoting any fabulous or overwrought narrative, adopted from the Canterbury Tales of Chaucer.

CANTHARIDES.* n. s. plural. [Fr. cantharid; Gr. κάνθαρις, dimin. of κάνθαρος, a beetle or chafer.] Spanish flies; used to raise blisters.

The flies, cantharides, are bred of a worm, or caterpillar, but peculiar to certain fruit trees; as are the fig tree, the pine tree, and the wild brier; all which bear sweet fruit, and fruit that hath a kind of secret biting or sharpness: for the fig hath a milk in it that is sweet and corrosive; the pine apple hath a kernel that is strong and abstersive.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CANTHUS.* n. s. [Latin.] The corner of the eye. The internal is called the greater, the external the lesser canthus.

CA'NTINGLY.* adv. [from cant.] In a canting manner.

I dread nothing more than the false zeal of my friends, in a suffering hour, as he [Whitfield] cantingly expresses it.

Trial of Mr. Whitfield's Spirit, (1740,) p. 40.

CA'NTION.* n. s. [cantio, Lat.] Song, verses. Not now in use.

In the eighth eclogue the same person was brought in singing a cantion of Colin's making.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Gloss.

CANTLE.* n. s. [kant, Dut. a corner; eschantillon, Fr. a piece. So far Dr. Johnson. The Teut. or Dutch kanteel, from kant, must be also noticed; and the Fr. chantel, a fragment, a piece of any thing; from the Lat. quantulum. The commentators on the passage in Shakspeare, which Dr. Johnson has cited as the only instance of this word, have derived cantle from the Fr. canton, and the Ital. canto, a corner. Cantle is one of our oldest words; signifying not merely a corner, but a portion of any thing; as a cantle or cantel of bread, cheese, and the like. Chaucer has "no part ne cantel of a thing." A fragment; a portion; a corner or piece of any thing.

She brought her fees,

A cantel of Essex cheese.

Skelton's Poems, p. 135.

Not these cantels and morsels of scripture, warbled—to give pleasure unto the ears.

Harmar, Tr. of Br. za's Sermon, p. 267.

See how this river comes, me cranking in,

And cuts me from the best of all my land,

A huge halfmoon, a monstrous cantle out.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Do you remember

The cantell of immortal cheese ye carried with ye?

Beaumont, and Fl. Queen of Corinth.

His robe of state is a scarlet mantle,
With eleven king's beards bordered about,
And there is room left yet in a kantle,
For thine to stand, to make the twelfth out.

To CA'NTLE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in pieces; to divide.

That this vast globe terrestrial should be cantled.

Decker's Whore of Babylon, 1607.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,

That must be cantled, and the judge go snack.

Dryden, Jun.

CA'NTLET.* n. s. [from cantle.] A piece; a fragment.

Nor shield, nor armour can their force oppose;

Huge cantlets of his buckler strew the ground,

And no defence in his hor'd arms is found.

Dryden.

CA'NTO.* n. s. [Ital.]
